—Rev. Lawrence Little has been elected Secretary of the Young People's Work of the M. P. Church: This robs Grace church of its associate pastor, and the members of the church as well as Pastor Spahr were reluctant to give him up, but all recognized the fitness of the appointment. Bro. Little will continue to live in this city for a time. Dr. Sensmith resigned on account of the illness of his wife.

—At the union young people's meeting in the annex of the Stephens Tabernacle last Sunday evening, a little boy of seven or eight arose in the testimony period and said, "I am thankful that my pony did not kick any further, for if he had kicked an inch farther he would have hit me in the forehead."

—Brother Suits and the Tabernacle people are to observe memorial day next Sunday. There will be a sermon by President Dixon and after-dinner talks by Bro. J. Norman Wil's and others.

—At a meeting of the Board of Education held on Tuesday in Greensboro Bros. George Penny and J. M. Millikan were elected financial agents for High Point College. This is an important work put into their hands and we wish for them good success in it. They are both energetic workers and know enough about money to recognize a dollar when they see it.

—Is there something in a name after all? A man named Byrd has flown across the north pole. He is an American aviator and Americans are proud again.

—The strike in England which was so serious has largely terminated. Only the miners are still holding out.

—Dr. Dixon was called this week to conduct a funeral, that of Mrs. Sarah Stout, who was grandmother of Ferdie Stout of Grace Church.

—The Board of Home Missions is in annual session at High Point College this week. About fifty persons are reported in attendance.

—France, at last, has made an agreement to pay her four-billion-dollar war debt to the United States.

Trust that man in nothing who has not a conscience in everything.—Sterne.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for May 23: How Is Christ Changing China? Isa. 61:1-3. (Missionary Meeting.)

TWENTY HEROES HONORED.

Carnegie Hero Medals were awarded recently to twenty heroes who risked or gave their lives to save others. Five of the twenty lost their lives. Their dependents were granted pensions amounting in all to nearly $4,000 a year.

One of the heroes was a sixteen-year old boy —Stanley C. Delanoy, of Weehawken, N. J. Stanley lost his life last July while trying to save a girl from drowning.

THE SUREST WAY.

The common daily tasks of life
Seem poor and mean and small
And oft we scorn them to respond
To some alluring call.
The tasks that lie so close at hand
Grow irksome to the soul,
And are forsaken for some dream—
Some visionary goal.
And yet the surest road to fame,
To deeds that stir and thrill,
Is doing the tasks that lie at hand
With all our strength and will.

FOR GOD TO DECIDE.

There are those who say, and that continually, that life is too short. That depends. What are you doing with it? For some things it is; for others it is not. In any case, it is not for us to make a declaration on that point. God knows whether it is, or is not, too short. And it is safe to leave that matter with him.—Christian Conservator.

SUCCESS.

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty, or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory a benediction.—Stanley.

SOMETIMES.

Sometimes I long for the lazy isles,
Ten thousand miles from home,
Where the warm sun shines and the blue sky smiles,
And the milk-white breakers foam—
A coral island, bravely set
In the midst of the southern sea,
Away from the hurry and noise and fret
Forever surrounding me.

For I tire of labor and care and fight,
And I weary of pain and scheme,
And ever and ever my thoughts take flight
To the island of my dream.
And I fancy drowsing the whole day long
In a hammock that gently swings—
Away from the clamorous toiling throng,
Away from the swirl of things.

And yet I know in a little while,
When the first glad hours were spent,
I'd sicken and tire of my lazy isle
And cease to be content.
I'd hear the call of the world's great game—
The battle with gold and men—
And I'd sail once more, with a heart of flame, Back to the game again.

—Berton Braley, Good Health.

THE MASTER'S PLEA.

By Archibald Rutledge.

I have no hands save your own hands
To lift the burdens, loose the bands
Of pain; to bear my banner on.
Only by you my work is done.
I have no feet save your own feet
To carry far my message sweet:
If they should fail, to every coast
My steps are halt, my way is lost.
I have no voice save your own voice;
Through it alone shall hearts rejoice
To know my tidings. If your tongue
Be silent, all my truth's unsung.
I have no heart save your own heart
To beat for me; to act love's part.
O child, though I am throned above,
I have no power save your love.
Your feet alone my race can run;
By your own hands my deeds are done.
Your voice must speak, or mine is still;
My heart's great task yours must fulfill.

THE SEVENTH SLEEPER.

By Samuel Scoville, Jr.

There are seven animals which sleep through our winters safe from hunger and cold and danger. I once rhymed their names for four children of my acquaintance in the following bit of free verse. (I call it free because I do not get anything extra for it.)

The Bat and the Bear, they never care
What winter winds may blow;
The Jumping-Mouse in his cozy house
Is safe from ice and snow.
The Chipmunk and the Woodchuck,
The Skunk, who's slow but sure,
The ringed Raccoon, who hates the moon,
Have found for cold the cure.

All of these Sleepers are interesting, most of them friendly, but the most useful of them all is "Sikak," as those wood Indians, the Crees, have named our American skunk.

He is the last one of the Sleepers to go to bed in winter and the first to come out in the spring. Long after the black bear has holed up in some jug-shaped hollow dug in a sloping bank lined with leaves and masked with brush; after the bat has hung himself upside-down to sleep until spring; when the raccoon is fast asleep in his tree top, and the woodchuck and the chipmunk in their warm burrows underground; even after the jumping-mouse has curled up in a ball wrapped around with his long silky tail well below the frost-line, the tracks of the Seventh Sleeper can still be seen in the early snow.

They are zigzag and near apart with the furrow of his dragging feet between each print, for Sikak never hastens. His motto is, "Don't hurry; others will." Sometimes, to be sure, he gallops, but very lumberingly. Then his tracks show four abreast in a diagonal line. He believes that late to bed and early to rise makes a skunk healthy, wealthy, and wise. During the coldest part of the winter he goes underground to sleep fitfully, ready to come out any warm day. When he does go to bed he digs a shallow burrow with two entrances and lines it with grass or else calmly appropriates a woodchunk's burrow.

Like the bear the skunk walks flat-footed. His naked flat soles are wrinkled crossways and the hind-feet show no clawmarks in the snow, but the fore-paws have claws which make him one of the best diggers among all the wild folk, surpassed only by the badger and the woodchuck.

Sikak is a beautiful study in black and white stripe running from between his eyes to his nose, stripes of white along his sides, and a big white ruff. About the size of a house cat and weighing between eight and ten pounds he is over one-third tail, this adornment accounting for fully ten of his twenty-eight inches of length. Said tail is nearly as wide as it is long, with a white tip, and is only surpassed in its splendor by the magnificent tail of the giant ant-eater of South America. Wise wild-folk when they see that white tuft standing straight up remove themselves elsewhere with exceeding rapidity. As for the unwise—they soon wish they had.

The skunk is a living example of the axiom that it pays to specialize. He cannot swim like the otter, nor climb like the marten, nor run like the fisher. He has neither the strength of the wolverine nor the fierceness of the weasel. Yet he has outlived all these members of his family by developing a little specialty of his own which bids fair to save him from the attacks of civilization for many years to come. He discovered the gas-attack before the Boche. His weapon is a movable duct through which he can throw a stream of liquid musk with deadly accuracy from five to ten feet. It is phosphorescent by night and not only has a devastating odor which nauseates humans but produces a heavy gas which like mustard or ammonia gas, will choke and strangle any animal breathing its full force.

The liquid musk is a clear, golden-yellow fluid full of little bubbles of the gas, and curiously enough is almost identical in appearance with the venom of the rattlesnake. As to its odor, it has been described feelingly as a mixture of perfume-musk, essence of garlic, burning sulphur, and sewer-gas, raised to the thousandth power. Its effect is very much like that produced by the fumes of ammonia, another animal product, or the mustard-gas of modern warfare. It may cause blindness, convulsions, and such constriction and congestion of the breathing passages as even to bring about death.

Some individuals and animals, however, seem to be more or less immune to the effects of this secretion. I remember once attending by invitation a possum hunt conducted by a number of noted possumists of color. We were accompanied by a bevy of miscellaneous dogs. The possums were generally found wandering here and there among the thickets, or located in low persimmon trees. Every now and then one of the dogs would bring to bay a strolling skunk. As the skins had a considerable market value, these skunks were regarded as the special prizes of the chase. The hunters despatched them by a quick blow across the back which broke the spine. Such a blow paralyzed the muscles and effectually prevented any further artillery practise on the part of the skunk which received it. Before it could be delivered, both the hunter and the dog were usually exposed to an unerring barrage, which, however, seemed to cause them no especial inconvenience. Before long every hunter except myself had one or more skunks tucked away in his pockets.

It was a long, strong night. Before it was over I was in some doubt as to whether I had been attending a possum hunt or had taken part in a skunk chase. My family had no doubt whatever on the subject when I reached home the next morning. I was earnestly invited to tarry in the wilderness until such time as I could obtain a complete change of raiment. Thereafter I tried to give my hunting clothes away to the worthy poor. Said poor, however, would have none of them, and they repose in a lone grave in a Philadelphia backyard even unto this day.

Although never too proud to fight, Sikak is always a sportsman and gives an opponent three warnings. If he meets you in the woods or fields he will not turn out, but will stamp on the ground with his forepaws like a little horse. That is danger-signal number one. If you keep on coming he will shake his head sadly as if saying to himself, "There's going to be trouble, but it's not my fault," and will thereupon hoist aloft his resplendent tail. That is signal number two. If rushing on your doom you still advance, the drooping white tip of said tail, will be slowly erected. That is the third and last warning. If then you stand still or slowly draw back all will yet be well. One step forward will cost one suit of clothes.—Selected.

IF YOU WISH THEM, WRITE.

We still have some of the large illustrated posters which the Board sent to the Sunday schools that ordered the Children's Day sup- plies last year, and will gladly send them to any of our schools that desire to have them.

They are the best the Board has published one being devoted to the work in Japan, and the other to the work in China and India, and they have pictures of all our denomination's missionaries in the three countries, besides pictures of native workers, and groups, build- ings, etc., depicting much of the work carried on abroad.

The Board is not publishing any posters this year, but so long as these last, which were sent out last year, any of our schools can have a set free of cost, of course. To hang them on the wall of the school or church will convey much information to our people, and this is needed to awaken more interest, and increase the offerings of our people on Chil- dren's Day. Send to me at Berwyn, Md.

The orders for the Children's Day supplies are reaching us by every mail, and they will number more than four hundred today, May 6th, but many more schools, of course, will order, but we are very anxious to have the orders in as soon as possible, because it will give the schools more time in which to make ample preparation for holding the service and for putting into effect a plan to raise the largest Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions in the history of the Board.

The beautiful collection envelopes, showing a representative of Japan, China and India ought to be distributed early, and the schol- ars urged to secure as much money as possi- ble, because the Board is in dire need of funds to pay notes which will fall due shortly, and to carry on the work abroad, recently reduced for lack of funds.

In this connection remember that the two beautifully embroidered banners, made for us in Japan, will be awarded again this year: one to the Sunday school sending in the larg- est offering for Foreign Missions, and the other to the school sending in the largest off- ering in proportion to membership.

Please be sure to state, when you send your Children's Day offering to your annual con- ference treasurer, that it is for Foreign Mis- sions, and give the membership of your school, or schools individually, as it will be very difficult to properly award the second banner without this necessary information.

If you fail to inform your annual confer- ence treasurer that it is the Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions, as required by the plan adopted by the General Conference the Union Board may not receive your schools offering for its work, and that would be most unfortunate.

It is, therefore, very important that you give this information as requested.

The fiscal year of the Union Board of For- eign Missionary Administration closed April 30th, and the annual meeting of the Union Board will be held in Pittsburgh, Penn., Wed- nesday, May 19, 1926, and the annual report will be printed later for distribution.

The recall of the Assembly, and the meet- ing of all the Boards of the church at Atlan- tic City, N. J., on the above date, caused the Boards to change their meeting place to Pitts- burgh, but did not change the date, except in the case of the Board of Young People's Work which was compelled to meet earlier.

We must earnestly appeal for your hearty cooperation to insure the largest possible use of the Children's Day supplies, and to raise the largest possible offering for Foreign Mis- sions.

Fred C. Klein.

GOOD NEWS FROM THE EASTER SER- VICE.

I call upon the entire denomination to re- joice with me and the Board of Home Mis- sions in the splendid results of our Easter Service. We are often inclined to complain that the denomination is not responding to our calls for funds to carry on the work of the church but I am glad to sound the opti- mistic note and to commend our churches for the fine response given to our appeal.

While I am not prepared to make a full re- port of the Easter offerings last month, as the returns are not all in, as far as I have learn- ed, we have great reason for encouragement. We sent out 8 4 orders, I think the largest number ever used in one year, and there is every assurance that the offering will exceed all previous years. This is only in harmony with the increased interest on the part of our denomination in this service, as the records will show.

The books of Mr. H. C. Staley, the General Conference Treasurer, which close each year May the first, show that May 1, 1922 the of- fering amounted to $12,615.10; May 1, 1923— $18,660.11; May 1, 1924—$23,780.04; May 1, 1925—$23,304.18; May 1, 1926—$29,791.30 As the present Secretary of the Board I do not claim the credit for this last large in- crease over the previous years, as part of the offering belongs to the Easter previous, and I have been in office only six months. I am presenting it to show that there has been a splendid advance in the offerings through the years and to congratulate the pastors and churches that have cooperated in bringing forth these results.

In my efforts to reach the Conferences and churches, I appealed to the Annual Confer- ence Presidents, and wish here to acknowl- edge the splendid cooperation they have giv- en me. Some of them have taken the trouble to write personal letters to the pastors and churches with the request that they hold the service and take the offering. This has had fine effect and greatly aided me in my work.

The Treasurers of the Annual Conferences are now assisting me in having the churches to send the money to them and they are show- ing the same interest and loyalty given by the Conference Presidents.

May I very kindly ask the pastors, the Sunday school superintendents or the church treasurers to assist in having the money forwarded at once to the Annual Conference Treasurers? The Annual Meeting of the Board of Home Missions will be held in Pittsburgh May 19. It would be a great inspiration to the entire Board if, at the meeting, I could report that every offering made had been paid. If this is not done, may I have the great pleasure of making this statement in our church papers by the first of June?

I again express my gratitude to our friends throught the entire denomination for their loyal support in the work to which the church has called me, and to which I am trying to faithfully give my service.

J. M. Sheridan,
Sec. Board of Home Missions.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MAY 23.

Isaac and His Wel's.

Lesson Text: Gen. 26:12-25.

Golden Text: Prov. 15:1.

The Central Truth: Isaac was a prominent exponent of that beattitude, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Scriptural Points.

1. There was a drought in the land, and Isaac left the highlands of Palestine and moved into the lowlands of Gerar along the Mediterranean Sea. Here rains were more frequent, and pasturage more abundant for flocks and herds.

2. Isaac prospered greatly in this land of the Philistines. He reaped a hundred fold crop of grain the first year of his sojourn. And his flocks and herds grew to large proportions.

3. "And the Lord blessed him." This means that God is the Source and Dispenser of prosperity. It means more than this. Isaac was greatly blessed spiritually. He held communications with God, received revelations from Him, and thereby developed into a very holy man. His prosperity was the outward manifestation of divine favor.

4. "And the Philestines envied him." Envy is the pastime of little minds and the folly of contracted soul's.

5. This envy grew to such an extent that Isaac was urged by the king to leave the country. The king doubtless had the best of motives in this. He no doubt feared that this envy might result in wholesale robbery, which the king himself might not be able to prevent.

6. Isaac needed many wells. He reopened the wells that his father had dug, but which the Philistines had filed up. And he dug some new wells. The first two of these the herdmen of Gerar strove for and took away from the herdmen of Isaac. Isaac was so meek and nonresisting that he quietly yielded to this injustice. Abraham was not quite so meek. It is recorded in Gen. 21:25: "And Abraham reproved Abimelech because of a well of water which Abimelech's servants had violently taken away." But Isaac was content to make no appeal for justice. He just moved further on and dug another well.

7. Upon his return to Beersheba the Lord appeared to Isaac and renewed the covenant which He had made with his father Abraham. This was necessary, lest Isaac might forget.

8. "And he builded an altar there." Like his father Isaac was a devout worshiper of the true and living God. And, like his father, Isaac delighted to meet with God at the altar of sacrifice and prayer.

Practical Points.

1. Non-resistance to real or fancied wrongs is the most effectual way of overcoming them. And it is the Christian way. It is the way prescribed by Christ for all His followers: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil." Matt. 5:39.

2. Retaliation, or resentment, is sure to stir up and invite more injury or insult. Every one is sure to reap what he sows in the moral world, as well as in the natural world. Deal out good seed, and you will reap a glorious harvest.

3. Love is heaven's unfeeling antidote for enmity. "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Matt. 5.44.

4. There are three other conditions of prosperity beside that of judicious industry. One is meekness: "But the meek shall inherit the earth: and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Ps. 37:11. And another is thanksgiving: "Let the people praise thee; O God: let all the people praise thee. Then shal the earth yield her increase, and God, even our own God, shall bless us." Ps. 67: 5 6. And the third condition is liberality: "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." Prov. 11:25.

5. The old law of brute force that "Might makes right" has served its day. It has been responsible for nearly all the wars and bloodshed with which this planet has been drenched. Public opinion, enlightened by twenty centuries of Christian thought, frowns upon this method of settling the disputes of mankind. The Prince of peace has prescribed a better way.

6. "Right makes might" is going to be the slogan of the future. "He is thrice armed that hass his quarrel just." A righteous cause is sure to triumph; just as a bad cause is bound to perish.

"Truth crused to earth will rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers."

A DEN OF THIEVES.

In most scathing language Jesus denounced the hypocrites and abusers of the temple worship. He said, "It is written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves." Mark 11:17

And is not this shameful attempt to steal the livery of heaven being repeated in this age of forms of godliness without the power: Jesus defines ecclesiastical robbery, and does not mince His words either: "Verily I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John 10:1.

In the ninth verse of this chapter of John Jesus says, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." Forgiveness and the new birth are to be had through saving faith in Him alone. "And there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Those who seek to climb up into the kingdom of God by the way of profession, formalism, ritualism, or good works are thieves and about ninetenths of the members of the various churches are climbers instead of enterers, and are thereby trying to steal their way to glory. What a shameful spectacle for God, the angels, and the glorified saints to behold?

"And shall we then forever live
At this poor dying rate;
Our love so faint, so cold to thee,
And thine to us so great?"

Let the church become aroused over this sad situation. Let agonizing supplication go up continually for the salvation of lost church members. To thy knees, O Israel.

"Let Zion's watchmen now awake,
And take the alarm they give."

Geo. R. Brown, Chm.

For indeed a death by cruifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of horrible and ghastly dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessness, traumatic fever, tetanus, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment, horror of anticipation, mortification of untended wounds—all intensified just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness.

The unnatural position made every movement painful; the lacerated veins and crushed tendons throbbed with incessant anguish; the wounds, inflamed by exposure, gradually gangrened; the arteries—especially of the head and stomach—became swollen and oppressed with sur-charged blood; and while each variety of misery went on gradually increasing, there was added to them the intolerable pang of a burning and raging thirst; and all these physical complications caused an internal excitement and anxiety, which made the prospect of death itself—of death, the awful unknown enemy, at whose approach man usually shudders most—bear the aspect of a delicious and exquisite release.—Dean Farrar.

NORTH CAROLINA BRANCH.

In a very pleasing manner Mr. Walter Lambeth, mayor of Thomasville, welcomed the North Carolina Branch to the city.

Mrs. J. W. Boyles extended greetings in behalf of the Community Church and Rev. J. L. Trollinger, in behalf of the First Methodist Protestant Church. To all of these Mrs Lynch, of Charlotte responded.

Mrs. L. W. Gerringer of Greensboro, made an interesting talk on the "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and its value to the church."

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown spoke on "Woman's work in the Foreign Field."

At the evening service a program was rendered by a group from the Children's Home. Following this exercise a moving picture of the Holy Land was given.

Wednesday morning session opened at 9:30 o'clock with a large delegation present. Reports from the various secretaries were read.

The corresponding secretary gave a comprehensive report of the year's work, showing splendid work had been done by the active societies.

Mrs. S. W. Taylor, Treasurer of the Branch, read the annual report. Total money for Dues $1,042.61. Total money from Young People's Societies, $416.19. Total money for Thank Offering, $873.62. Total money for all other purposes, $2,702.27. Total amount raised, $5,630.86.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews, Record Agent, reported total Records taken, 321. Two Societies. First Church, Thomasville, and Mt. Zion reached the goal—"Every member a subscriber to the Missionary Record."

The work of Missionary education among our young people and children is increasing in interest. Miss Mary Young, Secretary of Young People's Work, reported 30. Societies with a total membership of 509. Money sent to the Branch treasurer, $438.50. Mrs. S. R. Harris reported nine Life members, two Perpetual members and one memorial member enrolled during the year.

Secretary of Tithers and Intercessors reported increased interest in her department 55 tithers having enrolled.

Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Secretary of Literature, made a good report. 3142 pieces of literature, 125 letters and 80 post cards were sent out. Best year in history of the Branch.

At the evening session Rev. Lawrence Little, of Greensboro, made an inspiring address.

Following this, a pageant, "The Living Christ," was given by the Dramatic Club of Community Church.

Thursday morning session was taken up largely by reading of reports and other routine matters.

With more than 200 delegates registered, a large number of pastors and friends, the meeting at Thomasville was the most enthusiastic and largely attended in the history of the North Carolina Branch.

Report of Record Agent, April, 1926.

The year 1925-26 has been in at least one sense a year of progress. More than three times as many replies have come to your Record Agent in response to letters this year than last. To be exact I have received replies from sixteen of the one hundred two representatives to whom I have written in our Branch concerning the Missionary Record. Of all who have reported to me only one has reported a Missionary Record in every home in her society, this one is Mrs. A. H. Ragan, Record Agent of the J. Clyde Auman Society of First Church, Thomasville. Sixteen officers have reported 232 Records taken in sixteen societies. By carefully going over the mailing lists sent me by the Editor of the Missionary Record, I find in addition to these 232 Records that have been reported to me there are 88 others sent to North Carolina, making a total of 320. You can readily see that the other 86 representatives, whose names were furnished me by our Corresponding Secretaries, would have had little to report, an average of 1 1-43 Records for each of the 86 societies not reporting. Out of these 86 officials to whom I wrote and from whom I received no replies, I find by consulting the mailing lists that there are 31 who do not get the Record. I find by a process of elimination that there are 140 M. P. Churches in North Carolina in which no member takes the Record. Again consulting mailing lists, I find that of 320 Record Subscribers in the state 58 of them are in arrears as much as six months, and 30 of the 58 are in arrears nine months or more. This leads me to ask the Branch how long our subscribers should be kept on mailing lists after subscriptions expire. Your Record Agent needs to know this; it is a question that has come up in correspondence with the Editor. The Editor of the Record asks that the North Carolina Record Agent keep her notified of changes of address and deaths of subscribers so that she will avoid waste of Records and postage.

We are still far from our goal of "A Missionary Record in every Methodist Protestant Home in North Carolina" and I feel that the only way in which the office of State Record Agent can be adequately filled is by someone who travels through the Branch and can impress on our people their need of the information which they can get from no other sourse except the Missionary Record.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. R. M. Andrews, Record Agent.

Randleman Charge Missionary Activities

Since the Branch meeting at Thomasvi we have held two missionary meetings on t work. As both meetings the interest was f and the outlook for the new year was optim tic. Mt. Lebanon Home Society took up t plan as outlined by the Branch meeting f raising the Budget. At our next meeting will celebrate Egg month. Hope to secure s eral dimes in that way. We also voted to pie a quilt at an early date. Mrs. J. L. Hall a Mrs. J. F. Dosier each gave an interesting port of the Branch meeting.

The Treasurer is sending Mrs. H. A. G rett a check this week to cover one fifth our year's Budget. We hope this year to

"Over the top." We can do it if we plan for it in the beginning of the year and each member set that as her goal.

The Worthville Foreign Society held their first meeting for the new year on the fourth Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. At that time the President made a short report of the Branch meeting and tried to outline the work for the new year. It was decided to divide the Budget by twelve and try to raise one twelfth of it each month. That is our plan We think it will work. It was decided to have a public meeting next fourth Sunday night and write everyone to come. Our subject wil be "The Vision." We hope to have an interesting program. We are planning to have a Nickel-Shower at that time.

We want to make this a great year on Randleman Charge along Missionary lines. Wil' each one who reads this offer a prayer in our behalf that we may be able to do our very best. Mrs. W. H. Neese, Corres. Sec

THE PEACEMAKER.

For weeks Willis looked forward to the visit of his cousin Margery. It was going to be a great treat to have someone to play with, and Willis could scarcely wait for the time to come.

Margery lived in a big city where there were trolley cars, and parks, and a Zoo with all kinds of animals in it. Willis lived in a small town and often listened to his grandmother tell of the nice times Margery had and what a good little girl she was.

He made up his mind that when he got to be a big man, he would go to the city himself. Perhaps he would be a policeman or a fireman he wasn't quite sure which.

His grandmother was always saying, "Do not do that, Willis. What would your little cousin Margery say?" Sometimes it almost made him dislike this girl-cousin whom he had never seen.

Then one day she arrived in the care of Aunt Hattie and Uncle Rodney, who were going on farther for a trip and expected to be gone several weeks. On their way back they were to call for Margery and take her home.

Willis looked with great admiration at the lovely little girl who was to be his playmate for the weeks to come. He was rather shy, but he didn't need to do much talking for Margery always had a lot to say.

She was delighted with Eric, his little dog and Eric made friends with her instantly. One of the first things Margery did was to tie a bright, pink satin ribbon about Eric's neck.

Willis was sure Eric was annoyed by the ribbon, and positive the boys would make fun of Eric and his pink bow. A collar was all right, but a pink satin bow for a boy's dog It made Willis indignant to think of it.

Then, without the least reason for doing so Margery began to call him "Willie," and how he hated to be called "Willie." It wouldn't have been so bad if she had said "Will" or even "Bill," but "Willie!"

The last thing before Aunt Hattie and Uncle Rodney resumed their journey, they brought out a box.

"Here, children," Aunt Hattie said cheerfully, "is a nice little present for each of you Willis will be a little gentleman, I am sure, and will let Margery have first choice. Don't open the box until your Uncle Rodney and I are gone. Then you will have something to amuse yourselves with while the older folks drive us in the car down to the station. See how nicely you can take care of your gifts. Possibly," and Aunt Hattie beamed at both of them, "there will be another nice present when we get back for the one who has taken the better care of the gift received at this time."

That sounded good to Willis, and then and there he made up his mind that whatever he received, it should not be soiled or spoiled in any way.

But Margery was busy with a different idea.

"Say, Willie," she whispered to her cousin, "Aunt Hattie and Uncle Rodney are not going away for a whole hour yet. Let's just peep into the box and see what's in it."

Willis didn't want to be impolite, but it didn't seem quite square, and so he shook his head emphatically.

Margery sighed, but again and again she lifted the box and shook it, and once she listened as though she might hear something.

Uncle Rodney and Aunt Hattie were scarcely down the front steps when Margery had that box open and the wrappings off what was inside.

"There," she said decisively, "is a beautiful horn, and I just know it'll make a terrible noise. I'll take that and you can have this sailor boy doll."

Margery began to demonstrate the horn enthusiastically, tooting all over the house and setting Eric barking furiously.

Willis picked up the doll. It was all right, but what fellow wanted a doll, even although it was a sailor with black stocking hands and face and big ears. He remembered what Aunt Hattie had said about being polite, and besides Margery was his visitor.

"Let's trade," he insinuated gently.

For answer, Margery blew the horn vigorously in the direction of Willis, and by this time she had learned the knack of going, "Toot toot-tootety," in a sort of mocking chant. It made Willis wild.

"No. I'm going to keep the horn," Margery retorted firmly.

"Perhaps I'll give a tea party by-and by and you and Jackie, for that's to be the sailor boy's name, will come to the party. Then after we've eaten the party up, I'll hire you to wash the dishes."

"I'm not coming to any party," growled Willis, "and I wish you'd stop calling me Willie. My name isn't Willie!"

Margery was thinking deeply.

"Then we'll not have a party," she replied amiably. "We'll have a wedding and get married, and Jackie will be our child."

The prospect was overwhelming. Tears were very near the surface with Willis.

"I ,won't get married," he screamed stamping his feet angrily. "I'd rather be a burglar."

Margery was eyeing him coldly, and before he knew what was happening, Willis was grabbed by one arm and his cousin was looking right into his face with her brown eyes flashing.

"Willie Seabold," she declared with determination, "you will too get married, and you will be the man of the house and bring home the meat, and take care of Jackie evenings while I go to parties!"

The idea was too awful, and Willis made one frantic lunge to break away from his captor.

"I tell you I'll be a pirate first," he shrieked.

Although Margery was a little smaller than he, she was several months older, and very strong for a small girl. It wasn't easy to get away, and somehow in the tussle, the blue and silver horn was dropped and stepped on and the two sides were hopelessly crushed together.

"Willie Seabold," gasped Margery, "now see what you've done. You've spoiled my chance of getting the nice present that Aunt Hattie and Uncle Rodney were going to bring, and I s'pose you think you'll get it."

More quickly than it takes to tell it, Margery grabbed Jackie by one leg while Willis clung to the rest of the anatomy of the sailor doll, and before the contest was over, Jackie bore evidence of having been in a real war.

Willis was ready to cry—but he didn't want to before a girl. Margery was looking speculatively at the injured Jackie.

"Now," she announced, "we'll not get married. We'll take Jackie to the hospital instead, and you'll be the nurse and I'll be the doctor."

The revolt in the soul of Willis flamed up once more, and all thought of tears fled. He cast the wounded sailor scornfully into a corner where he was promptly seized by Eric, who was obliged to hold his head very high so that Jackie's leg would not drag on the floor. Then, feeling that he must add in some manner to the excitement, the dog began to run as fast as he could with his load.

It was such a comical sight that both children forgot their quarrel and laughed heartily.. Someway that laugh changed their feelings, and although Willis' cheeks had a red spot on each of them, his voice was much pleasanter.

"I'll tell you what," he said, "I'm not going to be a nurse. You'll be that, and I'll be the Doctor—Dr. Willis. This automobile that I got for Christmas is the ambulance, and you can bring Jackie in it to my hospital."

Margery thought a moment. Then she dimpled adorably.

"That'll be lots of fun," she agreed. "Eric, nice Eric, bring Jackie to me. You can go to Dr. Willis' hospital too if you're a good dog, and have your ear fixed where Tabby scratched you yesterday."

Willis marched grandly into the library where he had promptly decided that his hospital should be, and on the way he took his mother's black handbag from the hall rack. It should be his medicine case.

Willis glowed with satisfaction. He was at peace with the world. The pink ribbon was to come off Eric's neck—and then everything would be all right.—Selected.

BURBANK'S OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENTS.

Among the plant wizard's most wonderful creations are the spineless cactus, the pitless prune and a fast-growing walnut tree that is ready to be cut into lumber after ten years' growth. The Burbank potato, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture, added seventeen million dollars a year to the agriculture wealth of the country. No less than sixty varieties of plums and prunes were originated by this "wizard." He produced at least fifty new varieties of berries. In one experiment it was necessary to destroy 65,00 berry bushes.

Experiments With Flowers.

Hundreds of new varieties of flowers were created by Burbank, including roses, dahlias daisies, poppies, lilies and many others. As far back as 1893, writing of his experiments with lilies, he said: "Can my thoughts be imagined, after so many years of patient care and labor, as, walking among them (his new lilies) on a dewy morning, I look upon these new forms of beauty on which other eyes have never gazed? Here a plant six feet high with yellow flowers. Beside it one only six inches high with dark red flowers. Farther on one of pale straw, or snowy white, or with curious dots and shadings; some deliciously fragrant or only faintly so; some with nodding flowers some with dark green woolly leaves in whoris. or with polished light green, lance-like, scattered leaves."—Current Events.

MEDITATING UPON CHRIST.

By Andrew Murray.

I was very much struck some time ago with the practice a little class in object-lessons was put through. A picture was shown them, which they were told to look at carefully. They then had to shut their eyes, and take time to think and remember everything they had seen. The picture was now removed, and the little ones had to tell all they could. Again the picture was shown, and they had to try and notice what they had not observed before; Again to shut their eyes and think, and again to tell what they had noticed. And so once more until every line of the picture had been taken in.

As I looked at the keen interest with which the little eyes now gazed on the picture, and then were pressed so tightly shut as they tried to realize, and take in, and keep what they had been looking at, I felt that if our Bible reading were more of such an object-lesson, the unseen spiritual realities pictured to us in the Word would take much deeper hold of our inner life. Let us, in meditating on the image of God in Christ, to which we are to be conformed, remember this. When some special trait has occupied our thoughts, let us shut our eyes and open our hearts; let us think, and pray, and believe in the working of the Holy Spirit, until we really see the blessed Master in that special light in which the Word has been setting Him before us, and can carry away for that day the deep and abiding impression of that heavenly beauty in Him which we know is to be reproduced in us. Let us gaze, and gaze again, let us worship and adore; the more we see Him as He is, the more like Him we must become. To study the image of God in the man Christ Jesus, to yield and set open our inmost being for that image to take possession and live in us, and then to go forth, and let the heavenly likeness reflect itself and shine out in our life among our fellowmen—this is what we have been redeemed for—and let this be what we live for.

IMMORTALITY.

When Mr. Dan Crawford, the missionary from Africa, visited our country he found many practices here which to his mind compared most unfavorably with those in Africa Speaking one day about immortality, he said "Right across Africa, away on the lonely ledge of the marshes, there is no native who would ever think of denying the immortality of the soul. Never! They say, "The dead do not really die.' They say, 'The body is the cottage of the soul' And no African would say of any one who is dead, 'Mr. Smith has departed.' They would say, 'He has arrived.' And when David Livingstone died away down on the shores of Lake Bangweolo, they said 'He sleepeth.' Always, 'He sleepeth.' And against that what do I find in your modern civilization? I find materialism rampant—rampant that you have no such certainty a that."

Dr. George Clark Peck makes a similar arraignment. "The man on the street," he declares, "has lost nowadays the assurance of immortality. He is still interested in the theme; likes occasionally to hear about it be glad to know that the theme represents a fact. But he has lost what Bushnell calls 'the power of an endless life.' Nearly all his estimates are made on the basis of three-score years and ten. What he has to do or to enjoy or suffer must be encountered quickly. For, as the preacher says, 'There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest.' And if occasionally he forgets his most sacred vows and, having forgotten, descends to the level of the brute, he hopes to be excused, since he will be 'so long time dead.' In short, modern Epicureanism whether in forms which the founder of the school could approve, or in grosser orgies, is the perfectly logical, the inevitable result of loss of grip on the truth of immortality. Only the setting of human work and love and fellowship in the light of the eternal years will help man to recover his lost ground."—Quoted in Onward.

THE BITTER CRY OF THE CHRISTLESS WORLD.

To a brotherly heart what stronger philanthropic, educational, or spiritual appeal can there be than that of a non-Christian wo in which the average is less than one phy cian to two million people, in which 95 cent of the population have their mi dwarfed and darkened by total illiteracy, in which scores of millions have never he or had opportunity to hear of the Worl Redeemer?

Says a traveler, not himself a Christi "One day I stood near one of the great t ples. With me was a friend. While we st there a native woman came, carrying a li child. She took no notice of us, but at foot of the temple steps she threw hers prone on the ground, holding the baby up her arms. It was a poor little feeble, sic child. And she prayed, 'Oh, grant that child may grow healthy and fair like oth children. Grant that it may grow strong. hear the cry of a mother, and a mothe breaking heart.'

"As she was going away we said, 'Frie to whom have you prayed?' She said, 'I not know, but surely somewhere there m be some one to hear a mother's cry and ke a mother's heart from breaking.'

In all this universe is there anything hopeless as a heathen's grief, or as dark a heathen's grave? And, oh, what a chan it makes when they learn of him who ca to heal the broken-hearted, and who said, am the resurrection and the life." Said little Manchurian girl, in speaking of flower-planted grave of her baby broth "The grave has become a new place to since Jesus came to our village."—Dr. Egb Smith in The Reflex Influence of Foreign M sions.

THE VALUE OF A MAN.

"How much are you worth? However may value man, the following informat may be of interest to you. It is said the av age man contains enough oxygen, hydrog and nitrogen to make $2.45 worth of illumi ting gas. Granting that to be a fact, yet may not be bright enough to throw light the simplest subject. It is said that he c tains enough carbon to make more than n thousand lead pencils. That is indeed a of carbon to take from one man, yet he n not have a thought worth noting with a s gle lead pencil. He contains enough phosph us to make eight hundred thousand match yet he may be a poor stick, and a bum ma for any girl in the community. It is said t he contains about sixty lumps of sugar. I tle did I realize that man was so sweet, I have seen men as sour as a pickle.

I read a story of a man in New York C who awakened in the night to find his w weeping. 'My darling,' he said in distre 'what is the matter?' 'A dream,' she said, have had a horrible dream.' The husband b ged her to tell it to him that he might co fort her. After long persuasion, she was duced to tell it. She said: 'I thought I w walking down Broadway, and came to a wa house where there was a large sign: Husba for Sale. You could get handsome ones $1,500, or for $1,200 for that matter. I s some very nice men for $1,000 each.' The h band asked innocently, 'Did you see any there darling, that looked like me?' 'Oh yes dozens of them,' gasped the wife. 'They were done up in bunches like asparagus, and were selling for ten cents a bunch.' ''—Ex.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Home.

Text: ''Go home to thy friends, and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.'' Mark 5:19.

A poor demented man had been restored to his right mind. A legion of devils had been cast out of him. He was most grateful to Jesus for this work of mercy. He sat at His feet to learn more about this wonderful Healer and Savior. And when Jesus was about to embark for His home at Capernaum he requested that he might go with Him. But Jesus refused him that privilege and pleasure. There was a work for him to do in his own home and community. He could represent Jesus most effectively among his home associates. He therefore commanded him: ''Go home to thy friends, and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.''

Home is the place where all things begin that are good and uplifting. Love is born and has its perfect work in the home. Life begins there and develops to maturity. Home is the place of rest from the exacting toil and vexation of the outside world. And home is the first sanctuary where the Lord of glory is worshipped.

First let us speak of home as A Place of Love.

Not every dwelling is a home. Home is more than a place to eat and a place to sleep. It takes at least two to make a home. And the mutual love of these two or more is the power of God that builds and preserves the home. The love of man and wife, of parents and children, and of brothers and sisters creates an atmosphere of peace and happiness that is akin to that beyond the vale.

A child was asked where her home was. And she replied, ''Home is where Mother is.'' What a beautiful and all-embracing definition of home. It is the mother, more than any other, who makes, beautifies, and enriches the home. She is the high priestess of this little sanctuary of God. It is her hand that ministers at its altars. It is she that soothes the troubled heart. It is she that dispels the ugly imps of corroding care. It is she that shuts out the malicious whispers of an unfriendly world. It is at the footstool of the throne of her unfailing affection where husband and children gather new strength and courage for the battle of life. ''What is home without a mother?'' It is a poor one, to say the least.

In the next place home is A Place of Rest.

Some one has described home as ''the place where woman toils in the presence of man and man rests in the presence of woman.'' Since ''man's work is from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done,'' this definition is amazingly true. But rest from daily toil is not the only rest to be found in the well ordered home. Home affords a most restful retreat from the sharp rivalries and cut-throat competition of the outside world. Home is the haven of rest from the piercing thrusts of ungodly gossip. And home is a strong refuge in which to recuperate from the ill effects of disastrous failure. In the peaceful home the discouraged soul gets strength and determination to try again. Home is the asylum of the down and outs, where they take a new start in life, and where they pluck victory out of defeat. Home is a beautiful type of that everlasting rest that remains to the people of God. And both home and heaven present strong incentives to seek the blessed rest from sin and torment. Hear the Savior's invitation and promise: ''Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.''

Home in a very precious sense is

The Place of Childhood.

Children are the most valuable and most promising treasures that the Father of mercies has entrusted to human beings. They are treasures that angels have coveted with an unquenchable covetousness. The earthly and heavenly possibilities of childhood are inexpressible. The Psalmist gives expression to God's estimate of children in the following language: ''Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord; and the fruit of the womb is his reward. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them.''

Home is the sphere of youthful development. It is where children get their growth in body, mind, and character. Home is the best training school this side of heaven. It has no substitute and no rival. Neither the church nor the state can do the work assigned by the Creator to the godly home.

Faithful home government is indispensable to the proper and adequate training of children. Parents are clothed with God-given authority over their children. Not to exercise this authority in order to secure and maintain the child's highest well-being is to prove recreant to a most sacred trust.

Home is expected to be a safe and effective asylum of protection from the snares and pitfalls of the world outside. These traps of Satan are baited with deceitful pleasures of sin to attract the unwary feet of young people. Parents should exert their authority, as well as their advice and prayers, to save their children from this threatened corruption and ruin. The prevailing lawlessness that is jeopardizing the very foundations of our civilization is the unfortunate fruitage of the decline of wholesome discipline in the home. A child left to do as he pleases will invariably please to do wrong; and lawlessness in the home will produce lawlessness in the nation.

In the last place the home is A Place of Worship.

''Go home to thy friends, and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee.'' Home is a delightful accounting house of the soul, a most suitable place to recount the many mercies of a covenant-keeping God. From its sacred altar should go up large thanksgiving for every good and perfect gift. Abounding praise for the unfailing goodness of God is a priceless privilege of home-makers and home-dwellers.

Home is a place of sweet ''fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.'' Much of our Lord's ministry was spent in the homes of the people. It was in the Bethany home where Mary sat at His feet and heard His word. He wrought many miracles in the homes of the people. And He still craves to be a member of the home circle, the real Head and Ruler of the home. He is still knocking at many homes that have shut Him out. He is saying, ''Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man (or woman) hear my voice, and open the door, I will come unto him, and will sup with him and he with me.''

Home is ''a house of prayer.'' Family altars were among the first to be erected to Almighty God. It is a shame that they are becoming so few in this fast, worldly age. Let these altars be reconstructed for the peace of our households and for the glory of our God. From our firesides and dining-halls let prayer go up continually, ''that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.''

Davidson Circuit.—The work on this charge seems to be progressing nicely since spring has come, and the flu has disappeared.

Sunday schools are taking on new life, and congregations are increasing.

A splendid Easter service was given at Lineberry; offering was $18.00. This church is also planning to have Children's Day, first Sunday in June.

We were glad to have Bro. Bell with us the first Sunday in May. He is a local preacher and is very much interested in the work.

We were glad to have him preach to us at Pleasant Grove at the 3 o'clock service.

Parsonage Painted.

I am delighted to tell you that the parsonage has just received two coats of paint inside and outside. This adds to the comfort, and the preacher's home now is really attractive. I feel thankful that we have some folks on this charge who are really progressive.

Circuit Rally.

On the 5th Sunday in May all of our people are invited to meet together at Chapel Hill camp ground in a Circuit Rally.

We are expecting to have the big new Tabernacle seated ready for the great crowd that will be there. Service will start strictly at 10 o'clock. Program will consist of songs, recitations, quartets, speeches etc. A special feature of our program will be an address by our beloved President, Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D., at 11 A. M. and Mrs. Dixon is invited to speak to us in the afternoon.

With best wishes to all, I am yours in the Master's service. C. E. Ridge, Pastor.

the birds which she was sure knew her, they would chitter and fly about as though they weren't in the least bit afraid. Her father had helped her put up feeding shelves in several places, and she would go several times a week and put seeds and crumbs and pieces of suet on these shelves. Then it was fun to see her little guests come and help themselves.

Bess was an impulsive little lady who always acted first and thought afterwards. Sometimes this habit got her into trouble and her Daddy would say:

"Little Bess, you must learn to know what you want to do and how you are going to do it before you start. If you don't trouble when you grow up."

Old Sara, who did the work in the kitchen, would often laugh and sing this little Jamaican rhyme:

"Doan run too fas' wi' dat load o limes;
Ef you run too fas', you will run two times."

Bess didn't like to hear it. She thought it was very silly.

But old Sara would say: "Chile, get started right, an' then you won't have to hurry, an' you'll only have to go one time."

Sometimes Bess got quite cross to have everyone telling her not to be in such a rush, for she didn't like to wait. When it was fall she was in a hurry for winter and the snow, and then she could scarcely restrain her impatience until Christmas came.

And now that it was March and the snow had nearly disappeared and the birds were beginning to come back, she was anxious for spring that she could watch her little feathered friends make their nests, and see the little birds, and run on the grass again, and gather the wild flowers which grew in abundance in the fields round about.

The bright sunshine made her think summer was almost there, but old Sara would laugh and say:

"Not yet, Honey, Ma'ch came in like a lamb, an' boun' to go out like a lion."

"What does that mean?" Bess asked one day.

"Oh, it means," explained old Sara, "that we must have lots of Ma'ch winds—regular gales, an' rain an' bad weather."

"Gales," Bess repeated wonderingly.

Old Sara laughed till her sides shook.

"Sure thing," she said, "an' you're a regular 'Gale' yourself!"

Bess thought about that and couldn't quite make out what old Sara meant, but she forgot to ask her because she was asking another question instead.

"Sara," said she, "What does it mean to be as mad as a March hare?"

Sara shook her head.

"I doan know, chile, unless de rabbits gets sick of de winter time an' want de gardens to grow wiv plenty of lettuce an' carrots in 'em fer the little Easter rabbits to eat."

Before Bess had a chance to say another word, the telephone bell rang and Bess went to answer it. It was her mother's voice, and her mother was over at Mrs. Dudley's, where the Bird Study Club was holding its monthly meeting.

"Bess, dear," said her mother, "I want to show some of the ladies the pictures of those lovely colored birds in the books you and I were looking at last night. There are four of them on the library table. Please put on your coat and bring them over here. You may stay and play with Rosamond if you like for a while. Better bring an umbrella for it is beginning to sprinkle."

Bess was much pleased. She was tired staying in the house, and it would be fun to play with Rosamond. Just at that minute the sun came out very brightly, and it seemed quite foolish to her to wear a coat.

"It's almost summer," she said to herself "and I'll take Muvver's new purple and gold parasol—and I'll not bother with any coat."

So Bess pulled her little red cap down over her chestnut curls, tied a scarf about her neck, picked up the four books, and started first telling Sara where she was going. But by this time, the sun had gone under a cloud and big spatters of rain were falling.

She put up the pretty parasol when quite quickly the wind began to blow so hard that Bess could scarcely keep her feet. It was cooler than she had thought, and she almost wished she had worn a coat.

"This must be a 'Gale,'" she chuckled.

Then something went swish. Bess looked up and there was the pretty parasol wrong side out and the wind pulling at it as if it would tear it out of her hands.

"Oh, Oh," she cried, "what'll Muvver say?"

In trying to hold on to the parasol, the books with the wonderful pretty pictures went flying out of her right arm where she was carrying them, and to Bess's dismay, two of them went right over the edge and landed on the ice, for she was following the shore of the little lake.

There was nothing to do but to run after them, for the wind was making them slide along rapidly on the smooth surface.

Before Bess knew what was happening, one foot went right through the thin crust and then the other foot. The water wasn't so very deep—only half way up to her knees, but it was fearfully cold, and it was hard to get the books, and the rough edges of the ice kept hurting her.

It was a sorry looking child who rang Mrs. Dudley's doorbell, and Mrs. Gale was quite alarmed to see Bess in such a condition as this. The two fine books were spoiled and also the nice parasol.

"I must take Bess right home," she said "if you'll lend me something to wrap about her. I shall give her a warm bath and put her right to bed so she'll not get a chill."

And that's just what happened. So Bess lost her play with Rosamond, and when her Daddy came home that night, he made fun of her and chanted this rhyme, which made Bess resolve that she wouldn't be in such a rush next time, nor so determined to have her own way;

"So Brezzy Bess of The Bunalow,'
Will learn to hurry by going slow.
To make haste slowly is the best way,
An' specially if it's a Marchy day."

It was truly a wonderful message as just like Brother Love always brings for his people.

West Lexington, S. Davidson Charge.—Mo-r's Day was very appropriately observed our Sunday school last Sunday. We had an-er record attendance with 162 present. The ering was $4. The classes assembled to their ms and made the record of attendance and ering and then reassembled in the auditor-n for the Mother's Day program which con-ed of special songs and talks.

The special music included a solo by Bro. tchfield and other special selections. Brief ks were then made by Rev. C. B. Way, Rev. Ivey Crutchfield, Rev. E. W. Easter. Bro. L. Hedrick, teacher of the men's class, de the principal address for the occasion delivered a very touching speech. All of talks were on the general theme of Moth-and what she is and what she means and r she may be properly honored.

The preaching service last Sunday night s attended by the usual size congregation the pastor delivered a Mother's Day ser-n from the text, Prov. 1:8. The theme of the sermon was "A Mother's Influence."

Bro. Crutchfield performed the marriage of a Salisbury couple at the residence of Mrs. A. H. Evans, his boarding place, on Friday night of last week. The names of the contracting parties were Miss Gladys Peake and Mr. M. W. Jenkins. They were directed to the parsonage by a friend and acquaintance of Bro. Crutchfield.

A number of West Lexington people are attending the revival services at Asheboro church and hearing good sermons by Rev. J. E. Pritchard, of Asheboro. This is for him peculiar interest in the Asheboro revival because of three things, namely, that he was my pastor for five years, that he performed my marriage ceremony, and third, that he was my pastor when I was licensed to preach in the Methodist Protestant Church. These incidents are pleasant memories in my life. The encouragement which Bro. Pritchard gave me will not be forgotten.

We will have preaching by the pastor at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. at West Lexington next Sunday. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Rockingham.—On April 19, 1926, the sad news was spread that death had entered the home of Mr. Van Thomas and claimed Mr. Thomas' father, Mr. C. R. Phifer, one of our oldest and most loved members.

In less than an hour before his death he was seen standing on the street in Rockingham talking to Rev. T. W. Hearn, shortly after his return home he dropped dead. He was ready to meet God.

Mr. Phifer has led a devoted Christian life since boyhood. At the age of sixteen he joined the old M. P. Harmony Church. In 1877 he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Caroline Griffin. To this union were born seven children. In 1899 he moved to Rockingham and joined the M. P. Church and there remained until called home.

On account of his pastor being away Rev. T. W. Hearn, assisted by Rev. Mr. Smith, pastors of the two Baptist churches of the town conducted the funeral services. The interment was at the Northam cemetery.

We are glad to report that our Sunday school is growing in attendance and spirit.

Mother's Day was our pastor's appointment at Chase City. In order to deliver a Mother's Day service at both places Mr. Trollinger held a Mother's Day service here last Sunday, May 2nd. It was one of the best services on record, ever held in this church.

We are real proud of the good work that the pastor, Mr. J. H. Trollinger, is doing in this community. Reporter.

Siler City and Liberty Notes.

DIED.

Holt.

(Bro. Williams is not able to perform the duties of his pastorate, owing to his long and serious illness. For that reason the undersigned has been asked to prepare this obituary.)

Glen Anna Shaw Holt was born October 20, 1886. She departed this life on April 24, 1926.

In 1904, on December 27, she was married to Mr. Seymore S. Holt. Slightly more than twenty-one years mark the period of her married life, but they were happy years, and rich in all the essentials of such relationship.

This union was blessed with three splendid children, two sons and a daughter. The daughter is Miss Nina Josephene Holt; the sons are Donald Shaw and S. S. Holt, Jr. These, with the devoted husband and father, survive and mourn the passing of a dear wife and mother.

Besides these surviving members of her immediate family, the deceased leaves a brother, Mr. Ray Shaw, and two half-brothers and a half-sister, Mrs. Harry Poezolt and Mr. C. K. and James Shaw, all of Greensboro.

The religious life of Sister Holt began with her early childhood, and never ceased. About the age of twelve years she accepted Christ as her personal Saviour and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. After her marriage her membership was transferred to the Graham Methodist Protestant Church where she remained a faithful and active member until her translation to the Church above.

During her entire life, short tho it was, Sister Holt was personally religious and an active church worker. Her first acquaintance with her husband was at Providence Christian Church where she was the teacher of a Sunday school class to which he belonged. During her fifteen years of membership in the Methodist Protestant Church she was an earnest worker, and a leader in the Women's organizations. Those who knew her best in her church life speak of her as one of the purest and most dependable of christian women.

As noble and beautiful as her life was in the church, it was more so, if possible, in the home and the community where she lived. Her earnest desire for her home was that it should honor Christ, and that every member of her household should name the name of Jesus as Lord and Master. She lived to see all of her children professors of Christ and members of the church with her and her husband.

Her example of christian living, in her home, does not extend very far, when measured by years; but in the far reach of its effects it will never be lost upon her loving home circle. The beauty and purity of her christian life in the home will forever be a precious memory to them.

Her community, in the full confidence and loving esteem in which she is held, rises up to call her "blessed." With bowed heads and wounded hearts her neighbors have stood together in the shadow of this sorrow and shed their tears over the passing of one whose unselfishness, and neighborliness, and friendship has been a heaven-sent benediction to the people among whom she lived. Surely this home and this community is bereft of a good woman.

The words of Whittier were written for such a life:

"The dear Lord's best interpreters
Are humble human souls;
The gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books or scrolls."

When our dear Lord was about to leave his friends he said to them, "Let not your heart be troubled." So he says to his friends today. The shadows that have fallen across our pathway are not unbroken shadows. Through the darkness of this hour and into the gloom of this home comes the cheering light of God, and by the certainty of that light we follow her where the "shadows flee away." We say she is dead; but the fact is, she has just begun to live. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, Jesus said, shall never die." What we call death is but God's portal to life. Through this portal she has passed, and with hope and confidence we may assure our hearts that she lives forever amid the light of eternal glory.

"Two hands upon the breast,
And labor's done;
Two pale feet crossed in rest—
The race is won."

The funeral service was held at the home in Graham, and was attended by a large circle of admiring and sympathizing friends. Owing to the protracted illness of her pastor, Rev. D. R. Williams, he could not be at the funeral. The service was in charge of Rev. George L. Curry, a former pastor, assisted by the writer. Interment followed in Green Hill cemetery, Greensboro. Her grave was marked by many beautiful flowers—a fit token of the beauty and fragrance of her good life.

Our hearts go out in tender sympathy to the sorrowing husband and children and relatives. May the God of all comfort keep them until the day of blessed and unbroken reunion.

S. W. Taylor.

Kennedy.

Edgar Edwin Kennedy, son of Bro. and Sister John L. Kennedy, was born July 23, 1921; he departed this life at his home in High Point, April 16, 1926. His age four years, six months and 23 days.

Edgar was a stout, healthy, and promising child, and only a few hours before his death he was in his normal playful spirit, and showed no signs of any ailment. Some dread disease suddenly fastened upon him, and in twelve hours he was dead. Medical aid was summoned but to no avail. With old and young alike the time comes when the hand of death can not be stayed.

This seems to have been the case with little Edgar.

His passing has, of course, left a vacancy in the home, and a sadness in the hearts of his loving parents. But there is much to comfort them. They know that his eternal blessedness is assured, and like one of old in similar circumstances they may say, "I shall go to him."

The funeral service was held on Sunday afternoon at Pleasant Union M. P. Church, in the presence of a large congregation. The service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. L. Reynolds and Miss Cora Lee Norman, minister of the Friend's Church. The little body was laid to rest in the church burying ground beneath a covering of flowers, while its child-spirit was at home with Jesus.

The family and relatives have our deepest sympathy in this sorrow. May the God of all comfort sustain them, and sanctify this sorrow to their spiritual good. S. W. Taylor.

Mrs. E. S. Glover—an Appreciation.

Mrs. E. S. (Pattie) Glover passed from this life into the presence of her Lord at 9:45 A. M., April 10, 1926, at her home at Dabney, N. C. She was the wife of E. S. Glover, a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Vance County. Mrs. Glover was a member of a family group of six children, she being the first of the six to be called from this life. There were three girls and three boys in this family, sons and daughters of William and Elizabeth Ball, as follows in order of ages: Mrs. Lucy W. Harris; Mrs. E. S. (Pattie) Glover; Charles T. Ball; Luther R. Ball; Mrs. Fannie Culler; Benjamin F. Ball.

Mr. Glover, the husband, and five children, two girls and three boys, survive. The girls are Mrs. L. W. Burroughs of Dabney, Mrs. H. L. Barnes of Norfolk, Va.; the boys are Hayden and Julian Glover of Dabney, N. C., and Leon Glover of Shanghai, China.

Mrs. Glover was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, Harris Chapel, at Dabney, N. C. She was a loyal, faithful Christian. She put God first in her life and work. Mrs. Glover was loved and appreciated by a large group of friends. She loved her husband and her children and gave herself for them in service unreservedly. No one doubted where this good woman stood on the question of the high ideals which have made family and home life beautiful and sweet throughout the years. No one ever forgot a visit to her happy home and no one who knew her ever doubted that she lived and labored for those she loved.

It was her custom to keep her children with her as long as possible after they grew up. She will be missed not only by her husband and children and other loved ones, but by her church and community and a large circle of friends.

The funeral services were held at Harris' Chapel, her beloved church. Rev. R. C. Stubbins of Enfield conducted the services, aided by Dr. W. R. Cullom of Waken Forest, N. C. and Rev. J. A. Boyd of Thomasville, N. C. Mrs. Glover was buried in the cemetery near the church. She has gone from us to be eternally with her Lord. Our temporary loss is her great gain.

A Tribute to Mr. Dickens by His Pastor.

One of the deepest regrets of my life is that I cannot appear in person to testify to my high esteem of my good friend and brother, "Man" Dickens. This pet name of his was justly earned, for he was a man indeed whom to know was to love.

Many times I have gone to him for advice or I felt that he was a safe counsellor. Especially was this so in financial matters. He not only gave me his best advice freely, but many times has given me as his pastor extra financial aid aside from his pledges to the church. This in no small way either.

I had the privilege of assisting in the meeting at Eden when Brother Dickens joined the church; then a little later becoming pastor of that church. I had the privilege of being closely associated with him in the work and never did he turn down any call that was made for his church. His was a big liberal heart.

If Brother Dickens had any grievance against his pastor at any time he never let me know anything about it by his actions toward him. This is something that all preachers appreciate. For seven years I enjoyed his fellowship as pastor and just a few days ago, during the Easter season I saw him in Enfield and he expressed the deepest interest in a deal that I had made, and said I want you, to get it every cent for you know there are some strange folks in the world. When I looked puzzled at his expression, he said, "I am coming up to see you this summer and I will tell you what I mean." But I shall not see him here. My prayer is that I shall see him over there where there will be no anxiety as to the financial welfare of our friends for their every want shall be supplied by Him who shall wipe away all tears.

To the faithful wife, who stood by him and was doubtless with him as he passed out, I refer to you my sincerest sympathy. May the God of all grace sustain you in this trying hour and give you the comfort that only He can give under such circumstances.

And to Ruth and Everett, doubtless you thought many times your father was exacting but most young people do not understand the wish of the parents, but I am sure he was desirous for you to make good and make a name for he had often expressed such a wish for me. May God bless you children and help you to be true to Him who has promised to guide you all the way.

To the friends, for he had many, the orders to which he belonged, for he was faithful, the town of Enfield to which he devoted his energies for its upbuild, to those who labored on his farms, whom I am sure he always desired that they should do the best for themselves, and to his pastor who will miss his friendly greetings on the street and in his home, and last but not least his church who will miss his interest and support, may He who only can supply us with that which we need in a time like this give that consolation which comes from the throne above.

Not long until we all "shall pass over the river and rest under the shade."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

E. B. Quackenbush.

Elisha Braxton Quackenbush, one of the oldest and best members of Orange Chapel Church, passed to his reward March 21. During his long life of 83 years he was a tiller of the soil, and was a very successful farmer.

Brother Quackenbush was the type of man and citizen that was loved by all with whom he came in contact, a man the children liked to know as well as the older people. He was a man who lived the simple life, was one of the most consistent members of Orange Chapel M. P. Church, and when his health would permit, he was never absent from church and Sunday school. A man who lived some distance away but who knew Brother Quackenbush well made this statement to the writer on the day of the funeral. "You have buried one of your best members today." A lady who was one of his Sunday school students many years ago said: "He was a splendid Sunday school teacher. I still remember how he appealed to us to give our hearts to God."

Orange Chapel Church could not accomodate the large crowd of people that assembled for the funeral, which was conducted by the writer, assisted by Prof. Arthur Crawford. His tired body was laid to rest in the church cemetery.

One son and four daughters survive: H. C. Quackenbush, Mrs. C. C. Crawford, Mrs. Luther Crawford, Mrs. J. S. Loyd, and Mrs Graham Crutchfield, all loyal members of Orange Chapel M. P. church. His wife preceded him to the grave many years ago.

In the passing of this good man there is a painful lack. We mourn his death, but having "crossed over the river," we are glad in the assurance that he now enjoys perfect peace and rest eternal in the presence of Almighty God.

Milton J. Heavner.

Milton J. Heavner was born October 9, 1875, and departed this life April 8, 1926, Mr. Heavner had something like the flu, and then took pneumonia. Members of the family say that they cannot remember his having medical doctor come to see him previous to the illness that caused his death. Mr. Heavner connected himself with the M. P. Church at Bess' Chapel in early life, and continued faithful to his Lord and church until death. He leaves four brothers, Marcus, D. C., J. W., and L. P aul of Lincoln County, two sisters, Mrs. R. F. Carpenter of Gastonia, and Mrs. R. G. Taylor of Lincoln county, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Mr. Heavner will be greatly missed in the home, community and church. We extend our prayers and sympathy to the relatives.

A CODE FOR PARENTS.

Science has its morality, and it is prepared to draw up for parents a code of conduct that will square the parents' influence with the child's needs.

Don't show off your child. It is not the duty of the child to feed a parent's vanity, but the parent's task to forget self-pride in dealing with his child.

Don't hurry your child. Adulthood is not a station toward which the child should be rushed, but a product of growth, and the growing process is the important thing. You can't hold children; they have to grow.

Don't use your child as a means of ridding yourself of emotions that you dare not express to equals.

Don't expect commands to function in place of fellowship. Children can be led but not driven in these days.

Don't lie to your child or permit any one else to do so. Your real opinions and beliefs may be far enough from the child's later judgment, but your deceit will be hopelessly blatant. Sentiment easily leads to false statements.

Don't use fear as a whip. Fear can only succeed by making slaves, and slaves, even when obedient, are poor substitutes for full human beings.

Don't stress the weakness of your child. He may take seriously what you point out to him and develop feelings of inferiority, or he may glue his attention on your own weakness and lose respect for you as a harping hypocrite.

Don't tell your child that he cannot reason. He can and will if you have the wit to help him.

Don't let your home crowd out your child; put the child first and adjust home life to his needs.

Don't be a tyrant to your child even if you have power. Children are helpless and long-suffering and usually generous in their judgment of parents. Nevertheless, a parent who drives his child from sheer love of dominance runs risk of soon losing the child's love. The child will some time be free, but the parent lonely.

The gist of it all is: Don't be emotionally childish if you desire manly and womanly children.—Ernest R. Groves, in Harper's Magazine.

Entered as second-class matter at the postoffice at Greensboro, N. C.

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is now in session in Memphis, Tenn. We note that it has again voted down the motion that it has voted so many times before; namely, the motion to let an annual conference elect its own presiding elders. It also voted down a motion to reduce a bishop's term of office to four years Regarding the union with the northern church it has appointed a committee to consider the matter for four years. Agitation or public discussion of the matter is discouraged. Evidently the church wishes to take a rest as to that subject.

—A distressing report comes from Warren county. W. L. Ross took the lives of a Mr. and Mrs. Odom in whose home a step daughter of Mr. Ross had been living. If we mistake not, Mr. Ross is a member of our church at Hollister. A shocking affair that cannot be viewed without sadness.

—Tabernacle church had an interesting memorial service last Sunday which was largely attended. Pastor Suits had prepared for it and his program was carried out and then some, as there were speeches not on the program. Dr. Dixon preached the sermon at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon Bros. J. Norman Hills and D. A. Neese spoke. There were several stirring songs by a large choir directed by Mr. Reynolds. There were a few brief volunteer speeches. The building of the present church was entered upon during the pastorate of Rev. R. H. Wills, and his son last Sunday suggested that the building be modernized by the addition of Sunday school rooms. We believe the present membership as well able to do this as the membership of forty years ago was able to build the church. Each generation wishes to have a part in the forward movements of the world. It would not surprise us to see Bro. Wills' suggestion taken seriously and to hear the people of Tabernacle say, "Let us rise and build." That is a center of influence which should have the best in the way of church, Sunday school, and day-school facilities.

—Calvary church received two more members last Sunday, or three if we count again Bro. Wagoner who had applied for membership the week before. The two were Bro. Bissett and Amos Hudson. We are glad to enroll them among us, believing that all will be regular in their attendance and devotion to the work of the church.

—The Stephens meetings here are expected to close next Sunday. There will be a union meeting of the churches at the tabernacle at eleven o'clock.

—Rev. H. S. B. Thompson should be addressed at Pleasant Hill, N. C.

Wasted Postage.—It is waste of postage to put special delivery stamps on letters directed to this paper or its editor. While our office is in the city, it is just outside the region of city mail delivery. In a case or two we have known the special delivery stamps to cause a delay of a day in the delivery of a letter.

THE BOSS OF THE TOWN.

"We don't like to criticize a minister," and Richard Lansing, the smooth-talking, well-dressed president of the Hampstead Chamber of Commerce, "especially one who has shown so many good qualities as you have since you moved here. Personally, we like you."

Homer Ralston, the young pastor lately assigned to a church at Hampstead, bowed. Lansing headed a committee of local business men who had called at the minister's study.

"But the viewpoint you took was something of a sensation. I requested Jacobs, editor of the Star, to pass it up."

"You did!"

There was a sudden flash in the young preacher's hitherto mild, gray eyes.

"Of course."

"Why?"

"I'll tell you why," said Lansing as he sat on the table and moved his hand in a characteristic argumentative way. "It offended—I mean it will seriously offend one of the big men of this town—Colonel Dank Fairmont. Of course, you didn't know that, and we're not disposed to blame you—it was a mistake. That's all. You'll see it in a minute. You see, Colonel Fairmont is a big investor here—has stores and factories and a big coal mine—employes a great many men."

The minister still failed to grasp the situation.

"These things of which you spoke last night are characteristic of all towns—Hampstead is no worse than any other," declared Lansing, and his fellow-committeemen nodded.

"There are many workmen here, and they patronize the local merchants. We have an immense payroll—it spells prosperity for the town."

"That's right, it does," added Bent Slidell, who operated the big department store. "The town would be dead without those working people."

"Did I say anything against them?" asked the bewildered minister.

"No—not exactly," returned Lansing. "I am coming to that. The embarrassing thing was your demand for a 'clean-up' campaign—to put the police after certain things. That would only stir up local factions and be very displeasing to Colonel Fairmont, who practically dictates the city administration because of his large interests here. He knows if you put these places out of business his men will not stay."

"Do you mean to say that Colonel Fairmont would be angry if he knew I preached a sermon against violating the liquor laws, permitting a dozen gambling games in upper rooms of the town, boys loafing 'round pool halls, improper shows at one of the theaters, all-night public dances—"

The minister's eyes were blazing now, and his hands were twitching.

"There, there," said Lansing, soothingly. "Don't get worked up. We're not here for the purpose of finding fault with you. We merely want to put you next to the local situation so you'll understand things better."

"I think I understand them now," retorted Ralston. "What I told in the pulpit last night I know to be true."

"To be true," admitted Lansing, smiling "True as true can be, but not—ah—diplomatic. That's what I mean. We're with you—theoretically. But as a practical business proposition it won't do."

"Would make every worker leave town," put in the man of the big store.

"You're an idealist, Brother Ralston," smiled Lansing. "You believe the millennium is here, or close—"

The telephone rang. Mr. Ralston responded, and after a moment's talk he turned to the committee.

"Colonel Fairmont wishes to see me," he said.

Lansing whistled.

"I'll bet the old man's red-headed," he said. "Guess we'd better go along with you."

That was the unanimous view of the committee, but Ralston said, indifferently:

"You can do as you like about that, gentlemen; but I assure you I'm not in the least bit uneasy."

Despite this rather unencouraging response, the committee thought it might be safer to

LIFE'S JOURNEY.

"Now, whither, my little sister,"
Said a woman old and gray,
"Go your helpless feet a roaming,
On the world's unsheltered way?"

"You, with your face of flowers,
And the youth bright in your eyes,
'Tis a weary way, my sister,
To tarry at home were wise."

"I must go, ho! good grey woman,"
Hath the little sister said,
"Out into the world of toilers,
That I may find me bread."

"Ah, child," said the old grey woman,
"There evil awaiteth thee."
"But nay," said the little sister,
"If my eyes no evil see!"

"And evil, with words beguiling,
Will whisper in thine ear."
"But nay," said the little sister,
"If my ears no evil hear."

"And, oh! but the world is ruthless.
There are few to pity thee,"
"But nay," said the little sister,
"My Father is close to me."

Out into the world she wandered
With her face like flowers sweet.
Earning her bread of toiling
In the marts of the busy street.

And evil, bedecked with roses,
Lured with the hues of sense,
She passed them all unseeing,
With her eyes of innocence.

And the tongues of evil, whispered,
Full many a guileful word;
But ears that are sealed to sinning,
Have never the whispers heard.

In no snares of evil spreading
Have her busy feet e'er trod,
For ever the little sister
Holds fast to the hand of God.

RURAL SUNDAY SCHOOL PIONEERING.

It is refreshing to find that the American Sunday School Union, in its one hundred and ninth year just closed, has operated as vigorously as ever. It finds in the outlying rural sections of practically every state of the Union a crying need for its service. Its Annual Meeting, held at its headquarters building in Philadelphia on May 11, developed interesting facts showing how it is meeting that need:

It has continued to organize on an average three new Sunday schools and to reopen two others for every day of the year, weekday and Sunday. These fifteen hundred new and reopened schools, with other thousands in continued operation, have been supervised by two hundred missionaries. Each of these men has made on an average more than a thousand visits to homes in his territory, which usually consists of several counties. In these rural homes some twenty-eight thousand Bibles or portions of the Bible, have been placed, as well as many other good books.

The schools are held in dayschool buildings, in abandoned churches, in grange halls and farm homes, under brush arbors, etc. They are in communities unable to support a church. In hundreds of them churches have been started and given up. In such communities the Union Sunday school, with local leadership developed and encouraged by the supervision of the missionary, is the one practical method of promoting religion in the community and giving boys and girls an opportunity for Christian education. In forty-one of these communities during the past year there has been such religious development that churches of various denominations—the local people always decide what—have grown out of Union Sunday schools; one hundred and eighty-five young people's societies were organized; three hundred and seventeen prayer meetings established, and two hundred and fourteen regular preaching stations opened.

One interesting development of the year has been along the line of Daily Vacation Bible School Work. Several hundred such schools were held last summer, largely in the open country under the direction of these missionaries. Special literature for this work has been produced, and a great development of it will be witnessed the coming season. Christian men and women familiar with the facts believe this is one of the most important and productive lines of Christian work going on in America at the present time, and many thousands of them in practically every state support it by their gifts.

The Society's Annual Report may be had by any interested reader who will send a request for it to 1816 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

DEDICATION OF THE GENNADEION, ATHENS, GREECE.

The dedication of the Gennadeion in Athens, Greece, April 23, 1926, is an event of world interest. It will greatly stimulate classical study and research in the history, literature, art and antiquities of Greece, the fountain head of all our Western civilization. It will also afford opportunity for and give stimulus to the study and better understanding of the history and constitution of the Greek Church, that Mother of Christianity, in which the Greek fathers inbued with the philosophy of Plato, first determined and expounded the dogmas of our common faith" and show the Protestant world, especially, its obligations to the Greek Church. It will further encourage and foster archaeological research in the land of Greece which, is not only the "Holy Land of the intellectual," but because of Paul's response to the Macedonian calls is a second Holy Land to the Christian student. The building erected at a cost of $300,000 by the Carnegie Corporation occupies a commanding site high up on the slope of Mt. Lycabettus overlooking the Acropolis and commanding a view of Phaleron Bay where the remnants of the fleet of Xerxes fled after its defeat at the battle of Salamis. It is erected to house the library of George Gennadius, the Greek patriot and scholar, and his son, Dr. Johannes Gennadius, who donates the collection of some 50,000 items covering the whole field of Greek history, literature and art from the most ancient records through the Byzantine period and on to the events of to day.

The building and the library are under the control of the American School of Classical Studies. This School was founded in 1881. The first president of the Board of Trustees was James Russel Lowell. At the present time, William Caleb Loring, formerly Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusette is Pres. of the Board. The management of the institution is in the hands of a Managing Committee composed of representatives, at present, of forty-four leading American institutions of learning. The Chairman of this Managing Committee, Dr. Edward Capps, of Princeton University and former American Minister to Greece, is the executive head.

This American institution under American administration by the acquisition of the Gennadius library so splendidly housed, takes at once place in the front rank of learned bodies in Europe and is enabled to afford unparalleled facilities to scholars from all parts of the world in the study of the history, literature and art to which all civilization is most deep-

THE NEW FREEDOM.

Will H. B[illegible].

M. Maurice Maeterlinck, the noted author, was once a slave to the tobacco habit, says the Irish Tobacco Trade Journal. He found that constant smoking impaired his mental functions, and decided that something had to be done. Instead of giving up smoking entirely, however, he arranged for supplies of a denicotinised preparation, so now fills the bowl of his pipe with this, "tasteless and harmless."

The same publication says that many smokers in Ireland have been talking of "striking." on the use of tobacco until the prices come down, but "while most smokers are applauding the aim in view, comparatively few find heroism enough to take such a drastic step, and it is doubtful, therefore, whether the attempt will succeed." Slavery to the weed naturally means slavery to almost any price that may be asked for it. No greater freedom could come to the average victim of the tobacco habit, than freedom from the enslaving effect of the nicotine upon mind, body and soul.

Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage, the great preacher, was at one time a slave to the cigar habit, reaching the point when he could not write his sermons without a lighted cigar at hand. This aroused him to the condition of slavery in which he found himself, and he resolved to be absolutely free from the habit. He kept his resolution, and wrote: "The first cigar made us desperately sick; the throwing away of the last one made us gloriously well. For us the croaking of the midnight owl hath ceased, and the time of the singing of birds has come."

MOTHERS AS NATION MAKERS.

When we take off the hat to the American flag, we are taking off the hat to American motherhood. We ascribe high honor to the men who have made and molded our national life, but in almost every instance we may look back of the men and discover a noble mother.

George Washington was only eleven years old when his father died, leaving the widowed mother, Mary Washinbton, with five children to educate and train. In that widowed home the principles of the religion of Christ were taught. Around the mother's knee the children were gathered, and from a little manual, in which she had written her maxims, she taught her children the principles of religion and morality. That manual was preserved as one of George Washington's most valuable treasures.

It is said that a French general, on retiring from the presence of Mary Washington, remarked, "It is not surprising that America should produce great men, since she can boast of such mothers."

By the side of Washington's name stands that of Abraham Lincoln as a great factor in determining our national life.

Down in southern Indiana is a modest granite monument erected to the honor of Naney Hanks Lincoln, the mother of the great President. All his biographers tell how Lincoln was influenced by the memory of his mother, the patient, care-worn, overworked woman who laid down her life when her son Abraham was but a boy. Before she died, she taught her son his letters and gave him his first lesson in writing. At her death, there in the backwoods country, the boy sought far to find an itinerant preacher who could come and preach a funeral sermon for his mother.

"All that I am and hope to be I owe to my angel mother. Blessings on her memory," are the words of Lincoln, the man. "I can remember her prayers, and they have always followed me. They have clung to me all my life."

Going back to the earlier days of the nation, we find that such men as Andrew Jackson, Thomas Jefferson, and John Quincy Adams had great mothers.

A few days previous to the birth of Andrew Jackson his father died, and the widow and her two little sons rode to the churchyard in the wagon with the coffin. The support of the family fell upon the mother. She went to the home of her brother-in-law and there worked as housekeeper, caring for and educating her sons until they were old enough to care for themselves.

When Andrew Jackson became President he said of his mother: "One of the last injunctions given me by her was never to institute a suit for assault and battery or for defamation; never to wound the feelings of others nor to suffer my own to be outraged. These were her words of admonition to me I remember them well, and have never failed to respect them."

Thomas Jefferson was a lad of fourteen when his father died, but up until that time the boy had lived under the influences of his mother more than of his busy father. At the father's death she became the guardian of her children's interests.

John Quincy Adams' home training was largely under the direction of his mother, his father being much away from home while engaged in political activities.

When John Quincy Adams became President, he wrote: "Being taught by my mother to love my country, I did it literally by learning to love the actual hills and rocks and trees and the very birds and animals." He once declared, "All that I am, my mother made me."

When James A. Garfield was on the way to his inauguration as President at Washington he turned to his mother and said, "It is all because of you, mother."

When the father of James A. Garfield was on his dying bed in a log cabin in the wilderness bordering the Ohio River, he said to his wife: "Eliza, I have brought you four young saplings into these woods. Take care of them."

James was two years old then. The mother was left to fight the battle alone. She worked hard, managed well, and found enough time to give her sons daily lessons in Bible reading. When James was old enough, he drove mules on the towpath on the Ohio Canal, earning money which went to his mother.

When young Garfield was a student, spending a holiday with his classmates on a mountain, as darkness gathered about them at the fall of night, he took a Testament from his pocket and said to his companions: "Boys I read a chapter every night simultaneously with my mother. If you please, I will read it now."

Mothers made the sacrifices in the Civil War that preserved the Union and abolished slavery.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, a war meeting was held in Poland, Ohio. There was speaking and beating of drums and an appeal for volunteers. The first to step forward was William McKinley.

"No, my son," said his father, seeking to restrain him; "you are too young."

"No, he is not too young. None are too young to carry a light in this dark hour," said the noble mother of the young man who was to play an important part in the direction of his country's affairs.

The most beautiful pictures ever seen at the inauguration of a President was when William McKinley, having taken the oath of office as President of the United States, stepped over to where his mother sat and kissed her.—Exchange.

Policeman (to bespectacled fat professor who has witnessed smash)—You say you saw the accident, sir. What was the number of the car that knocked this man down?

Professor Matteossian—I'm afraid I've forgotten it. But I remember noticing that if it was multiplied by itself, the cube root of the product would be equal to the sum of the digits reversed.

DISTRICT RALLY.

The District Rally will be held at Brown Summit Saturday and Sunday May 29 and 30th. The churches of Greensboro, Reidsville, Haw River, Kernersville, Draper, and Flat Rock charges are included in this district. All the people of these charges are earnestly invited to bring their dinner and spend the day, both Saturday and Sunday. The first service will begin at 9:30 A. M. Saturday. The program for the rally may not be published in the Herald, as it is not yet completed. However, be assured that a number of subjects vital to the life of our church and to the progress of the Kingdom will be discussed by interesting speakers. Come in large numbers and let us make this a great rally. I trust that Sunday school superintendents and leaders of young people's groups will announce this rally to your people and bring them to the services. Thank you for your cooperation.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, May 9th, was spent on Haw River Circuit with Rev. W. D. Reed and his people. Rev. T. F. McCulloch accompanied me and preached at two of the churches, Friendship and Mizpah, and I preached at the other three churches.

At 11:00 A. M. I preached at Fairgrove, the old Mother Methodist Protestant Church of Rockingham County, at 3:00 P. M. at Midway, and at 8:00 P. M. at Brown Summit. My boyhood days were spent around Fairgrove and Midway, and in these two churches my first efforts at church services were made. It is always a great pleasure to go back into these two communities and meet with those of other days, who drop all formalities and all titles and call a fellow by his given name.

I enjoyed preaching to the people, and they responded splendidly to the truth.

I was glad to find the people of one section of this splendid charge thinking and talking about a Community Church. This will be to the honor and glory of God and to the betterment of the conditions both for pastor and people if it can be properly worked out, and properly located. May the dear Father give these dear people the grace and the good judgment to work it out wisely and well.

Then at Midway the need is so urgent for immediate action in building a new church that these good people are confidently looking forward to and planning for the erection of a new building this fall. May they be given wisdom and courage for the task.

At Brown Summit, a Mother's Day program was rendered by the children, followed by the preaching service, and we had a good time together.

Bro. Reed and his good wife are doing a splendid work on Haw River Charge, and the people love them.

Meeting At Grace Church.

On Tuesday about one hundred of us gathered in Grace Church, Greensboro, to think and to plan for greater things for the High Point College. Some Committees were appointed to carry out the plans of the meeting, and you will hear from these committees in due time.

Funeral Service.

On Wednesday, May 12th, I conducted the funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Sarah Cox Stout, one of our Mothers in Israel who died in the home of her daughter, Mrs Trogdon, near Asheboro on May 11th. She was a sister of the late O. R. Cox of Asheboro.

Board Meeting of Woman's Home Missionary Society

May 12 to 15th the Board meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society was held in the High Point College, and in the First Methodist Protestant Church, High Point. Some one else, I take it, will report this meeting more fully. It was my privilege to attend most of these meetings.

The women in attendance from other conferences were delighted in every way with the college, and with the student body, and with the college.

Tabernacle Charge.

Sunday, May 16th, was spent at Tabernacle Church on Tabernacle Charge. Rev. Edward Suits is the pastor, and he has already gotten a good hold on his people and the work is going forward splendidly.

Sunday was Memorial Day at Tabernacle and there was a large crowd present. People were present from all the churches on the Charge, from Greensboro, from High Point, and from other Charges. it was a good day and will doubtless mean much for the worn on that important Charge. It was my privilege to preach to the people Sunday morning. I enjoyed it, and many of them said they did.

In the afternoon Dr. J. F. McCulloch read a brief history of this splendid Country church, Mr. J. Norman Wills and Mr. D. A. Neese made addresses, and others short talks.

This is one of our strongest country churches and it would be fine to see it become a station at an early date. It could support its own preacher, and have one of the very best of Community Churches.

Children's Day.

It is good to note that so many of our churches and Sunday schools are plannin tg hold the Children's Day Services. If your church is not already planning for this important service, please plan at once by ordering the programs from Rev. F. C. Klein, D. D., Berwyn, Md., and prepare for the service. Every Sunday school in the entire Conference should hold this service. The offering goes to Foreign Missions helps to pay your General Conference Budget, and should be sent to Mr. Children's Day .

accompany the minister on his mission to the great man of Hampstead; he was young and didn't appreciate the significance of such a meeting as they did.

Colonel Fairmont's offices were in the second story of one of his large factories, near the junction of two railroads that entered Hampstead. The "boss" was a large, stalwart man, a shade over fifty. His smooth face had hardly a wrinkle in it, despite his many active years. There was nothing of craft about the blue eyes. He looked with some surprise as he opened the door of his private office and saw, instead of the preacher, a group of men. Lansing smilingly explained:

"We were in consultation here with Brother Ralston when you called. The sermon last night was the subject—unfortunate affair—Brother Ralston, I am quite sure, spoke under a misapprehension as to the local situation—he didn't mean any harm."

"If you called me to speak about the sermon last night, Colonel Fairmont," said Ralston calmly, "I have no apologies to make."

The committee regarded the young minister with furious indignation, and Lansing started to say something when Colonel Fairmont held up his hand.

"Be seated, gentlemen," he said. Then to Ralston: "It was about that sermon I wished to speak to you. Would you mind giving me the main points of what you said?"

While Ralston spoke, Colonel Fairmont listened with grave attention. Once or twice the blue eyes lighted up, but he gave no other indication as to the impression made upon him until Ralston finished speaking, when he said:

"Mr. Ralston, will you please, in our presence, dictate to my stenographer those things which you think are of importance to be done by our city administration?"

"I'll do it with pleasure."

Lansing and his committee listened in perplexed silence as Ralston, in tones clear to all and with a vigor of expression that admitted no qualifying doubt, enumerated, paragraph by paragraph, what he conceived to be the necessary rules to be rigidly enforced to make Hampstead a clean, orderly city. While he dictated, the committee was conscious of the throbbing machinery of the great factory and thought of the consequences to its hundreds of operatives and to other hundreds in various industries of the town.

When the dictation was finished, the stenographer handed the sheets to Colonel Fairmont, who looked them over carefully and then spoke to the committee.

"Gentlemen," he said, "it has recently come to my knowledge that the condition referred to by Mr Ralston in his sermon Sunday night exists in Hampstead. That is why I sent for him. The man who has served this town as mayor the last two years, has broken faith with me by permitting these abuses to develop, and will not be re-elected. The man to be mayor of Hampstead the next two years must run on this platform written by Mr. Ralston, and if he doesn't make good we will turn him out. I am trusting to you gentlemen to report to me in case the new mayor fails us.

This appalling declaration by the "boss of the town" made the committee gasp. They had known things were running "wide-open" at Hampstead, but supposed it was understood by the "boss." Then there occurred to Lansing an insuperable obstacle in the way of this "idealistic" platform.

"But, Colonel," he protested, "there is your working men—what will they say about such drastic measures?"

"I'm glad you spoke of them," returned Colonel Fairmont. "The workmen at these plants are mostly men with families. They have homes and are putting money in the bank. We encourage all our men to save their money. It is only a few of the new ones who spend their wages for drink or at gambling or for vicious amusements. If they do they do not stay with us long, for they will not become expert workmen, and we want no other kind. If you think the operation of these bad places is an inducement to workmen you have made a grievous mistake, gentlemen."

As the committee passed through the large factory yard the whistle over the power-house gave the noon call. The throb of the machinery ceased. Soon men and boys and girls began pouring through the doors. Ralston motioned to his companions to stand to one side with him to watch the workers. They were clear-eyed, healthy, and in the best of spirits. A man in blue overalls approached the group and held out his hand to the minister.

"Mr. Ralston," he said, "the wife and I were out to your meeting last night, and we were mighty glad to hear you attack those wretched places. The men who run them have escaped prosecution by telling the people of the town the workers want them. It is not true. Every workman I know would be glad if Hampstead was rid of them."

"We've been a set of dunces, Bill," put in Lansing, "but we're on the right track now and, with Brother Ralston here and the boss we're going to clean 'em up."—EdgarWhite, in Religious Telescope

SOLDIER ENTOMBED ALIVE.

During the winter that George Washington and his troops were at Valley Forge a young Virginian, Lieut. Arthur Carrington, disappeared and was believed to have deserted. More than a century later granite quarries were opened at French Creek Falls, 12 miles from Valley Forge. In the course of the work a cave was opened and in it was found the skeleton of a man. A rusty musket lay beside it and bits of rusty metal that had once been buttons and other parts of a uniform were scattered among the bones.

In gathering up the bones for burial a glass bottle was found. It contained a letter to Miss Virginia Randolph, evidently the dead man's sweetheart. The letter was signed with the name of the missing officer of the Continental army, and had been written in blood. It told how he had been sent out from camp in charge of a small foraging expedition, how they were cut off and pursued by a large party of British, how he knew of a cave where his foragers could lie concealed until the enemy had given up the search, because on a previous expedition he had hidden his horse in this cave while scouting.

But, by the time he and his party reached the rocks the British were close. He abandoned his horse and fled with the men on foot, but he was the only one to reach the cave. His men were taken prisoners by the British. Because the enemy knew the place was full of caves they did not search for him. They simply fired their rifles a number of times in the hope of frightening him into surrendering. A volley was fired close to the cave where he was hiding. The shots loosened a huge rock partly over-hanging the mouth of the cave where he was. As it fell it blocked the exit.

The young officer was frightened at first, but was reassured of eventual escape by light entering the cave from another direction. When he was convinced that the English were gone he attempted to get out, but discovered that the light came from a small crack in the roof, far out of reach, and only large enough to pass a hand through. After many frantic efforts to move the stone that sealed his prison he resigned himself to death by starvation and wrote he record of his fate in his own blood. His bones were buried in the churchyard at St. Mary's five miles away.—Pathfinder.

A soldier went to his colonel and asked for leave to go home to help his wife with her spring cleaning. "I don't like to refuse you," said the colonel, "but I've just received a letter from your wife saying that you are no use around the house."

The soldier saluted and turned to go. At the door he stopped, turned and remarked: "Colonel, there two persons in this regiment who handle the truth loosely, and I'm one of them. I'm not married."

—Chicago is planning another world's fair. It is scheduled to be held in 1933.

—Over 10,000 persons marched in a parade at Atlanta, Ga., in protest against the attempt to modify the dry law. Most of the marchers represented Sunday-schools.

—Oscar Straus, diplomat and philanthropist, died in New York at the age of 76. He was the first Jew to be appointed to the cabinet, serving as secretary of commerce under Roosevelt. He was once minister to Turkey. He was an advocate of the league of nations. Born of Bavarian parents, Mr. Straus came to this country as an immigrant when four years old.

—Susan Lawrence, noted labor leader, was elected to the English house of commons and took her seat there among cheers from the membership. There are now five lady members of the lower house of parliament.

—Shapurji Saklatvala, communist member of parliament who was barred from the United States last summer, was sentenced to two months in prison for making a seditious, speeech in Hyde Park, London. A policeman made shorthand notes of his speech in which he called on soldiers to refuse to fight, and in which he declared the Union Jack had harbored only fools and rogues for hundreds of years. On his refusal to furnish bond to keep the peace for a year the prison sentence was imposed.

—By a vote of nearly two to one the reichstag turned down the bill to confiscate the property of the former kaiser and the royal family. Only socialists and communists voted for it. The bill provided for plebiscite on the question, and such a plebiscite must soon be held under the constitution because 12,500,000 voted for it in the last election. Reichstag leaders insisted on indemnification.

HOW TO ACCOMPLISH IT.

You can easily raise one-quarter of your General Conference budget, brother pastor, by having your Sunday school or schools hold a Children's Day Service, and have the beautiful collection envelopes the Board sends used to secure an offering. The Board gets 25 per cent of the budget, and by this plan you will help your own work, and render a valuable service to the Board.

If supplies have not been ordered for your school, send to me at once at Berwyn, Md. There is no charge for supplies, and orders have prompt attention.

If for any reason your school cannot hold a regular service, order the supplies, and distribute them for the valuable information and pictures of the work the music pamphlet contains, and take a special offering for foreign missions.

Offerings of any amount will be gratefully received, but must be sent to your annual conference treasurer with the plain statement the offering is from Children's Day or is a Special offering for foreign missions.

What the Church Pays to Run Nagoya College

By the reconstructed budget for the year 1926-1927, the Japan Mission asked the Union Board to appropriate only EIGHT HUNDRED AND NINETY-THREE DOLLARS on the year's expenses. They include salaries of 30 teachers, secretaries, etc, fuel and light, taxes, laboratory material, general and special repairs of buildings, etc. So far as the church in America is concerned, the institution is practically self-supporting.

The enrollment is 1146 male students, and the expected expenses are over Yen 622,000.-00, and from examination fees, and monthly tuition, etc the income will reach to within Yen 1186—or U. S. $593.00.

Has the Methodist Protestant Church ever made an investment comparable to this? It imparts Christian education, yearly evangelistic meetings are held, and this year again a pastor is assigned there, and year before last a large number became Christians. Our foremost pastors are graduates, and more are on the way. The Japanese Government thinks so well of the school it gives annually a grant of money for teacher's salaries.

173 graduated at Commencement March 5th, but every year students are turned away for lack of room.

Many of its graduates have risen to positions of influence, and retain for the institution esteem and devotion which have been much in evidence.

It will be recalled that they, and the students and friends promised to contribute yen 70,000.00, or $25,000.00 to build two wings to our main building, and they are occupied, and to erect a structure which, on account of its size and uses, must be made of cement instead of wood, as required by government regulations.

Word has just come that the student body will contribute Yen 8,000.00 towards the greatly needed Science Hall, and the Board is asked to contribute Yen 2,000.00, or $1,000.

This will increase the students contribution considerably over the original amount, Yen 50,000.00.

It is exceedingly gratifying that graduates, students and friends thus evince their purpose to stand by us in developing that institution, and is also worthy testimony to the value and benefits of the work our church is doing for the young manhood of that populous section of the Empire.

The Union Board is calling upon all our Sunday schools, with the above striking example of how economically our foreign missionary work is being conducted, to hold a Children's Day Service, and to put forth extra efforts to secure a large offering for foreign missions, that we may meet the demands upon us, and carry forward the great work We are counting on your help.

Fred C. Klein.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

Better news this time! The Rally Day offerings did not fall as far beyond those of the last year as we anticipated. The total came to $13617.47 or $1437.00 less than the year before. However, since now the cost of the program is borne by the Budget Council we actually had more to distribute.

The deficit in the General Conference Budget distribution was $9500 which is a little less than we expected. This shortage has caused no little embarrassment to our colleges and seminary since we had that much less to distribute than the year before. We, of course hope that the situation will improve next year. Unless it does our entire educational program will be in jeopardy.

Here are the final returns for Rally Day:

Maryland, $4374.69; Ohio, $3282.92; Pittsburgh, $1304.24; Eastern, $887.92; Indiana $859.94; Michigan, $577.36; West Virginia $576.47; Onondaga, $370.72; Kansas, $305.58; North Carolina, $279.26; Illinois, $277.38; Alabama, $149.25; Iowa-Missouri, $144.04. Arkansas, $77.63; Texas, $75.00 Kentucky, $17.-50; Georgia, $12 42; Col.-Texas (Col.), $10; Miscellaneous, $6.

Total, $13617.47.

Ten conferences show decreased returns and eleven increases. The largest increase is by the Michigan conference while the largest decrease is by the Pittsburgh Conference. Where the returns are smaller it is due in large measure to the exceedingly disagreeable weather during October while in Maryland Pittsburgh and North Carolina "counter attractions" seem to be to blame.

The return payments from ministerial beneficiaries were $743 larger than the year before. We are grateful for the earnest effort that was made to give us the help so much needed. It was not necessary to draw as heavily from the Budget receipts as at first seemed likely. That meant we had more to distribute to our schools. The return payments came to $2416.50. We are setting $3000 as the goal for the new year.

In response to urgent appeals sent to those who have occasionally contributed to the Student Loan Fund we have received several hundred dollars which greatly relieved the situation. We anticipate our needs for next year will be larger than ever judging from applications already received. We closed the fiscal year with unpaid obligations of $830. Our invested fund increased $2100.00.

The return payments from the Student Loan Fund beneficiaries were substantially larger this year than ever before. The interest payments on these loans was fifty percent larger also. Of the nearly $9000 in outstanding loans not over $500 should be classed as "bad debts." In only two or three cases are we in doubt about the willingness of the individual to meet their obligation.

A letter received recently from a friend of college days informed me that he is keeping one student in Adrian college paying all the regular college expenses. He says he intends to have one student in Adrian every year just as long as the good Lord will let him live and work. That is not only a very generous thing to do but is the manisfestation of a spirit that fine service is probably being practiced in some of our other schools.

A number of applications for help from both our Ministerial and Student Loan Funds have been received recently. We have no way of telling at this early date just what our requirements are going to be. They promise to be nearly if not as great as the year just closed.

The annual meeting of the Board of Education will be held in the office of the Executive Secretary in the Publishing Building, N. S. Pittsburgh, Pa., May 19 at 9:00. The presidents of the colleges and seminary have been invited to either appear before the Board to present any matters they have in mind or to send communications. Matters of the utmost importance must be considered.

In spite of the shortened income for our work during the fiscal year which closed April 30 there has been much to encourage and some things over which to rejoice. The Secretary is very grateful for the cordial reception accorded him everywhere. The effort being made to quicken the interest and arouse the conscience of our people relative to the importance of Christian education and the need of trained leaders to man our pulpits and to support the work of the Kingdom in the regular activities of the church is meeting with a stimulating response. The improved financial situation in three or four of our schools together with the increase in student enrollment is a tribute not only to the splendid leadership of our administrators but is indicative of the substantial support the Board of Education has been giving them the last ten years. If each school were adequately endowed it would increase their usefulness many fold. Frank W. Stephenson.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Humility.

Text: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." James 5:6.

The process of civilization tends to encourage conceit. Industry, learning and promotion combine to make human beings think more highly of themselves than they ought to think. Prosperity, riches, and pleasure are breeding an array of fools of the conceited class. It is time to call a halt, and let man take an accurate account of himself. Is he a lord of creation or a mere worm of the dust? Is he the loud-boasted product of self-vaunting evolution, or just a poor sinner fit for hell? Is he the architect of his own fortune, or just a beneficiary of the bounty and grace of God?

There is no creature, high or low, in whom humility is more necessary and becoming than it is in man. There is a reason for this humility, a purpose in it, and a reward for it.

First, let us consider

The Reason for Humility.

The first and biggest reason is the awful outstanding sin of the race and of the individual. Compared to the holy God the average human being shows up as black as hades. The centrifugal outcroppings of human nature are evil, only evil, and that continually. So many of human virtues even are polluted with the foul stench of sin. The unregenerate human heart is a veritable volcano casting forth its lava of rebellion, corruption, and death.

Another reason for humility is man's total inability to do anything worthwhile without the resources, wisdom, and strength provided by the Father of mercies. The Psalmist sets forth man's inability in this regard: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain."

A third reason for humility is man's undeservings of the least of the goodness of God. Sin is a gigantic forfeit of favor in any realm of God's sovereignty. The boasted rights of life, property, liberty, and pursuit of happiness are empty mouthings, viewed from the dark, damnable fact of the fall. All these were forfeited by the first sin. But they have been extended to the race out of the infinite mercy of the Almighty. Man is deserving of death, desolation and destruction. Therefore let him prostrate his body in the dust, put his hand to his lips and cry, "Unclean, unclean."

In the next place let us consider

The Purpose of Humility.

The prime purpose of humility is to give God a chance. Conceit and self-assertiveness balk the benevolent omnipotence of the Most High. The blacksmith cannot repair the simplest tool unless it becomes perfectly pliant in his hand. Likewise the merciful Artificer of soiled souls and ruined lives cannot do anything until the individual becomes humble penitent and submissive.

Another purpose of humility is to gain comparative immunity from the destructive assaults of sin. The darts of the devil usually fly high. The higher a person gets in his own esteem, or in the opinions of the world, the more of the temptations of life will he encounter. The lowminded escape to a large extent these struggles with sin. It is in the valley of humiliation where the plodding pilgrim gets rid of his pack of carnality and sinful habit. Humility imparts freedom to the citizenship of the kingdom.

A third purpose of humility is to allow one to "render unto the Lord the glory due unto His name." Conceit is highway robbery, in which the proud individual relegates to himself the credit and glory that belong to God alone. Praise and thanksgiving have a most luxuriant growth and fruitage from the evil of humility. The more humble any one becomes the more thankful he will be. "In everything give thanks." "Praise ye the Lord."

In the third place let us consider.

The Rewards of Humility.

"Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." This mighty hand is mighty to dispense every promised blessing. "For every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

A prominent blessing conditioned upon humility is contentment. The humble person does not expect much, and in this he will not be disappointed. A very little will make him perfectly happy. The person of conceit lays claim to a great deal, and in many sore disappointments he becomes discontented to a large degree. And large unhappiness is grown from the soil of personal pride. "But godliness with contentment is great gain."

Another blessing of humility is the larger faith that claims "the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of peace." To the woman of Syrophenicia who was so willing to take a dog's place in the kingdom of God Jesus said, "O woman, great is thy faith." And of the centurian who felt too unworthy for Jesus to come into his home Jesus said, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."

And humility is a sure passport into that blessed fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. It is the lowliest of the lowly that will share the most intimate association with the Holiest of the holy. And this association in the life that now is will be but a foretaste of the larger, fuller, and sweeter association in the life to come.

And let us close with the Savior's words upon our lips and in our hearts: "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

NOTICE.

Dr. Lewis' new book "The Minister and His Own Soul" is being mailed out to those who subscribed for it at our last Annual Conference. I have a few copies that were not subscribed for. Those desiring a copy can secure same by sending $1.25 to L. W. Gerringer, 1113 Bellevue St., Greensboro, N. C. You perhaps recall that our conference voted to take one hundred copies of this book and I was requested to distribute these books and collect for them. Please let me have the price as soon as you receive your copy. This book should prove interesting to laymen as well as ministers. In fact a number of laymen did subscribe for the book, one layman taking four copies.

Thank you to help me dispose of these books and settle for them as early as possible.

MEETING OF HOME BOARD.

The Woman's Home Board of Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church met in High Point College last week in its thirty-third session. The theme of the entire meeting was "Tested by the way of Christ". A number of North Carolina ministers conducted the morning worship periods, which were combined with the College chapel services, and their assigned topics were closely correlated with the general theme. These worship periods were very helpful and added much to the meetings.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews welcomed the visitors to our state and told them something of the progress being made throughout North Carolina and called attention to the fact that our denomination is keeping pace with the progress. Mrs. A. P. Badger responded to the address of welcome and not only in this but throughout the meeting were many expressions of appreciation of visible attainments of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina.

Forty delegates came representing Indiana Pa., Md., W. V., Ohio, Mich., Washington, D. C., Ky., and N. Y., and a number were present each session from our own state.

The reports of the officers and workers were encouraging, showing development in all phases of the work. Dr. and Mrs. Woodford brought from Pine Ridge a report of the best year's work yet done; the new High School Building was erected during the year and the first class (five girls) graduated from high school. Dr. and Mrs. Woodford are now enjoying a much deserved vacation and their many friends in North Carolina will be interested in their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary and traveling from Norfolk, Va., to Washington, D. C., over the same route they chose twenty-five years ago.

The Pittsburgh mission work has enlarged its activities during the year and now two stations are ministering to the needs of the foreigners in that city. It was a pleasure to have Miss Emily Grace Brown attend the meeting and hear her tell her experiences and of the splendid work she has started at Empire, Ohio. The Baltimore Girls' Home is yet to be established but the need is more evident than ever. Now that $7000.00 is in hand for this work it is believed definite steps will be taken soon. Miss Mabelle Shafer, who has the distinction of being the first woman graduate of the Theological Seminary at Westminster, Md., was present and will now enter actively upon her duties as Field Secretary. Rev. Homer Casto and Rev. F. G. Lowdermilk gave reports of their work and we feel that the representatives from the other states will carry back to their societies much information concerning Bethel Home and The Children's Home.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Mrs. A. G. Dixon, Greensboro, N. C.
First Vice President, Mrs. H. E. Risler, Baltimore, Md.
Second Vice President, Mrs. D. S. Gadd of Indianapolis, Ind.

Mrs. Mary C. Terrell.

Mrs. Mary C. Terrell, widow of the late James T. Terell, died April 4, 1926, at the age of a little more than 70 years—just about a month and a half more than the allotted three score and ten years.

Mr. and Mrs. Terrell had been married about fifty years when he preceded her to the glory world about eight months ago.

The fact that Mrs. Terrell had become a Christian years ago, she was able to bear with Christian fortitude the prolonged and at times intense suffering entailed by a protracted illness. I think I have never known any one to be able to continue so long to be so weak and so sick as she was during the last weeks of her life.

Her membership was first at Hebron. She then became a charter member of the Mebane church when it was built. She was unable to attend much in recent years, but worshipped in her home. She, as did her husband, felt the pastor had not really made a visit unless there was prayer before he went.

The funeral at the church was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. S. Garner of the Presbyterian Church. The large attendance and the beautiful flowers indicated a broad interest and deep sympathy for the sorrowing friends and loved ones.

She leaves three daughters, Mrs. J. A. Smith, Mrs. L. F. Wilkinson, and Mrs. G. J. McCauley; four sons, Oda, Claude, Eugene, and Clarence Terrell, all of Mebane, and eight grand children. T. M. Johnson.

"GOOD IN THE WORST" ETC.

Six years ago a Milwaukee youth, with the aid of a companion, held up a store, getting only about $25 for his trouble, but when he was brought before the judge he was sentenced to 25 years in prison. Enough to take the optimism out of any man! But this Milwaukee youth, who before his arrest had always been under the impression that the world owed him a living because he had never had a real chance to make one for himself, began to change his philosophy toward life after he had been in prison a few days.

The young convict got it into his head that he would like to study; he had never received much education. So through a University of Wisconsin extension course he took up simple arithmetic. He had to work overtime in prison to pay for his tuition. When he finished arithmetic the youth took up algebra and electrical engineering mathematics. Later he studied electrical engineering. He made high grades in his examinations.

Somewhere hidden in this young convict was a genius for inventing. He conceived the idea of an electric sign and flasher; he worked this out and patented his invention. Now this inventor-convict is working out other ideas, among which are two devices for use in knitting hosiery. But the best thing of all this Milwaukee youth has done is to set an example to other men in prison. The world owes no-one a living, but it will reward generously anyone who is willing to apply himself to useful work and be honest with himself.—The Pathfinder.

—Mr. L. T. Cates, evangelistic singer of Burlington, has some open dates for June and latter part of July. Any church or pastor desiring his services can reach him at the above address.

"Which steamship will you take on your European trip?"

"Oh, we're going by airship?"

"But there is no airship service to Europe yet."

"But there will be by the time my wife is ready to go."

Two men were walking down the main street of a country town when one of them took off his hat and bowed respectfully to an old gentleman who was passing.

"I owe more to that man than to anyone else on earth," he said.

"Did he give you your first chance in life?"

"No: he's my landlord."

Smiff—What sort of a chap is Matteossian?

Bjones—Well, if you ever see two men in a corner, and one looks bored to death, the other is Matteossian.

Excavation contractor (to applicant)—Do you think you are fit for really hard labor?

Hard case—Well, sir, some of the best judges have thought so.

THANK YOU.

Announcement was made in the Herald last week that the editor of the Young People's Page had been elected to succeed Dr. E. A. Sexsmith as Executive Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work of the denomination. This made it necessary, of course, for me to give up my work as President of the North Carolina Board. This I regretted to do because of the fine association, fellowship and cooperation I have had with all the workers in the old North State.

I want to take this method of saying "Thank You" to every worker in North Carolina who has helped us put over our program for the young people of our church. Every member of the Board, every Department Superintendent, and as far as I know every pastor and young people's leader has given heartiest cooperation. It has been a great privilege to work with you and for you, and I deeply appreciate your assistance and cooperation.

I am praying that you may give my successor the same hearty support you have given me, and I am sure you will.

Prof. Lindley Elected President.

At the meeting of the Board of Young People's Work of the North Carolina Conference held in Greensboro, Tuesday afternoon, Prof P. E. Lindley, of High Point College, was elected the new president. Prof. Lindley has had wide experience in young people's work and knows at first hand the educational need of our field in North Carolina. He will make a most efficient and capable leader. The retiring president bespeaks for him your loyal cooperation and support.

The Summer Conference.

Plans were completed in the meeting Tuesday for the greatest Young People's Summer Conference we have ever had. Our faculty includes the finest leaders we can secure. ALL WE NEED NOW ARE FOLKS! We are expecting four hundred young people and their friends at High Point College for the conference, July 19-26. The meeting will open on Monday evening and will close the following Monday noon. SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON MAY 30.

Jacob at Bethel.

Lesson Text: Gen. 28:10-22.

Golden Text: Gen. 28:15.

The Central Truth: The atonement of Jesus Christ is the ladder that unites heaven and earth, and God and man, and along which man's prayers go up and God's blessings come down.

Scriptural Points.

1. Jacob had bought Esau's birthright with a mess of pottage, and by deception had gained the patriarchal blessing. Esau resented this loss most deeply, and purposed to kill Jacob. Upon the advice and direction of mother and father Jacob started on a long journey afoot in Padanaram.

2. His first night out he had a wonderful vision of a ladder uniting heaven and earth. God was standing at heaven's end of the ladder, and angels were ascending and descending upon it. This vision was evidence of God's choice of Jacob to assume a large patriarchal responsibility, to share the covenant made with Abraham and renewed with Isaac, and to stand in the line of the Messianic ancestry.

3. This vision set forth the chief function of the coming Messiah, to save the fallen race by making an atonement for the sins of the entire world. By the sacrifice of Himself He would bridge the long and awful chasm of separation between a holy God and sinful man. By means of this ladder of redemption God had come down to man, that man might ascend up to God. Angels, conveying the supplications of man, would go up to God, and angels, conveying blessings, would come down to man.

4. And God, standing above the ladder, renewed with Jacob the fourfold covenant. 1. "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac." This is a pledge of unfailing care and loving kindness. 2. "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." This is a promise of a large earthly inheritance. 3. "And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth." This is an assurance of a countless posterity. 4. "And in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This is the pledge that the Messiah would impart blessings to the entire world.

5. Furthermore the Lord God gave assurances to Jacob that He would be his life-long Guardian, that He would protect his person, direct his steps, and greatly enrich his life.

6. "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." Our God is every where present. Happy is the man that becomes keenly conscious of this fact. He shall feast upon the goodness of the Lord.

7. "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." The place of access to God is wherever God's love touches man and man's faith touches God.

8. "And he called the name of that place Bethel." This means the house of God. God has three homes. Heaven is the home from which He dispenses sovereignty. The church is the home in which He receives worship and bestows blessing. The believing soul is the home in which He imparts and partakes of a continual feast.

9. Jacob made a threefold vow upon a fourfold condition. He vowed to take the true and living God to be his God, to make the pillar of sacrifice to become God's house, and to pay tithes of all acquired property. He conditioned these vows upon God's accompanying him, keeping him, feeding and clothing him, and granting him a safe return home. Jacob was a remarkable bargain-maker. He made a big bargain with God Almighty. And God kept His part of it most faithfully. For twenty years Jacob seemed to have forgotten his part of it. But after his triumph of wrestling, Jacob was faithful unto a most triumphant death.

Practical Points.

1. It never pays to do evil that good may come. It never pays to pass over an unpleasant duty. To avoid the cross is to invite shame and dishonor. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." James 4:17.

2. To run away from trouble of your own making is to run into greater trouble. He jumps from the frying pan into the fire. To make trouble for other people is simply to make it for one's self. "He that diggeth a pit shall fall therein: and whoso breaketh an hedge a serpent shall bite him." Eccl. 10:8.

3. The wrong doer cannot get away from God. He meets God in the sacred precincts of conscience, in both the dark and bright dispensations of providence, and in the earnest appeals of the gospel. And he will meet Him also in the judgment. "Prepare to meet thy God." Amos 4:12.

4. To seek out and recover the lost soul is the chief and most intermittent employment of the triune God. The various covenants, the Messianic ministry and sacrifice, and the descent and office-work of the Holy Spirit are powerful evidences of this fact. "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 11:10.

5. Unconditional worship and service are most acceptable to God. God cannot be put in debt to man except by virtue of His own promises. God deals with the believer from the view-point of mercy, and not from that of desert. "For let not that man think that he shall receive anything from the Lord." Jas 1:7.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

On May 8, Mr. and Mrs. Amos J. Richardson celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding day. All their sons, daughters sons-in-law, daughters-in-law with their families were present. These are as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Causey, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Richardson, Miss Daisy Richardson of Greensboro, Mr. L. L. Richardson of Paris Island, S. C., and A. A. Richardson.

Nice presents were given to Bro. and Sister Richardson.

More than two hundred guests assembled on this important occasion in the lives of these worthy people to honor them by their presence and to extend their congratulations.

An interesting program of songs, recitations and speeches was rendered. Their pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, delivered the principal address, "The Home" was his theme, which he eloquently discussed from the viewpoint of its nature, its mission, its danger, its security.

A sumptuous feast of choicest viands was served on improvised tables on the lawn, which all seemed to enjoy with keen relish.

Many came from a distance, some of whom had not seen their friends for many years. The day was one of great social enjoyment. May the comforts and joys that have crowned the days of this aged couple still continue to bless their lives for many years to come. H.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

High Point, May 11th,—It was a shock to us to learn on Saturday of the death of Mr W. K. Teague at his home on N. Main St. On Friday morning he suffered a stroke of paralysis and never regained consciousness. He had been confined to his home since 1919 when he had the first stroke of paralysis. His death is a severe blow to the family, closely following that of the wife and mother in March. Mr. Teague was born near Abbott's Creek in Davidson Co. April 20, 1859, and grew to manhood there. He was the son of the late Joseph S. and Emily Idol Teague, his father having died when he was only four years of age. In 1882 he came to High Point, and has lived here since that time. In February, 1886 he was happily married to Miss Emma Horney, and in a few months they built a new home on North Main St. and moved into it, and there reared their large family of boys and girls. He became interested in the manufacture of flour, and the Teague and Horney Mi'l on Steele St. was known far and wide. He later invested in a veneer factory. Mr. Teague was industrious, scrupulously honest, and a type of the finest and best citizenship. He is survived by six sons and two daughters; Mrs. W. P. Bodenheimer, of High point, Mess. W. Carson Teague of Richmond. Va., Homer C., Hunter, Lester, and Lewis E Teague, all of this city, Mr. J. Earl Teague of College Park, Texas, and Miss Gertrude Teague, a student at High Point College. Funeral services were conducted on Monday afternoon at the home by Dr. Geo. R. Brown assisted by Rev. J. M. Hilliard and Rev. Thomas Carrick of the Baptist Church, the latter having been near neighbors and close friends for a long period of years. These same ministers conducted the last rites for Mrs. Teague on March 18 last. The burial was made in Oakwood cemetery.

Mother's Day was appropriately observed in our church last Sunday, and a number of mothers, who have not been able to attend church for a long while, were present to enjoy the services. Dr. Brown delivered a splendid and touching sermon fitting the day and Mr. Clarence Schultheiss rendered a lovely solo, "My Mother, My Dear." At 8 o'clock P M. a union service of the different denominations was held in our church, and Dr. Harold D. Meyer of the Sociology Dept. of the University of N. C., delivered a fine address on "Adolescent Youth" to a very large and appreciative audience. He spoke in a hopeful humor of the youth of today, and says that they are not retro grading or growing worse, but it is the great difference in the manners and customs of the present day. The youth of today seem to be entirely capable of working out their own problems, and when Uncle Joe Cannon a native of Guilford Co., was asked on his 91st birthday last week for a message to the American people, he said "The younger generation does not need my advice," and he meant it literally; not that they do not want his advice, but that they are competent to manage their affairs without his advice.

Homer Casto will give some features of his wonderful work at Bethel Home near Asheville, and Miss Grace Brown will describe her work among foreigners in Cincinnati, Ohio. This meeting of the Board will be a most interesting event and the first time that it has met in North Carolina.

Congratulations of a host of friends are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Jones [illegible] on the arrival of a fine little daughter on Saturday, May 8, who will bear the name Dorothy Elizabeth Burns.

Mrs. George R. Brown and Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell left Monday night for Chicago to attend the Board meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

Mr. Earl Teague came in on the 5:45 Monday from Bryan, Texas in time to attend the funeral services for his father, Mr. W. K. Teague.

Mr. W. P. Bodenheimer, who has been in Baltimore taking treatment in Johns Hopkins Hospital for the past four months, arrived home last Saturday.

State Street Church.—Revival services at State Street Church began on Thursday night of last week, with Rev. J. H. Brighard of Asheboro preaching. Much interest has already been manifested in the services and it is hoped that great benefit to the community may be the result of the revival, which will continue through this week.

Rev. Mr. Shelton, pastor of the M. E. Church of this city, kindly offered the Methodist Protestants use of his church for the Sunday night service, due to his own absence at that time. The offer was gratefully accepted, as room in the State Street parsonage is limited.

Last week there was only one service held in the evening, but beginning with Monday morning, eight o'clock services are being held each day. These short morning services are planned especially for children and young people, although everyone who can do so is invited to attend.

On Wednesday night of last week the Christian Endeavor meeting was one of consecrayour coming. You will get new ideas and be better prepared to "Carry on" for the Master in your respective fields. Those who never get away from their own hearth-stone, are apt to never get many new ideas, without which your work will dwindle away, and you will wonder why. A farmer that sees no farm but his own little acre, is apt to become conceited that he is the best farmer to be found, when in fact, he is the poorest. I once thought I could play a banjo, but I changed my notion when I heard one play that could play. It is not what we think we can do that holds the attentions of our pupils, but what they think we are doing worthily.

Our hearts were saddened by the sudden death of Brother Thomas Wall of Beulah community last Saturday morning. Heart trouble was the cause of his death. He was sixty-eight years of age, and a member of the M. P. Church from early life. Leaves a wife and four children, the youngest being eleven years old. His body laid to rest at Antioch church Sunday at 11:00 A. M. The God of the widows and orphans will lead them.

Pray for us. Robert Short.

Pleasant Grove.—Our second quarterly conference has been held and all business transacted in perfect harmony. All officials made written reports which were good.

Bro. Fred Kennedy and Bro. Homer Veach are the nominees for delegate to the annual conference.

Last Sunday we had an all day program, celebrating Mother's Day and holding a memorial service in the afternoon. Rev. Mr. Foust, assistant pastor of the Community Church at Thomasville, spoke in the afternoon. Bros. Teague, W. T. Kennedy, and I. W. Burton also made short addresses which were enjoyed. J. B. Morris, president of the Memorial Association, had charge in the afternoon.

The interest in all our services seems to have increased greatly this year. Our Sunday school has almost doubled in attendance while the prayer meetings are more largely attended than any one expected.

The Ladies' Aid has purchased a new carpet which adds greatly to the inside appearance of the church. This society is doing fine work and the attendance is unusually good at all the meetings.

Our special meeting will be held the 2nd Sunday in July with Bro. Carson as pulpit help. G. L. Reynolds.

Mt. Carmel, Granville Circuit.—Mr. Kennett filled his appointment at Mt. Carmel Sunday A. M. and gave us a splendid Mother's Day sermon. His text was taken from Proverbs 28-31, "Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." Mr. Kennett said in his sermon that he believed that there would be more mothers in Heaven, than any other persons save infants. I do think that a beautiful thing to say about mothers. He also said that if we're near enough to go see our mothers during the day, and tell them how we loved them and appreciated what they had done for us, and if we were not near enough to go see them write them this message of love and appreciation. I know we all make a mistake in not loving and appreciating our mothers more while they are with us.

I know there are younger preachers in years than Mr. Kennett but there are none better.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will meet with Mrs. C. B. Finch Tuesday P. M. We are all looking forward to this meeting with much interest as our delegate to Branch meeting will tell us what was done and what we are to do during this year. We were all so glad to have Mrs. Kennett back with us at church Sunday. We missed her so much during her absence caused by the auto accident. Reporter.

Laurel Hill, Toluca Charge.—We were very glad to have our pastor with us Sunday, May 9. He preached us an inspiring Sermon on "Home is just what we make it." Christian friends, let us make our homes a place of prayer. As Sunday was our Memorial day a large crowd gathered to strew flowers on the mounds of their loved ones. Dear friends, let us remember that it will not be long until a mound will be placed over our bodies, and are we ready to meet our loved ones who have gone on before?

We are having a splendid Sunday school with better attendance since spring has opened up. Pray that we will do more for our Master this year than ever before. Reporter.

Fairfield, Guilford Circuit.—We are glad that we can report that our Sunday school has been growing rapidly in attendance. On May 9th there were 82 present.

We had a very interesting Mothers' Day exercise which consisted of speeches by the small children, and a special song by Miss Lena Marsh and Miss Florence Orsborne.

Since our last report our Sunday school has been reorganized with Bro. Hammonds as Supt. He being a man that puts God first, others second and self last, we have hope of building a Sunday school worth while.

We are also glad to state that the "Willing Workers" class are doing a great work and have accomplished much since it has been organized. ffi

Our attendance last Sunday was very good. Bro. O. C. Loyd filled his regular appointment, taking for his theme "The condition of people that are ready to offer criticism." He compared a child mind that had not been developed with the mind that had been developed. The mind that has been developed can very easily see greater characteristics of people than the mind that has never been developed. If we would just consider this theme more, there would be less prejudice, less criticism being dictated and less hardships for people to endure. Ethel Modlin.

West End, Greensboro.—Mother's Day was fittingly observed at West End, with hymns appropriate to the occasion and special music by the choir. The pastor, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, preached an excellent sermon from the subject "The Model Mother," using as his model Mary, the mother of Jesus.

We are pleased to welcome Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Herndon to our midst again after a nine month's stay in Florida. A number of their friends gave to them a surprise party at the home of their daughter, Mrs. V. C. Stockard, on the night of their return.

We are also delighted to know that Mr. J. R. Holden is at home again after several weeks at St. Leo's Hospital following an injury sustained on the Pomona Wards of the Southern Railway. He is recovering nicely.

Little Miss Sarah Foust, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Foust, is recovering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Dr. Joy Glascock, Mrs. C. A. Cooper, Mrs. A. E. Pleasants, Mrs. J. K. Osborne and Rev. E. Lester Ballard attended several sessions of the meeting of the Home Mission Board in session at High Point College last week, and enjoyed especially the messages from the workers in our Home Mission Stations. Delegates from the various Methodist Protestant Conferences in the United States were in attendance.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society was entertained Monday at the home of Mrs. C. A. Cooper, 901 Silver Avenue. The president, Mrs. J. K. Osborne, presided, and a large number of members were present.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor enjoyed a pleasant evening at the home of the president, Miss Emily Ward, on the High Point Road, Friday. During the business session the matter of registrations for the State Christian Endeavor Convention at High Point was discussed, and a committee appointed to secure the registrations. Following the pusiness session Miss Louise Hunter gave several delightful readings, and Miss Effie Coulbourne sang a number of solos.

Mr. Zeb Osborne, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Osborne, has been transferred from the Greensboro office of the Armour Packing Company to the managership of the Wilson office of the same concern at Wilson, N. C. He left Sunday night to take up his new work.

Our pastor, Rev. Lester Ballard, will lead the singing in a union revival meeting at Siler City, beginning May 23rd. The Methodist Episcopal and Baptist churches are cooperating with the Methodist Protestant church and Rev. F. L. Gibbs, pastor, in this revival. The pastors of the three denominations will do the preaching. Reporter.

New Hope, Why Not Circuit.—Our pastor, Bro. D. I. Garner, filled his regular appointment at New Hope Sunday. He gave us a helpful message from 122 Psalm, first verse. I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the House of the Lord.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely. We are planning to have Children's Day the 5th Sunday in May. We are planning to have it that day in order to have our pastor with us all day.

Among our visitors Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. Howard Skein of Asheboro.

Pray for New Hope that she may continue to prosper by the Grace of God.

Mrs. Noah Williams.

Spencer Charge.—We are moving along slowly Our Sunday schools seem to be doing a good work. And the attendance is very good at Charlotte and Spencer, and the teachers are doing some fine work. The congregation at preaching services at Charlotte seems to be on the increase. But our congregation at Spencer doesn't seem to increase.

We had 30 at Sunday school yesterday and ten at preaching service. We have a few that attend Sunday school but don't stay for preaching. We are planning to get a tent and get Bro. D. R. Williams to hold us a revival meeting. I am sure that will help us to increase our attendance.

We are planning to rent the St. John's Chapel for a while. We are to begin a special meeting at a large school house three miles from Charlotte on the Monroe road next Sunday at 3 P. M. It is in a good community where there is no church. It may mean a church in a good place. Pray that God may direct us in this matter.

We will hold our special meeting at Spencer as soon as Bro. D. R. Williams is able to come and do the preaching for us. Bro. J. L. Belk of Charlotte and Bro. C. R. Jackson of Spencer were nominated for delegates to the next annual conference.

Yours in His name. D. A. Braswell.

Asheboro.—Our Mothers' Day Service was one of the most impressive of the year. The pastor's sermon on "A Mother's Devotion" was one of the best he has given us. On Sunday night Rev. R. T. Lloyd preached for us on "The Wages of Sin is Death, but The Gift of God is Eternal Life," the pastor being away assisting Rev. N. G. Bethea of Lexington in special revival services.

Our delegates to the State S. S. Convention at Hickory on the 3rd, 4th and 5th, reported that Randolph County had the largest attendance of any County represented; our local church was well represented.

On Sunday morning, May 16th, Dr. Woodford of Alvin-Drew School, Pine Ridge, Ky. preached for us on "We are strangers here." This was certainly a most inspiring sermon and was enjoyed by a large attendance. On Sunday night Dr. Woodford assisted by Mrs Woodford, talked very informally on the work at Pine Ridge. This service was especially enjoyed, and I'm sure many of us were very very much enlightened as to the work being done under the auspices of the Home Missionary Societies. Mrs. Gordon of the Pittsburgh Mission Station gave us a short talk on her work there, also.

Mr. Pritchard is attending the meeting of the Board of Education, of the denomination, at Pittsburgh on Wednesday of this week. Mr. Lloyd will led the Prayer Meeting Services.

Reporter.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Ct.—Our pastor, Rev. R. G. Koons, filled his appointment at this place second Sunday morning and night, preaching two excellent sermons as he always does. Just before preaching at night the Christian Endeavorers gave a pageant—"An Ideal Home," which was well prepared and was enjoyed by all present.

Our pastor also sang a solo which was fine.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with Mr. B. A: McClimon as superintendent.

Our third quarterly conference will be held at this church on Saturday before the second Sunday in June. Reporter.

Mt. Pleasant News.

Sunday, May 23, will be observed as Memorial Day at Mt. Pleasant M. P. Church. Services will be held in the new church. Sunday school at 9:45. At 11 oclock Rev. R. M Andrews will deliver the first sermon in the new church. Dinner will be served on the grounds. At one oclock we will gather at the cemetery at the grave of J. R. Osborne and a short service will be held. At two oclock Rev. N. G. Bethea will speak. Special quartets will be sung. Come out and hear these songs and bring some one with you.

On Saturday evening, May 8, Mr. Ruffin Stone and Miss Carmel Payne were united in marriage by Rev. D. C. Cox. Mr. Stone is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs: J: R. Stone. Mrs. Stone is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Payne. We wish them much happiness in life. Reporter.

Spencer Charge.—Please say again through the Methodist Protestant Herald that if any of our ministers or people know of any of our people that have moved to Spencer or Salisbury or Charlotte, or may move there please let us know it that we may get in touch with them. We mean to go on and build a church at Spencer and another one at Charlotte. We have a few as loyal, faithful members at Spencer as I have ever served anywhere in the state. I can say the same for them at Charlotte. They stand right by the pastor in all his work and their doors are open for him at any time, day or night, and they are ready with their money and influence to carry on the work. If all the Methodist Protestants in and around these places would fall in line with us and prove as loyal and faithful as a few we have, we could move on to victory.

I think we will have better attendance at Spencer since we have rented St. Joseph Chapel for a while. We hope to hold a special meeting there as soon as we can get ready. We want to get Rev. D. R. Williams to help if he can come. If he cannot come I think we can get some one else.

We begin a meeting at a large school house near Charlotte next Sunday. If any of our people have some money they can spare, it would be a good investment in our cause at Charlotte or Spencer. You will hear from us again. Pray for us.

Yours in His name. D. A. Braswell.

Spencer Church.—We had a good day Sunday; 32 present at Sunday school. We now have 38 on Roll. Pastor Braswell preached for us a good helpful sermon. We move next Sunday from the home of A. L. Moore where we have had services since last June. We have rented the Episcopalian Chapel on Rowan Ave. between 4th and 5th Sts. Sunday school every Sunday at 10 A. M.; Church the 1st and 3rd Sundays at 11 A. M. We do hope we can get help to build a church of our own. We have 17 members in beginners class. So you see we will have more M. P.s some day, if we can get a place to hold them. Several of our M. P.s have gone into the other churches since we organized here. This has been discouraging Some have only given their names, this too has been disheartening. But we have the faithful few and when we see so many children we feel encouraged to try to go on. Tho' our pledges are coming in small on our church lot we hope to buy one soon and pay for it as soon as we can. Pray for our church here in Spencer. Mrs. A. L. Moore.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Bowers.

Mrs. Mary J. Bowers was born in Davidson County December 19, 1865 and died at her home in High Point May 3, 1926.

In 1886 she was married to Eli Bowers and this union was blessed with seven children, five sons and two daughters. Besides these children and her husband, she leaves a large circle of friends and neighbors. The deceased was a member of Pleasant Grove Church having joined several years ago. About eight years ago the family moved from the Grove neighborhood to High Point where they lived to the time of her death.

Our sympathy goes out to the entire family and all who mourn her departure.

G. L. Reynolds.

Peace.

William Franklin Peace, son of Silas Peace, was born in Davidson County near High Point, March 27, 1843. He was 83 years old at the time of his death.

In 1870 he married Miss Elizabeth Albertson and the union was blessed with six children. The oldest child died in infancy. H Clay one of the sons who was a "World War Veteran," died about four years ago.

The deceased has 13 grand children and seven great grand children, and five living sisters. The widow, Mrs. Peace, has been blind for several years. A few years ago she made a profession of religion in the home, and joined Pleasant Grove Church. Our sympathy goes out to all the family, but especially to Sister Peace. May the Lord sustain and keep her.

G. L. Reynolds.

Dickens.

On the night of April 22, Mr. J. R. Dickens, of Enfield, N. C. departed this life while in the hospital in Richmond, Va., where he had been taken for treatment.

Mr. Dickens was a member of the church at Eden, Halifax Charge.

He professed faith in Christ and united with the church here several years ago, and since that time has lived a faithful Christian life. He was also Chairman of the Board of Trustees. And his last official act was to take out insurance on the church just a few days before he went to the hospital.

Mr. Dickens was very liberal to contribute to his church. He always paid his pastor in the beginning of the year when the pastor always needs it most. And then he would help bring up balance at the close of the year.

He would frequently give his pastor money during year, and ask him not to credit it on salary. He also contributed to other churches, and pastors as well as to his own.

He contributed to the poor, and those in need, and often said nothing about it to his closest friends. He has contributed to our college and other institutions. He was always faithful to his church duties and will be greatly missed by, his church and community, as well as the town of Enfield.

The farmers through out the surrounding country, many of them colored people, will have received help from Mr. Dickens how their heads in sorrow, and greatly honor his departure.

The funeral services were conducted in the house at 3 P. M. Saturday, April 24, by Rev. R. C. Stubbins of M. P. Church, Rev. Mr. Rogers, M. E. Church, Rev. Mr. Johnson, Baptist Church, all of Enfield, and his pastor, at Eden Church.

The Masons had charge on the services at the grave, after which he was laid to rest in the cemetery in Enfield.

The funeral services were attended by one of the largest crowds we have ever witnessed at a funeral, which is a token of the high esteem in which he was held.

He leaves a wife, and children, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. But may we look to Him who in his always providence has seen best to take him from us. And may we prepare to meet him in heaven where there will be no more sorrow and separation.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Guyer.

John Carson Guyer was born October 2, 1855, and died April 3, 1926. He was born and spent the greater part of his life near Pleasant Grove Church. In 1918 he was married to Miss Bessie Teague, and to this union one children were born; one has died and three are still living. A few years ago, under the pastorate of Rev. D. M. Loy, he professed religion and joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Mechanicsville. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife, three children, two brothers, and two sisters, and a large number of friends. Bro. Guyer was a sufferer from asthma for several years, and no one will miss him so much as his wife who stood by him so devotedly through all his sufferings. His body was laid in the large cemetery at Pleasant Grove Church in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends. The pastor of the church conducted the funeral services.

May the riches of his divine grace sustain and keep those who mourn, especially the dear wife and little children.

Geo. L. Reynolds.

King.

Margaret Lavina Hull King, born Oct. 11 1836, died May 5, 1926.

She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Mayor Hull of this county.

In 1866 she was married to John C. King and to this union were born seven children. Her husband and one child, John, Jr., preceded her to the grave. Surviving are six children: Mrs. Jerry Hoyle of this county, Mrs. Holbran, Mrs. John Hoover and Oscar King also of this county; Allie King of Cleveland county, Guy King of Burke County.

She leaves one aged brother, Mr. Frank Hull, of Shelby, and 33 grand children and 28 great grand children and a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss.

A NEW BOOK OF GREAT IMPORTANCE.

We doubt whether this year witnesses the appearance of a greater book than the one recently issued by Fleming H. Revell Company entitled The Bible Status of Woman. Years of study must have gone into the production of this book in addition to the time necessary to acquire a thorough knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek languages. On almost every page the book gives evidence of wide research. Then the writer must have been impelled by a great and high motive. The book was written by a talented, cultured woman moved by a profound regard for womankind. She saw women suffering unjustly, and she took her pen in their behalf. But the book will not only be prized by women, but also by fairminded men who will find in it deliverance from uncomfortable misconceptions and prejudices. The author shows that in some cases the Bible translators have allowed their prejudices to move them to approve a translation untrue to the original. In many cases Bible commentators and interpreters have been similarly influenced. What Paul said about women in the churches has been grossly misunderstood. This misunderstanding has led to the most absurd and unreasonable opposition to the religious service of women. When Frances E. Willard was beginning her great career, she was called upon to lead a prayer in a great temperance meeting in one of the churches of Pittsburgh. Promptly the pastor of the church arose and said, "I forbid it." (And he was a Methodist Protestant minister, too, and might have been expected to be more liberal.) The Bible Status of Woman is a book with a high mission and has a great task before it. It is written in such attractive style that it can be read with pleasure by the ordinary reader. The presence of Hebrew and Greek words and phrases will not prevent a ready comprehension of the author's meaning.

There is not a dull page in all the book. Some pages are enlivened by flashes of wit. Here are a few paragraphs from page 221 which will show you a little of the author's power:

"It is an indisputable fact that down through the ages mankind in general, and lawmakers and religious leaders in particular have manifested lively interest in the manner and style of woman's dress. On the other hand, they have shown almost no concern as to the apparel of their own sex. The prophet Isaiah, 700 B. C., had something to say on this subject. He was a habitue of a palace and a student of affairs about him, and left to posterity this inventory of the habiliments of the women of his age: 'anklets,' 'cauls,' 'crescents,' 'pendants,' 'bracelets,' 'mufflers,' 'headtires,' 'ankle-chains,' 'sashes,' 'perfume boxes,' 'amulets,' 'rings,' 'nose-jewels,' 'festival robes,' 'mantles,' 'shawls,' 'satchels,' 'hand-mirrors,' 'fine linen,' 'turbans,' 'veils,' 'girdles,' and 'well-set hair.' (iii: 18-24).

"Solon, Athenian sage and lawgiver, 638 B. C., wrestled with the problem of woman's attire; Marcius Portius Cato, 234 B. C., harangued the Roman Senate on this weighty theme. Church fathers and prelates, 'after the manner of men,' made pronouncements on this grave question. The leaders of some religious sects fixed the style of woman's dress and the manner in which she should arrange her hair; and, in doing so, have usually succeeded in making her appear outlandish.

"The Apostles, Paul and Peter, were not inattentive to the matter of woman's attire: the latter especially appreciated its importance. A reference to iii:5 will reveal the extent of his investigation—back to the Patriarchal age.

" 'Whose adorning let it not be outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing jewels of gold, or of putting on apparel.' (ii:3). This passage, like many another mandate of Scripture, has at times been misconstrued. Some religious sects have understood it to be a prohibition of 'plaiting of the hair or the wearing jewels of gold.' Fortunately, their literalism carried them no further, otherwise it would have compelled them to also interdict the 'putting on of apparel.' "

The author makes good her contention that the Bible status of woman is the same as the Bible status of man. She shows that where the Bible makes a different impression from this, it is the fault of translators or interpreters.

Not a person in a million could have written this great book, and our readers will be pleased to hear that the worthy author is a modest lady of the Methodist Protestant Church, Miss Lee Anna Starr, D. D., LL. D., of Bellevue, Penn.

The publishers have put the price of the book at $3.00, but at present the book may be ordered from the author at $2.50, postpaid. Every minister and Sunday school teacher should read the book as an aid to a correct understanding of controverted passages in the Bible, and every woman should read it to help her in properly appraising herself in God's good world.

The address of the author is Dr. Lee Anna Starr, 6 Lincoln Ave., Bellevue, Penn.

THE ANSWER.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I asked the winds to tell me where
The Godhead might be seen;
But, heeding not, the zephyrs sped
Through orchards newly green.

Then to the river brink I came,
And as it leapt in glee,
I asked again the place of God;—
The river sought the sea.

I hastened to the ocean tides;
I said, "My ancient doubt
Shall be resolved within these depths;—"
The silent tides rolled out!

Then to the skies I flung a taunt;
"There is no God," I said;
The fleecy clouds would not deny,
But passed on, overhead.

In rage I cried, "Then where is God,
In earth or sea or air?"
A still voice spake, "Believe—and thou Wilt find Him everywhere."

THE ANTI-TOBArCO LAW IN UTAH.

Will H. Brown.

About two years ago the state legislature of Utah passed a law against advertising or selling cigarettes in the state, and against smoking in certain public buildings and public places. The law has been flagrantly violated. and now the tobacco men are working for its repeal.

Louis Ward has an article in the January issue of the Improvement Era, of Salt Lake City, in which he points out some things the public should know. First, the section of the law relating to advertising has been rigidly enforced and obeyed. Previously the tobacco dealers spent $150,000.00 per year in advertising cigarettes in the papers and on the billboards of Utah. We can rest assured they did not spend that amount without expecting big returns on the investment, which means that so far as the increased use of tobacco from that kind of publicity is concerned, the weed has been brought to a halt.

Second, the officers of the law have apparently made little if any effort to enfore this law, one provision of which reads that smoking is forbidden in city and county buildings and yet daily, in court rooms and public offices, men have smoked without arrest, even during jury trials.

Mr. Ward well argues that no law should be pronounced a failure until the officers have at least made an effort to enforce it, adding: "To say that the people of Utah will not obey the law is a libel on the citizens of a great law-abiding state. They will obey it but not before the officers responsible for its enforcement show that they themselves regard it on an equal with other laws of the commonwealth.

BOY RANGERS OF AMERICA.

The Pastor and the Younger Boy Problem.

An organization for the neglected group of younger boys has been coming steadily to the fore—namely, The Boy Rangers of America. The Boy Rangers of America deals with boys of pre-scout age, from 8 to 12. Almost every scoutmaster has had the experience of having his meetings of boy scouts haunted by the smaller boys who want to be scouts but who are not old enough. To become a boy scout a boy must have attained his twelfth birthday. Therefore, boys under twelve can not possibly be considered. Here it is that the boy ranger movement functions. Its members are boys from 8 to 12.

The lure of the boy ranger idea is the lure of the American Indian. The boy "plays Indian" and builds character as he plays. There is the whole heart of the idea.

National Headquarters of the Boy Rangers of America are maintained at 10 West 23rd Street, New York City. From this national center, local organizations—"lodges," they call them—have sprung up all over the country so that today boy ranger lodges are to be found in forty-two of our States as well as in several foreign countries, with a membership of approximately 10,000 boys. The local lodge is made up of tribes, each tribe having an Indian name, and each boy ranger is also given an Indian name. Through this device, the boy plays Indian, building character, and reflecting all this in his home, his church, and his school.

Thus the boy ranger movement touches the neglected period of the boyhood of America, the strategic point of time between the eigth and the twelfth birthday. The favor with which the boy ranger idea has been received is reflected in the list of organizations which have sponsored it. These sponsoring organizations include men's and boys' clubs, fifteen foundations public and private schools, boy scout councils, settlements, and various educational, patriotic, fraternal, recreational, military, and other groups.

Our readers will appreciate the fact that fifteen denominational groups are using the boy rangers as part of their solution of the younger boy problem. The list includes churches of these denominations: Baptist, Church of Christ, Community, Congregational, Evangelical, Jewish, Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal North, Methodist Episcopal South, Presbyterian North, Presbyterian South, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed, Roman Catholic, Union and United Brethren.

A Handbook of 160 pages, cloth bound (55c. postpaid), tells what the boy ranger movement is, how to organize local lodges, and how to keep them going happily in the little village or the large city.

This little handbook makes an interesting addition to the chosen list of books the pastor will want to take with him on his vacation this summer. It may give him a brand new idea for the opening of his work in the fall.

ORDINATION.

Kneel lowly, lad; receive our gift,
"The laying on of hands," His seal
And His anointing. Chosen of God,
Crowned with your Lord's crown, lowly kneel!

We charge you, keep the flock of God,
In pastures green, or wilderness;
Lead only where the Master leads,
And, as He blesses, you shall bless.

We, your brothers, know that path
The great Head Shepherd once has trod,
Through ignominy, pain, reproach,
Glory and mystery, up to God.

Oh, Under-shepherd, preach the Word—
His flaming Word! Smite with His rod;
Teach them to know the living God.

So shall you live—the Christ in you—
While daily self, surrendered, dies.
Lift up your head, and take your staff.
God be with you, young shepherd, rise!

S. H.

If you have a pleasant word to say,
Say it at once, my dear.
A pleasant word is a pleasant thing—
Pleasant to speak and hear.
But if an ugly or cruel word
Comes to your lips—oh, then
Hold it fast, for if out it slips
It will never come back again,

THE MECKLENBURGH DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

More than 25 years ago, when we resided at Matthews, N. C., Mecklenburgh Charge, ten miles from Charlotte, we heard Dr. Gribble, a physician, more than 80 years of age, say that he had known, personally, one of the "signers" of the Mecklenburgh Declaration.

Those who are disposed to speak of the said "Declaration" as a "myth," will but reside in, or near Charlotte, a few years, will have their doubts dissipated, if they entertain any. unless they are hopelessly prejudiced against incontrovertible facts. Thos. Jefferson did not know—was not in a position to know, to speak of said Declaration as a "myth," betrays either ignorance or prejudice, or both.

J. F. Dosier.

"LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED"

Life Isn't A Bed of Roses By Any Means.

"Perfect love casteth out fear," we are told on unquestionable authority. The average man's love for God must be exceedingly imperfect, therefore. For he will go along, fretting and worrying over divers matters that are constantly arising in the business or domestic life or every man to vex and harass him, essaying, like the foolish creature that he is, to carry the whole burden on his own shoulders and never once availing himself of the blessed privilege of sharing the load with the Master.

That is just another way of saying that most of us do not get the every day comfort and consolation out of our religion that we might. Religion ought to be a practical thing. a useful thing, a dependable thing. But to all too many people religion is a thing for Sunday only, to be put aside with the coming of Monday morning and never thought of once or if thought of at all only in the most casual way, during the ensuing six days. Sunday is to them in very truth the Lord's day in the sense that they do not take Him into their lives at all on the other days of the week.

Life isn't a bed of roses, by any means, even under the most favoring circumstances, but most of us make it a far harder proposition than it actually is. Life is full of problems, full of troubles, full of fears. But the problems aren't as hard as we make them appear. the troubles aren't as vexing, nor the fears as alarming, as they seem to our human eyes. That is because we have fallen into the sad habit of trying to fight life's battles in our own finite, limited strength. We have a "Friend and Advocate with the Father" but we do not avail ourselves of His offices as often as we should or could. No man can conquer in his own strength alone. But too many men attempt to do that very thing, and in consequence the sands on the shore of life are strewn with the resultant wreckage.

Most of us go through life afraid of the thing that never happen. That is because we have not learned to put our reliance in the Source of all strength. We fear this, and we fear that, and most or all things we fear grow indistinct and then vanish altogether as we get closer to them. Did we but possess the essential confidence, relying not in our own strength but in the strength of Him who is able and willing to save, even unto the uttermost, we should be spared much unnecessary worry and anxiety.

"Perfect love casteth out fear"—remember that the next time you are disposed to grow heavy-hearted and despondent. Does that pathway look black before you? Do you fear what the future is to bring forth Then cast about in your own heart and ask yourself whether you are depending entirely on your own resources, instead of relying on Divine aid, to see you through. Take thought for the morrow, by all means; exercise care and deliberation and your very best judgment in arranging your affairs. But having done that, banish fear which can only weaken and enervate, and face the future with a brave heart and a carefree mien. Do your part, yes, but have enough confidence in God—your God—to believe that likewise He will do His. He never fails those who put their trust in Him. Do you believe that? If you don't, then there is something the matter with your Christianity.

"Let not your heart be troubled: neither let it be afraid."

KEEP CLOSE TO CHRIST.

It is a day of many cults. A man would be busy who would undertake to keep track of them all, for there are more than fifty-seven varieties.

The other day we picked up the Saturday edition of the Los Angeles Times and looked over the page that contains the advertisements of religious services. We are glad to assure our readers that announcements from evangelical churches greatly predominated. But there were invitations to worship with the United Lodge of Theosophists; with a Hindoo who possess a mysterious and long-drawn-out name and who promises to reveal the secrets of the ages; with the International Bible Students' Association, otherwise known as the Russellites; with the so-called Higher Thought people; the Church of Divine Power; the Home of Truth; the Spiritualists; the Unity Center of Christianity; the Christian Scientists, and so on.

We are not questioning the sincerity of many of the members of these and other cults. To our mind there is nothing more truly pathetic than the gropings and searchings of men and women who have been led away to ... the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and who are wandering here and there, having lost the way.

One thing about some of these modern systems that so easily leads people astray is that they advertise and teach some of the doctrines and principles of Christianity. For example. Christian Science has calmly appropriated the word "Christian" and it also makes use of the Bible, placing selections from Holy Writ alongside of Mrs. Eddy's illuminating sentences. It also employs some of the old standard hymns, mutilating them, changing their phraseology to suit Christian Science doctrine. But along with its name "Christian hymnology, it teaches a weird philosophy that is utterly subversive of the great cardinal doctrines of Christianity.

We have been amazed now and again when certain persons of our acquaintance in the east and in the west have severed their membership with churches of the evangeliral faith, and have suffered themselves to be led off with this, that or the other cult that furnishes nothing more than a perverted Christianity: a pitiable mixture of crude stuff, the largest portion of which is rank error.

Why cannot people cling to Christ, the Christ not of some sentimentalist's invention but the Christ of the New Testament? Surely the great fundamental truths concerning Christ are set forth so plainly that any sensible man or woman can apprehend them, particularly the truths we need for everyday living and for the eternity that is before us. What else under the sun do we need but the pure, simple, glorious gospel of Christ; the Christ of Bethlehem and Nazareth and Calvary; the Christ of the stainless life who says, "Follow Me;" the Christ of the cross who gave Himself in the sacrifice of infinite love for our redemption; the Christ who spoke as no other man ever has spoken and whose teachings are for us the one sure and immovable foundation; the Christ who rose from the dead and who has enriched us with new life; the Christ with whom we are to live in God's great beyond, "while circling times moves round in an eternal sphere!"—United Presbyterian.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, May 23rd, was spent at Pleasant Hill, West Forsyth with Rev. C. H. Whitaker and the people in a Circuit rally. The weather was ideal and the attendance was good. We did hope to see many more present, but a goodly number were there, and we had a good time together. Rev. Lawrence Little accompanied me and added much to the meeting by his two timely addresses. Rev. C. M. Caudle came out from Winston for the afternoon service and made a splendid address on "The Budgets, Why and How." The singing was fine and the dinner was all we could wish.

Bro. Whitaker is doing splendid work on West Forsyth and the people seem encouraged. I noted marked improvements in many respects. It is a large Circuit in the midst of splendid farming communities, and we have right to expect great things of so noble a people.

We are trusting that last Sunday's services will be helpful to the work in every church in the charge.

Prayer Band.

I am endeavoring to enroll a prayer band of one hundred people who will pledge to pray daily for the High Point College. Up to date we have enrolled seventy-two. Cards have been sent to several I have not heard from. If you have not received a card and would like to enroll please drop me a card and I will be glad to mail you the pledge card.

Funeral Services.

On Saturday, May 22, I attended the funeral of Mr. D. S. Leonard at Bethesda Church, North Davidson, and assisted the pastor and others in the funeral services. Bro. Leonard was one of our best. He lived a long life of service and usefulness, and was a great power for good in the Bethesda Community. Many people attended the funeral. I presume a suitable obituary will be prepared by some one else, so I will not anticipate it by writing more now.

Mrs Dixon's Condition.

Those who attended the Board meeting at the college last week, and noted how Mrs. Dixon was suffering, will be interested to know that doctors finally agreed that the tonsils were probably the seat of her trouble. So on Monday of this week her tonsils were removed, and at this writing she is doing well. We hope her physical troubles will now clear up.

Plan For Educational Campaign.

The meeting, held in Grace Church in the interest of the High Point College on May 11, directed a committee to put on an educational program, at an early date, and so conduct it as to reach every church in the Conference. Accordingly we have mapped out plans for such a campaign, and we are publishing complete plan herewith. And we are asking everyone who is thus appointed to fall in with the plan and help us to put it over. The failure of any one to respond will break the plan, and thus frustrate the purpose. We trust all will respond. But if because of sickness or distress you cannot fill the place you are asked to take then please secure some one to go in your place, and notify the chairman of the committee.

We are asking that, on the three Sundays designated, congregations will release their pastors for this important service. This is the most important work before us just now, so all of us must respond. Where we have been unable to fill all pulpits pastors will please arrange this as best they can.

HUMANITARIANISM.

How often a small, seemingly insignificant act of kindness to some dumb creature will admirably serve to attest the caliber of a man or woman.

Precisely true. The little humanitarian acts of a person best typify and reflect his or her character. A man may preach an eloquent philosophy of life, contribute lavishly toward charities, impress the neighbors by his exemplary conduct and yet spurn a cringing and homeless dog, and in so doing display his real nature, thus upsetting all his good works much as the contented and stoical bovine who gives a brimming pail of milk only to kick the container over at the expiration of the milking process.

The man who is kind and considerate toward all dumb creatures may well be regarded as Nature's nobleman.

A certain well known musical comedy actor was recently playing a middle western town and from the window of a stationary Pullman diner saw a tramp dog running up and down the railroad yards in bewilderment. The thousand-dollar-a-week star immediately jumped up from his table and left the car, going in pursuit of the unkempt little animal, finally overtaking him and, returning to the diner, ordered a fine meal for the little outcast. Another indication of noble unselfishness.

New York City, that hustling, progressive and noisy metropolis, accused by its thousands of visitors from every State in the Union, as well as the principal cities of Europe, as lacking all humanitarian sentiment in its daily commercial grind, this same city frequently manifests a great spirit of consideration and sympathy in dealing with its unfortunate, lesser creatures. Just the other day an immature sparrow fell from its nest in the coping of a large building, and, after a vain effort to fly away, settled upon the pavement of a busy street. A number of passersby were attracted to the bird's sorry plight. Police observing the crowd hastily approached and one of the officers, securing a ladder, climbed up to the coping and carefully replaced the small bird safely in its nest. What does this little act prove?

A number of people may carelessly laugh and make the remark: "Too ridiculous to waste one's time with such common dogs, cats and birds." That may in a measure be true but the man, woman or child who goes out of his or her way to aid a distressed little creature deserves commendation nevertheless.

It is reassuring to note that in every American city of any size one may find organized societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. The men and women who are actively sponsoring and supporting such societies are accomplishing a noble and unselfish work and are succeeding in minimizing to a great degree the pain and suffering of animals.

Many cities celebrate a "Be kind to animals week" and much good results. The medium of the Boy Scout and Children are being educated through Girl Scout movements to be considerate of all lesser creatures. The government has in operation strict laws and ordinances with reference to many species of birds, and even protects to a great extent the fish of the various bodies of water over which it holds jurisdiction. Every State makes and enforces game laws and drastically punishes the hunter who disregards the regulations. And so we see a radical improvement being manifest the country over with regard not only to domestic animals, but also the wild creatures of the forest. Unnecessary cruelty to animals is no longer tolerated and the needless slaying or torture of the creatures of the wood is a thing of the past.

Animals, both domestic and wild, instinctively and eventually turn to man for protection, and thanks to the many warm hearted and humane men and women of our country who are instrumental in making the laws that protect these creatures, the trust is not betrayed nor is the confidence violated.—Selected.

"THE SECRET PLACE."

Psalm 91 is a promise. "He shall call upon me, and I will answer him." It is not a promise to the worldly professor, who kneels down and "says his prayers." True, prevailing prayer is not a beggar pleading for alms, but it is a child, with its head on the mother's bosom, pouring forth the heart's desires. The first essential of prayer is communion. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Christians, are you in the secret place of the Most High? Fathers and mothers, do your children know that you are walking with God and have power with Him? Sabbath School teachers, do you study every lesson in the secret place, and are your words perfumed with the benedictions of Jesus, and the "very wisdom and power of God?"

Remember there is nothing humdrum in your lives, because Christ is walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks and God in His absolute reality is standing between you and your task, so that if you are going to see your task as it really is you must see it through the splendor and the glory of His being. He stands in the opened door, and through Him and in Him we pass to what He would have us do. First the vision of God; then the vision of life with all its vast opportunities, its vast interests.—Charles H. Brent.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE SUMMER CONFERENCES FOR 1926.

In the aggregate work of the Institute the summer conferences have a very conspicuous place. Not only do teachers of the Institute participate but also prominent pastors, preachers, great Bible expositors and teachers of Christian truth. These conferences are looked forward to by many within reasonable reach of them with keen anticipation of great blessing. In a certain sense they are the Institute, carrying its great work to thousands who cannot attend its classes in Chicago, as well as giving inspiration through great Christian leaders. This season the conferences extend from New Jersey in the east to Colorado in the west and from Pennsylvania in the north to North Carolina in the south. This distribution of location puts one or more of these conferences within reasonable reach of thousands who know something of the spirit and teaching of the Institute.

Hendersonville, N. C., July 25—August 9. At this conference the Institute will be very strongly represented by members of its Extension Staff, Rev. Henry Ostrom, D. D., Rev. Oscar Lowry and Rev. George E. Guille. A great blessing is expected in the addresses of Pastor D. H. Dolman, of Wandsbek, Germany. This conference has in the past been of great interest and value and great results are anticipated. Prof. E. L. Wolslagel will be in charge of the music.

The Asheville, N. C., conference will continue from August 1-8 and several of the speakers at Hendersonville conference will be on the program.

TO CORRECT A MISTAKE.

In the article in this column last week, in the section referring to what it costs to run Nagova College in Japan, where it was stated "The Japan Mission asked the Union Board to appropriate only EIGHT hundred and ninety-three dollars" it should have been "Only FIVE hundred and ninety-three dollars.

Further on in the section it is correctly stated in figures "Yen 1186 -or U. S. $593." The mistake was made by me in typewriting the article, and not by the printing department of our three valued church papers, and I regret it.

All Together Will Accomplish It

Our churches now have the opportunity of raising one-fourth of their General Conference budget by having the Sunday school to hold a Children's Day Service, and making special efforts to raise through the offering on the favorable occasion at least one-quarter of their budget.

Set that as a goal and appeal to the conscience of the church to do their [illegible] each it, and, of course, calling to the aid of the school all the ladies of the missionary societies and the membership of the churches, it can be done without much difficulty.

Every pastor ought to welcome the opportunity to utilize the forces indicated to accomplish so good a task and a most valuable service will be rendered to the Union Board at this time when its needs are most pressing.

All the supplies for holding a Children's Day Service, music pamphlets, recitation sheets, pageant, collection envelopes, are sent to our schools free of cost, and you have only to mail a card to me at Berwyn, Md., and state how many of each you desire, and we will send them to you promptly.

The pageant is a part of the program, or can be used separately, and was specially written for this Children's Day by the gifted writer, Miss Jessalie Lyndon Jones, who has heretofore favored us with several pageants, and quite a number of recitations as a work of love. It is entitled "Hold Me to Thy Cross," and its characters are Chinese, and will make a deep impression.

Do not forget that the two Japanese embroidered banners will be awarded again this year—one to the Sunday school that sends in the largest offering for Foreign Missions, and the other one to the Sunday school sending in the largest offering for foreign missions in proportion to membership.

Note. Be sure, when sending the Children's Day offering to your annual conference treasurer, to state plainly that it is "The Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions," and also give him the number on your school's roll for we must have this information in order to properly award the second banner.

Important. Please send the offering to your annual conference treasurer just as soon as possible after you hold Children's Day, for very important matters will be determined by the offerings from this year's Children's Day. This greatly emphasizes the need of the largest possible offering from every Sunday school.

If, as heretofore stated, your school for any reason cannot hold a regular Children's Day Service with the supplies the Union Board furnishes, send for them, and distribute among your people, and take up an offering at some convenient time for Foreign Missions, and state it is for Foreign Missons when sending it to your conference treasurer.

Send me your order for supplies without delay, prepare for the best service you have held, and work for the largest possible offering, and raise at least one fourth of your budget.

Fred C. Klein.

ATTENTION—A SECOND TIME!

J. C. Broomfield.

A little over a month ago I called the attention of Methodist Protestants everywhere to a crisis in the Men's Department of the work of our Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration. This crisis grew up out of a debt of nearly $20,000.00 accumulated during the past three years; and out of our diminished income, necessitating the reduction of our budget for the ensuing year, $15,000.00 below that asked for by our missionaries. In view that the gifts of the people on Children's Day would help relieve this situation, members of the Board borrowed heavily on their personal notes, hoping to have the same taken care of as soon as the special funds began to come in. I am hoping also that the income from Children's Day will be so liberal as to enable us to say to our missionaries that we will increase, for the remainder of the year, the budget we allowed them in our February meeting. As I write these words, I have before me a letter from our Japan Mission, composed of all our missionaries in Japan, pleading with us, to grant them an increase of at least $945.00 for the year over the reduced budget we allowed them in February. Similar pleas come from China and India. Beloved, shall we deny to our missionaries who have given themselves, body, mind, and soul, to this work, the small increases they are asking? The answer depends on you. As one of the chosen leaders in the management of this work, I appeal to every pastor to see to it that his church, and Sunday school, gives an offering on Children's Day, to help carry the gospel to all the world. We are glad to note that the income for Home Missions on Easter Day surpassed that of any other year. We beseech you to do likewise for Foreign Missions on Children's Day. Our need never was greater.

NEW EXECUTIVE SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK.

I take great pleasure in introducing to the Church at large, Reverend Lawrence Little, a member of the North Carolina Conference, as the new Executive Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work.

Brother Little comes to this work having had several years experience as one of the All South Christian Endeavor Secretaries, and also having served in his own Conference as Young People's Secretary, besides having given considerable time to the activities of this Board. He is therefore quite familiar with the work. He is a College graduate and naturally fitted for his new position. I feel the Church is to be congratulated on having secured a young man of his character and attainments for this position.

His headquarters, for the present, will be Concord, North Carolina. All communications should be sent to him at that address.

Brother Little undertakes the work of this Board at a very opportune time. The work of this Board has constantly grown and now has the finest prospects it has ever confronted. Last year, Summer Conferences were held in the following Annual Conference districts: Louisiana, West Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Indiana, Illinois, Texas, Maryland, Pittsburgh, Ohio, Iowa, Missouri, Michigan, besides a number of rallies and institutes in other sections. Our records, which are about as accurate as can be obtained, show there were enrolled for the full course of study in these conferences, 578 between the ages of 15 and 18; 450 between the ages of 19 and 25; and 301 over 25 years besides 2,236 who attended for part of the time, making a total enrollment of 3,500.

I have reported these conferences in detail and in this summary stated the age groups to show just what classes of people are attending. These figures show beyond doubt that we are not only touching our present but future leadership as well.

71 persons offered for whole time service in the Ministry, Mission Fields, and other activities of the Church, besides 263 who signed Christian Workers cards for part time service in their local Church. No one can properly estimate the far reaching influence of these Conferences upon the lives of those who attend them and the blessing that must have come to the local Churches thru them.

The outlook for Summer Conferences this year is most flattering. Definite plans have been made for Young People's Conferences in the following Annual Conferences districts:—Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Texas, West Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, Pittsburgh, Ohio, Louisiana, Michigan, with tentative plans for several others, besides two or three day conventions in Onondaga, Mississippi and Missouri.

This Board is in the best financial condition it has ever been in its history. Of course, larger amounts of money could be used in extending the work but our program has been made with a view to the probable income that we would have. This, however, has not retarded the work. Each year, we have planned larger things and have been able to finance them.

In leaving this position, I have no criticism whatever for anyone but the highest praise for the cordial welcome and cooperation given to me throughout the entire Church. No one could have asked for or expected more in this respect than has been given me. I shall always hold in high esteem the many friends I have made during my years of association with the Church at large. I ask that you give to my successor the same welcome and hearty cooperation, and I am sure with the blessings of God our Young People's Work has a great future.

Fraternally, E. A. Sexsmith.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

The annual meeting of the Board of Education was held in the office of the Secretary, May 19, with the following members present: Rev. G. I. Humphreys, D. D., Chairman, J. E. Pritchard Recording Secretary, F. W. Stephenson, Executive Secretary; Rev. E. T. Howe and Mr. H. M. Johnson. Rev. H. L. Elderdice, D. D., Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., and Rev. H. L. Feeman, D. D., were invited to address the Board in the interests of their schools. Rev. B. A. Brooks and Rev. C. O. Harvey came with special messages while Rev. W. E. Schell, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Board of Education of the United Brethren Church, was present in the capacity of a fraternal messenger in behalf of his own Board as well as that of Chancellor Jones. The Executive Secretary read his annual report closing with certain recommendations which were adopted by the Board.

The Executive Secretary was instructed to spend some time at each one of our colleges in the interests of recruits for the Christian ministry; the chairman of the Board was requested to make a special visit with the Executive Secretary to High Point and Adrian. the plan of a "Men for the Ministry Sunday" the second Sunday in December was approved; an effort is to be made to find ways and means to give special assistance to High Point; a committee was appointed to confer with a committee from the Seminary Board of Governors with a view to securing an endowment for the Seminary; Adrian's campaign for $1,000,000 was heartily sanctioned and the Secretary instructed to give whatever assistance is consistent with his other duties; the advisability of suggesting to our colleges a limit to their enrollment was taken under consideration; April 1st was approved as the date when payments on interest and principal of Student Loans are due and payable; special communications were ordered sent to Dr. J. C. Berrien, Dr. G. H. Miller and Dr. T. H. Lewis; the auditor's report was approved; and the appropriations for the institutions for the new year were adopted.

The question which gave the Board the greatest concern and consumed the largest amount of time was our relationship to Kansas City University. After listening to arguments for and against, as presented by the Secretary and by those who came before the Board, it was finally voted to take whatever steps might be necessary to withdraw from the enterprise. The Executive Secretary and Mr. H. M. Johnson were appointed a committee to take the matter in charge with power of attorney, having the privilege of calling on any member of the Board at any time for counsel or assistance..

The meeting of the Board would have been most delightful had it not been for the matters of utmost importance and concern coming up for consideration. In spite of these there was a splendid spirit of fellowship and confidence. Every step taken was done unanimously and only after the most careful consideration. We seem to be making real progress toward coordinating our educational program. A community of interest so much to be desired is on the gain while the increase in the student enrollment and interest in Christian education throughout our denominational borders is not only gratifying but promising.

High Point College is closing a very successful year. Another deficit, though not so large by one third as last year, is embarrassing President Andrews and his co-workers. Some progress has been made in reducing the indebtedness in spite of the current expense deficit and the prospects for an increased enrollment for next year are very encouraging.

Westminster College has had a very difficult year. The annual meeting of the Board of Regents is to be held May 27, 28. President Phipps has worked very hard and has some encouraging things to say about the school.

The Executive Secretary was instructed by the Board to send to President Ward their congratulations on the successful completion of his campaign for $375,000. It was a notable achievement and those responsible for its success deserve the highest praise.

The Adrian College campaign committee met in Pittsburgh Tuesday, May 18th, with the following in attendance: Illinois, President F. Baylis, Rev. J. K. Worrell and J. Ed Herbert; Indiana, Rev. George Farrow, Rev. C. J. Kerlin and Rev. Clyde Havens; Ohio, President F. L. Brown, Rev. C. H. Beck, Rev. S. W. Rosenberger, Rev. M. R. Stover and Rev. C. J. Morton; Pittsburgh, Rev. J. W. Hawley, Rev. C. M. Smith, C. A. Braun, Rev. R. Tamblyn, R. Rawsthorne and R. T. Lewis; Onondaga, President W. F. Spaulding. The following were chosen as the Executive Committee: Rev. J. W. Hawley, Chairman; F. W. Stephenson, Secretary; Robert Rawsthorne, Treasurer; C. J. McConnell, Mr. S. A. Criss, C. J. Morton, C. L. Daugherty, C. M. Smith, and C. A. Braun. President Feeman outlined the plan of a campaign as adopted by the Board of Trustees at their meeting in March. Considerable time was devoted to the question of conference quotas in order to make provision for the $500,000 to be raised by the Adrian area. The General Conference Budget apportionments were used as a basis in making the allotments. A thorough educational campaign was urged and sanctioned. The interest and enthusiasm manifested by the Campaign Committee is very gratifying and presages certain success. Frank W. Stephenson.

ONE WAY TO CURB DISTURBERS.

A clergyman was annoyed by people talking and giggling. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said: "I am always afraid to reprove those who misbehave, for this reason. Some years since, as I was preaching, a young man who sat before me was constantly laughing, talking and making uncouth grimaces. I paused, and administered a severe rebuke. After the close of the service, a gentleman said to me; 'Sir, you have made a great mistake: that young man was an idiot.' Since then I have always been afraid to reprove those who misbehave themselves in chapel, lest I should repeat that mistake and reprove another idiot."

During the rest of the service there was good order.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Edited by Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro, N. C

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS.

The Woman's Board of Home Missons was entertained by the North Carolina Branch at High Point College, May 12 to 15. Representatives were present from the following Branches: Maryland, Indiana, Washington-Virginia, North Carolina, Pittsburgh, Eastern, Michigan, Ohio, West Virginia. Workers were present from each of the activities being carried on by the Missionary Board.

The theme for the devotionals was, "Tested by the Way of Jesus." Each morning some phase of the theme was discussed by a minister of the North Carolina Annual Conference, the exercises being conducted as part of the College chapel service.

The first session opened at 8:30 A. M., Wednesday, May 12. Dr. S. K. Spahr, pastor of Grace Church, Greensboro, conducted the devotionals, using as the subject, "The Way of Life."

Following the devotional service, Mrs. R. M. Andrews very graciously welcomed the members of the Board and the visitors. Mrs A. R. Badger, of Baltimore, responded most happily.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon, the President, gave an interesting address, in which she described the missionary activities of the Society, and paid tribute to some of the pioneers in the work. Following the address, reports were heard from officers and secretaries. In the afternoon the reports of the Central Committee was read, and the various Branches heard from. Miss Mabelle Shaffer, Field Organizer, spoke on "Training Children in Christian Leadership." Rev. Lawrence Little addressed the meeting, using as his subject: "Our Young People in Christ's Plan."

At 6:30 the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Church, High Point, entertained all those attending the meeting with supper in the lodge room of the church.

The evening service was held in the First Church, the anniversary sermon being preached by Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., President of the High Point College who used as the subject, "The Way of Fellowship with Men." A communion service followed, conducted by Rev. A. G. Dixon, president of the North Carolina Conference, and Rev. Geo. P. Brown, Pastor of the First Church, assisted by the visiting ministers.

Rev. O. B. Williams, pastor of the Community Church, Thomasville, conducted the devotional service on Thursday morning, using as the subject "The Way of Peace." Following the devotionals interesting reports were heard from our workers: Dr. T. R. Woodford, Pine Ridge, Kentucky; Mrs. F. W. Cook, Pittsburgh Missions; Mrs. A. E. Craig, Business Girls' Home, Baltimore; Miss Grace Brown, work among foreigners in Ohio; Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Children's Home, High Point; Rev. Homer Casto, Bethel Home for Tubercular Men.

The afternoon session was given over to a discussion of the missionary problems confronting the Branches and Auxiliaries. The meeting was in charge of Mrs C. S. Kidd, of the Eastern Branch.

Following the afternoon session the delegates paid a visit to the Children's Home where they were served supper, and afterwards entertained with a splendid program given by the children in the Home.

The Friday morning devotions were led by Rev. N. G. Bethea, who had as his subject "The Way of Love." This was followed by a business session lasting until eleven o'clock, at which time Miss Mabelle Shaffer preached a sermon, the subject being "The Spirit of Missionary Service." She emphasized willingness in service, using as the theme "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord. I'll be what you want me to be."

After dinner the banners were awarded, the rest of the afternoon being given to recreation. The delegates and visitors, through the special courtesy of the management, were escorted through the Southern Furniture Exposition Building in High Point. They were then driven to Greensboro, through the Guilford Battlefield, and on to the new Grace Church, where they were served tea by the ladies of that church. Back to the College for supper, and to the First Church for the evening service. Rev. S. W. Taylor of Burlington spoke on "The Way of Followship with God," after which each worker presented his phase of the work in which the Woman's Board is interested.

Saturday morning the devotional subject was "The Way of Power," presented by Rev. J. E. Pritchard, of Asheboro. Saturday's session was entirely devoted to business. The election of officers resulted as heretofore published.

The different sections of North Carolina contributed to the enjoyment of the members and visitors to the Board meeting. Long-leaf pine from the east, yellow azalea from the mountains, and a profusion of roses from the central section added to the attractiveness of the dining hall and assembly room. Souvenirs emphasizing the industries of the State were given, the Asheboro Auxiliary giving pottery from the Randolph County Pottery; the Asheville Auxiliary gave miniature baskets representing the mountain handicraft; the Burlington Auxiliary gave silk hose, representing the textile industry of that part of the state; wash cloths were given by the Greensboro Auxiliary, made in the Cannon Mills at Kannapolis, the largest towel mills in the world; pink granite paper weights, from the granite quarries at Salisbury, "Crume Salve," made in Raleigh, from the Winston Auxiliary; and delicious strawberries were furnished by the Henderson Auxiliary. Booklets, and descriptive matter, of some of the cities and sections of the State, were distributed.

The meeting was a wonderful combination of business and pleasure. Much progress was reported along all lines, and a future of greater things planned. We feel that the coming together in North Carolina meant much to all. The work in this State was made more real to those outside of North Carolina, and the North Carolina folks have learned more about the work outside the State. It has bound us all together in one great purpose.

Mrs. C. W. Bates.

I WAS GLAD.

Katherine C. Montgomery.

I was glad when they said unto me,
"Let us go to the house of the Lord,"
When I heard this sweet verse that they read,
"I will draw thee with love like a cord."
I rejoiced when they prayed for the peace
And the wealth of the City of God;
That their hands held the sword of His mouth
And their feet with the Gospel were shod.
For the sake of believers who pray
In the churches of God everywhere,
May the knowledge of God be increased
Through the channels of worship and prayer.
I was glad when they said unto me,
"Let us go to the house of the Lord."
And in sin may my feet never stray.
May He bind me with love like a cord.

THE COROLLARY OF THE RESURRECTION.

It is well worth while to study the "wherefores" and "therefores" of Holy Writ. The deductions or conclusions which inspired writers set before us are often widely different from such as we would derive. Take, for example, Paul's exhortation at the conclusion of the great resurrection chapter. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." When loved ones are taken from us, the practical conclusion too often drawn is that there is nothing more to live for, now that they have been removed from our sight and fellowship. Paul's inference or conclusion is the very opposite of this. A faithful worker has been transplanted, leaving a gap to be filled. The glimpses we have into the blessed life are given as a mighty incentive to strive more earnestly to fulfill the purpose of our mission. The call is for steadfastness, for unshrinking devotion to our Lord and his truth, to more intense and earnest service for him and for our fellowmen, being stirred continually to such things by the assurance that our labor is not in vain, if in the Lord.—Selected.

"AS ONE THAT SERVES."

So ought every man to be. So must every Christian be, in proportion as he is Christian.

In thinking of service, it is easy to err in either one of two directions—to think of it in terms of menial position or else in terms of unusual opportunity. But service is not a place but a spirit, not where one is, but what one is. Reduced to simplest terms it means, others not ourselves. It stands diametrically opposed to selfishness. Whatever selfishness is, service is not. Whatever service is, selfishness is not.

Service is constant not occasional. It is a spirit so completely entrenched that it finds manifestation in all of the circumstances of life, both great and small, and it does one just as naturally as it does the other. When cause calls, it preaches grandly on Mars Hill, teaches inconspicuously by the riverside at Philippi, heals gladly at Corinth, and picks up sticks graciously at Melita.

Service is essential, not incidental. It is not something added to life. It is life, the throb of its heart, the beat of its pulse, the breath of its being. It is not something apart from life. It is inseparably intertwined with life. It is not a side-track into which we sometimes turn, it is the main-line on which we always move. It is not an attachment to our ordinary business, it is the motive-power back of such business. It is our business, and our business is it.

Service is a mighty revolutionary principle and as comprehensive as it is mighty.

It would revolutionize business. Now business is guided chiefly by the thought of how much it can get. Then it would be guided by the thought of how much it could give. Now it is a means of gain. Then it would be a means of good. Along this line Dr. Josiah Strong speaks forcibly and, we fear it must be confessed, truly. "What is it that the stock-holders of mines, factories, railways and express companies demand of the management? Is it the greatest possible good to the public, and the best possible wages to employees, with slight reference to dividends? Or is it the largest possible dividends with slight reference to the general good and to the wages of employees? When it is said that a man is doing a splendid business does it mean that he is rendering great service to the public, or that he is making great profits? When a business 'doesn't pay,' are we to understand that it is unprofitable to the public or to the one who conducts it? The object of business on the commercial plane is profits and service to society is incidental, or only a means to profits as an end. On the Christian plane the object of business will be service to society; and profits, however necessary, will be wholly secondary, and only a means to service as an end." Truly, this motive would be revolutionary. Some forms of business would have to be suspended altogether and most kinds would have to be fundamentally changed.

It would revolutionize society. Jesus said, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren neither thy kinsmen nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind." Society as organized today is on a selfish basis, a kind of principle of exchange. We give that we may get, and we give oftentimes only where there is probability that we can get. We favor those who will be able to favor us. [illegible] is bitched to the hope of realizing social reciprocity. This statement of [illegible] not to indict society for mentality to indict friendship, hospitality, but to arraign the selfish spirit that underlies so much of social activity. Under the teaching of Jesus, society is not to be reduced to further social aspirations, but is to be consecrated to the cause of human well-being. When social contacts are regulated to the end of [illegible] human welfare, society will undergo a mighty transformation.

So of all other human relationships. It will even revolutionize religion. Unconsciously, but really, religion sometimes becomes a means to an end, and that end personal advantage. It is quite possible that there may lurk in the background of laborious, painful activity for the welfare of the race this concealed, but present expectation to profit personally through labor directed to the help of others. It may indeed be subordinate, but sufficiently present to vitiate the simplicity of sacrificial consecration. The good of others is eagerly desired, but self interest is prominently enrolled therewith. This attitude arrests the full outflow of the self in behalf of others. Christianity itself would be revolutionized if service without thought of self might become completely sovereign.

Service is a magnificently transfiguring principle, gloriously transforming the life wherever it rules supreme. Service is another name for love, not that form of devotion that loves another even as itself but that higher form of devotion that loves even as "I have loved you." Love not order is heaven's first law, and when it becomes earth's first law, then earth will become blessed even as heaven is blessed. The thought of man is [illegible] supreme, but deified never aspired higher than that.—Selected.

WHAT LISA HAD TO GIVE.

"I'd like to give a thousand dollars, and I have only ten cents; but I'll give that," said Lisa to herself and with an unclouded face she placed her little all on the plate.

She thought she gave only the dime in words, but she gave a drink of water to a thirsty child, and food to a beggar. She gave a helping hand to an old lady crossing the crowded street, and she gave a smile and a kind word to a discouraged boy.

She carried a bunch of flowers to a sick neighbor and she offered to take care of the baby that the weary mother might rest awhile. She found grandmother's glasses, and had father's slippers and paper ready for him when he came in tired at night.

All this and much more did Lisa give. Silver and gold she had none, but such as she had she freely gave, out of the very fulness of a loving little heart.

And He who seeth in secret took note of Lisa's gifts and accepted them.—The Child's Gem.

LONELY ELSIE.

E'sie was very lonely, for her twin sister Helen had the measles, and was therefore shut up in a room on the top floor a'l by herself.

Of course, Mother was with her all the time, and could not even come near Elsie, who missed them both very, very much.

Daddy and Nurse did their best for her, but, of course, Daddy was at business all day, and Nurse had many things to keep her busy, so time dragged and the days seemed very long. Daddy often brought home "surprise packages," that they opened together with many a laugh and joke. Every night she sat with him while he ate his supper, and every morning trotted down to the gate to see him off to the city.

One morning she told him she was very anxious about Clarabel, her big French doll, "who really seems as if she was going to get the measles. Of course," she went on, "the poor dear ought to be in bed, like Helen, but she has no bed, and I dare not put her in my crib, for fear I should get ill too, for that's just why Helen has to keep away from me, Nurse says."

"Dear, dear," said Dad, as he kissed her good-bye, "We must see what we can do about it."

Of course, none of E'sie's little friends could be with her, and one day seemed longer than usual, for it was raining hard, and she could not go for her daily walk.

So she was even more happy than usual when she saw Dad turn in at the gate, a big wet bundle in his arms, and she rushed down to meet him.

"Oh Daddy, Daddy, I'm so glad you've come at last," she cried as he bent down to kiss her. Of course, she was just dying to know what was in the bundle, but was too polite to ask. It MIGHT be medicines for Helen, but it did not look like that sort of a package.

"Ah," said Daddy, "Wait til you see what is in here. Keep away dear, I'm too wet for anything. I'll carry it upstairs and Nurse and you can open it while I change my wet clothes."

So Nurse helped her, and what do you think they found?

A lovely little doll's bed, with a white lace cover and hangings, and really-truly mattress, sheets and pillows.

"Isn't it beautiful," cried Elsie, clasping her hands. "Now my poor child can go to bed and have the measles comfortably."

"You go and fetch her," said Nurse, "while I get your supper ready."

Off flew Elsie to get Clarabel, not even waiting to put on one of the pretty night gowns Aunt Dora had made for her.

But, oh, what do you think?

Poor Clarabel was ever so much too big for the pretty bed, and fell right out on the floor.

Elsie was so disappointed she burst out crying.

"Why, what's the matter," cried Daddy as he came in.

"Oh, Daddy, Daddy, I'm in dreffful trouble. The pretty bed is too little for my baby."

Daddy put back his head and burst out laughing. "Why, I forgot to tell you! See here." And he did something, and the bed got larger, and larger till it was quite large enough for the poor invalid.

"I quite forgot to tell you it was an extension bed," said Daddy, "so there you are."

Elsie picked Clarabel up in a hurry and tucked her in her cozy nest.

"Now," said Daddy, "let's come down to supper, for I am hungry, and I have splendid news for you."

"What is it?" asked Elsie.

"Well, tomorrow Mother and Helen are going to the seashore, and you and I will go down on Friday, and spend a week there with them."

"Oh, that is lovely," cried Elsie, "Now my lonely days are all over, and we shall all be together again, Mother, Helen, you and I."—Selected.

THE EXPEDITION.

Greg Campbell's ambition was to become a naturalist, like Beebee, and his friend Al Sutton was interested in photography, so the two boys thought they could make a good working team of themselves. Greg's father encouraged his son, and Greg had a lot of notebooks, handbooks, jars and microscopes. Then Al suggested that they go all alone camping in the woods to study Nature at first-hand.

After some argument, the boys got permission. They borrowed a pup-tent from a neighbor and bought knapsacks. With a cup and spoon and a pan, one blanket apiece and their toothbrushes the boys thought they could do very well.

They planned to explore a small mountain about 15 miles away from town. The railroad ran nearby, and they decided to ride there and beg the conductor to let them jump off.

The conductor was good-natured, and agreed to slow down the train so the boys could get off, but he warned them against camping on Glebe Mountain.

"There's a crazy old feller lives up there," he said solemnly. "They say he kills boys. Besides I hope you brought guns and revolvers because I've often seen large bears and wild cats. In fact, we sometimes have to hold up the train for five or ten minutes while the critters cross the track!"

"Yeh," grinned Greg, "guess they must travel in packs."

"It isn't the number," said the conductor. "It's the boldness of the critters. The way they stroll along the track is fierce!"

"Yeh!" said Al, and the conductor winked at some of the men passengers.

As the train drew near the mountain, the boys got ready to jump off. They were passing one of the seats, when an old lady sitting there caught hold of Greg's sleeve.

"Here, son," she said, kindly, handing him something white, "my daughter used this to cover her baby's carriage, but she don't need it now that she's gone away. You can have it to keep the flies off."

Greg flushed with shame and indignation but he was too polite to spurn the old lady's offer, even if she meant sarcasm. He muttered, "Thank you ma'am," and gave a sickly smile as he took the netting and tucked it under his arm.

Their mothers would have had fits if they could have seen those boys jump off that train, but they landed on their feet and began to trudge along, as if mountaineering were one of the things they'd done "nothing but."

They had only gone a little way into the wilderness when they saw a porcupine curled up in the crotch of a tree. Greg wrote something about it and Al took a photograph, then they found a large fierce spider carrying a sac of eggs, and Greg captured her in one of the pill-boxes he had brought along for that purpose.

Bacon and flap-jacks taste pretty good out in the woods. They had brought along the kind of flour that only needs a little water to make the most delicious of flap-jacks.

"You know," said Al, "this is fine, but I'm being eaten up."

"The punkies are fierce," admitted Greg, but as a matter of fact, the small midges seemed to prefer Al.

They made things so lively that the boys were glad to move on, after wiping off their cups with the last flap-jack.

The rest of the day was a glorious hike for the boys. They blazed the trees as they went so as not to get lost, and finally late in the afternoon, they made camp. By this time the punkies were out in swarms, creeping into the boys' hair and down their shirt collars and biting like sixty.

"Where's that stuff that old lady gave you on the train!" demanded poor Al. "Give it here, quick!"

Fortunately Greg had it, and they both thanked the lady in their hearts for it, until to their dismay, they found that the smallest and hungriest punkies could go right through the mesh. They made a big smudge in their camp-fire, nearly smoking out their eyes, but the punkies didn't mind. Finally Greg said: "Let's go on. They can't settle so on us while we're on the move."

So move they did, while the woods became darker and darker. At last they came upon a log cabin with a light in it. They both thought about the crazy man the conductor had spoken of, so they began to steal along softly like Indians. Noisely they tipped to the window, meaning to get a glimpse of the occupant and decide for themselves just how crazy he was. As they drew near, a most delicious odor of fried ham and coffee drifted out to them.

Greg peeped in and saw a tall bearded man sitting on a box and eating off a small kerosene-oil stove. The man never moved, or stopped eating, but he cried out in a nasal voice: "Wall, come in, come in, your poor lunatics!"

This made the boys feel foolish so they came in, and the man gave them ham and coffee and soda crackers. Al was dancing and batting around all the time, while large red spots on his face and neck and hands increased in number.

"What you boys doin' here?" asked the man in a friendly tone.

"We've come to camp and study Nature," explained Greg.

"Nature, eh?" said the man. "Wall, now thar's human nature and good-nature and bad-nature. I should think you could git all that in town."

"We can," smiled Greg. "But that isn't the kind we're studying. Trees, plants, and especially animals and insects are what we are after."

"I've had enough of studying insects!" burst out Al.

"Punkies seem to bother you," observed their host. "Wall, I'll tell you something. All you got to do is to toughen your skin and you won't even feel 'em."

"Isn't there anything else to do?" inquired Al.

"Go where it's dark," said the man. "They don't bother you in the dark. Thar's only mosquitoes then."

Al thanked him for his advice, took the pup-tent and the old lady's netting and made for the darkest spot in the woods.

Greg sat with the man awhile and talked, and finally accepted a nice place on the floor to sleep on. But first he thought he'd wash up, and the man gave him a basin and pointed to a bucket of water. Greg bathed his face and then brushed his teeth, the man watching him with interest. After he was through, the man got up and said:

"Wall, now, I allus wondered what these here leetle brushes was fer. I seen 'em in the store. Guess I'll try it out, if you don't mind."

Greg said nothing while he watched his host give his teeth the first brushing they had ever had in at least 55 years.

"Say!" the man exclaimed. "That's a fine little invention, I wanna tell you!"

"Well," said Greg, "look here. I'll give it to you."

"No!" exclaimed the man. "I hate to rob you."

"Don't feel like that," said Greg. "We have got another one. My partner has it."

The next day Al refused to stay and be punkie meat any longer, so the Nature study expedition was "off" for the time being.

"Come back in August," said the man. "They ain't any punkies here then, but they's other kinds of insects to study."

The boys promised to come back and then they hiked down to the railroad track and sat down to wait for the train.

"Next time we'll be better equipped," said Greg.

"I dunno," grunted Al, scratching vigorously. "The only useful thing we had was that netting."

"And our toothbrushes," put in Greg.

Concord.—Gen. 26:15 was the text from which Pastor Fogleman, preached Sunday. The sermon was made very plain and very interesting. In his message he first talked about the necessity of water for the body. He then contrasted it with the need for the Water of Life. Mr. Fogleman also brought out the thought, in conclusion, that Isaac had to give up certain rights and privileges in order to perform his duty to his people; and that we must be willing to give up some of our rights and privileges in order to perform our duty to others.

Our revival meeting is to begin next Sunday conducted by Rev. J. D. Wilson, D. D. of Reidsville, N. C. We are earnestly praying that we shall have a real revival, and that many souls may be brought into the kingdom. We hope that others will also pray for our meeting. A number of group prayer-meetings are being held in different homes of the members, to pray especially for the meeting. We hope that these prayer services will bring us in closer relation to God, and fit us better for the things He would have us do during the meeting.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the church is doing fine work. They have pieced a number of beautiful quilts and sold them to [illegible] for some fine things; they are always busy to do.

The Junior age girls of the church pieced one square, with their names [illegible] on it, and presented them to the Society. When it was completed it was very pretty. The last meeting of the society was held at Mrs. D. A. McLaurin's.

Don't forget to pray for our revival.

Denton, N. C.—We are indeed glad to inform the readers of the Methodist Protestant Herald that we are still alive, and at work for the cause of Christ. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with an enrollment of 123. However this number is not as large as we hope for, or it should be. But our attendants are lovers of the teaching of Christ, and attend each Sunday to learn more about the O'd, O'd Story of Jesus who was crucified for you and me. O! That every one would show this love to their Christ.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JUNE 6.

Jacob and Esau.

Lesson Text: Gen. 33:1-11.

Golden Text: Eph. 4:32.

The Central Truth: The friendly meeting of Jacob and Esau was a plain and forcible demonstration of that maxim of Solomon: "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." Prov. 16:7.

Scriptural Points.

1. In his flight from Padanaram Jacob faced two dangers,—the pursuit of Laban and the meeting with Esau. There is no doubt but that Laban pursued Jacob with evil intent. But God spoke to Laban the night before he overtook Jacob and warned him against doing him any harm. Their meeting was friendly and their parting more so. After Laban's return Jacob cleaned house by putting away all idols and instruments of idolatry. After this a host of angels met Jacob. This meeting signified a measure of divine favor.

2. A messenger was sent to Esau with an olive branch of peace. The messenger returned with the startling announcement that Esau was coming to meet Jacob with four hundred men. There is no doubt but that they were armed and were coming with warlike intentions. The threat of twenty years before was about to be executed. To meet this danger Jacob betook himself first to prayer. His first motive in supplication was deliverance from Esau and his company. But Jacob's own sin and shortcomings loomed up so large that he prayed the most for a spiritual uplift. He wrestled till the break of day for a blessing from God. And it came in most wonderful profusion. There came a change of heart, a change of life, and a change of name. To him the wrestling angel said, "As a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed."

3. Jacob seeks to appease his brother with a large gift, large enough to make an ordinary man feel rich. Jacob must have been a rich man to be able to make such a magnificent present. But Jacob was now deeply sensitive of the great injustice that he had done his brother and he wanted to make full amends. He had cleared accounts with God, and he was anxious to do the same with Esau.

4. Jacob made a third attempt to be nice to Esau. He gave him the oriental homage of politeness. He called him his lord and treated him as such. He bowed his regards seven times. And his concubines and wives, with their children, also came and bowed their respects.

5. The heart of Esau was completely won over. He ran to meet Jacob, hugged him, and kissed him. And tears of real joy flowed freely. It was a happy meeting.

6. Esau was disinclined to accept the present. But when he saw how anxious Jacob was to make this gift, and that he would not be content unless he accepted it, he finally received it with many thanks and good wishes.

7. The secret of Esau's change of heart must have been in answer to Jacob's prayer. It may be that God appeared to Esau, as He had appeared to Laban, and prepared the way for a peaceable meeting. And the politeness and the present contributed largely to the abounding joy on this occasion.

Practical Points.

1. The road to reconciliation is often a thorny one. One must needs go by way of the cross. But it is many times worth it. The cross of shame and humiliation is a small price to pay for the crown of honorable rightness with the world and with God. "Is thine heart right?"

2. A world-wide brotherhood of lovers was the ideal and passion of the Man of Galilee. Jesus died to abolish wars, strife, resentment, and all sin. The atonement provides for the reign of peace, love, and good will. To be a lover is to bear the most honorable badge of Christian knighthood. "Let brotherly love continue." Heb. 13:1.

3. Love is always bearing gifts, burdens and sacrifices for the joy, benefit, and honor of the loved. Love never tires in its ministry of helpfulness. "Love is strong as death.... Many waters cannot quench love, neither can floods drown it.." Song of Solomon 8:6, 7.

4. Love is always genuinely polite. "Doth not behave itself unseemly." Love cheerfully takes the second place, or sits at the footstool of privilege and promotion. "Finally be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." 1 Pet. 3:8.

5. Beware of a feigned and selfseeking affection. Such hypocrisy is most damnable. It is born of the bottomless pit. "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12:9, 10.

THE PARABLE OF THE STRAINED WIRE

By F. C. Hoggarth.

There is an old legend of a knight who had chosen a solitary fort beside the Rhine for his dwelling. Filled with a curious notion of having music about his lonely home, he hung wires from turret to turret that on this improvised harp the winds might play. But the days brought no music.

One night the sun set threateningly; then a storm broke of terrific force. The old knight grew strangely restless, and presently he went outside into the storm. He saw the lightning slashed blackness, and presently he heard at the heart of the night's wildness a melody. His wires were playing. There was music from that unexpected quarter. All that they had needed was a storm to rouse their songs. As Dr. Hutton points out, the very word strain has a dual and suggestive meaning. It applies equally to the stretched wire and to the music that sings in it. A strain is both tension and song.

Many of the world's noblest songs recall the knight of the Rhine and his storm music. They also are harmonies won from a storm melodies heard at the heart of wildness. How true that is of many of the greatest Psalms! "In peace I will both lay me down and sleep for thou, Lord, alone makest me to dwell in safety," is a storm song. It was beloved of Luther, for the reason that, born in the wild, it speaks most comfortably to those whose lot it is to live in the wild. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear," is the tuneful confidence of one whose days were troublous and whose adversaries and foes were round about him in much threatening.

So is it with our greatest hymns. Luther's "Ein Festé Burg," Cowper's "God Moves in a Mysterious Way," Julia Ward Howe's "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory" are all songs born of storm.—Selected.

"WE SPEAK THE SAME LANGUAGE."

The motor bus that ran between towns in the mining district jarred to a stop midway in the hills. "Engine trouble," said the driver and set to work. The passengers got out and stood in an anxious group, for a bitterly fought strike was in progress; there had been riots and violence and threats of worse things to come.

"You never can tell what will happen when these foreigners get out of hand," said one man; "they're irresponsible."

Just then a nervous woman clutched her husband and exclaimed, "Look! Here they come over the hill. Oh! They'll rob us, perhaps murder us!"

The other passengers turned to look. Over the brow of the hill came a straggling gang of unkempt men. They paused to survey the scene below, shouting to one another and gesticulating. Then they started down the hill.

The men began to ask one another what they ought to do to protect the women, some of whom were hurriedly secreting their money and jewelry. Everyone was certain that the foreigners were bent on violence.

Among the passengers was a pretty dark-eyed, dark haired young woman who had been pointed out as the famous opera singer visiting our shores for a concert tour. She listened for a moment to the men's shouts and then said in her precise English, "I will go see what it is that they wish." She walked out to meet them and as soon as she spoke two or three doffed their battered caps; then one by one the others followed their example. She came back in a moment, smiling.

"We speak the same language," she said, 'They have no wish to do harm. They came to see if they could help the man with the motor car. They also said, since the day is so hot and dusty and we may have long to wait, they would bring us fresh water from a cold spring near by. Yes, I am quite sure they will not hurt anyone. You see, we speak the same language. I understand."

When we and our neighbors speak the same language we shall find that most of our differences vanish, and that those that do not disappear can be adjusted without bitterness. We shall find that the things we feared in our neighbors either do not exist or hold no threat to us. We shall find our neighbors full of the same human impulses, ideals and ambitions that are our own springs of action. How often we are enemies because we are shouting at each other in strange tongues, each speaking a language of self-interest and self-seeking! The wise man tries to learn the universal language. Then he can approach his neighbors nd say, "We speak the same language, I understand."—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Mrs. Sarah Cox Stout.

Funeral services for Mrs. Sarah Ruanna Cox Stout were held from the home of Mr. nd Mrs. D. N. Trogdo , about two miles ast of Asheboro, on Wednesday morning, May 12th, at eleven o'clock, and interment ras made in the beautiful cemetery at Guilford College at two o'clock. The services were onducted by the writer assisted by Rev. Joeph Peele, pastor of the Friends Church at Guilford College, and by Rev. C. H. Hill, pastor of Richland Charge. Mrs. Stout passed to ier eternal home from the home of her laughter, Mrs. D. N. Trogdon, and Bro. Hill, he pastor of the Trogdon family, visited her uring her last illness.

Mrs. Stout was the daughter of Michael O. Cox and Orphie King Cox of Randolph County. She was born April 21, 1859, and departed this life May 11, 1926, having lived and erved for just a few days over 67 years. Her usband preceded her into the great beyond y many years, and left her with a large fam ly of children. Her struggles were many in earing and caring for these children; but she ravely and courageously took up the task nd performed it well, and it was as a mother hat her life shined most brightly here on arth. She leaves eight children as follows: Mr. M. D. Stout, Greensboro; Mrs. D. N Trogdon, Asheboro; Mr. O. R. Stout, Guilford College; Mrs. H. D. Crymes, Climax; Mrs. C. R. Beaman, Troy; Mr. Ivey E. Stout Salisbury; Mrs. R. V. Varner, Greensboro; Mrs. R. V. Watlington, Morganton; and Miss Fossie Stout, Morganton. All save the youngest one being married and having homes and children of their own. Besides her children nd sons-in-law and her daughters-in-law she eaves a number of grand children, one sister nd many friends to mourn their loss. Six of ier grand sons were the pall bearers, and sevral of her grand daughters were flower bearers. The floral offering which was large and beautiful, and the many friends gathered at her funeral service, attested the high esteeem in which Mrs. Stout was held.

For a long time it was my privilege to serve as pastor of Mrs. Stout in High Point. She nd her children were members of the First Methodist Protestant Church in High Point during their several years of stay in that city. Then when her two younger daughters Carrie and Flossie, took positions in the city schools of Greensboro she moved with them to this city, and they did the wise thing in moving their membership to Grace Methodist Protestant Church. Mrs. Stout remained a faithful member of Grace Church until the end came and she went home to join the church triumphant.

As her pastor for a long time, and as one who frequently visited her after she moved away from the church I was then serving, I can testify to the splendid Christian life she lived. She was as gentle and kind as a mother ought to be, and yet she was of a strong, rugged nature that knew no fear in the midst of the trials of life. I have seen her [illegible] of almost all circumstances the [illegible] to a widowed mother, and in all [illegible] stances she proved herself [illegible] true Christian mother. She was [illegible] noble women.

Death always brings sorrow, [illegible] were closest to her cannot help [illegible] pangs of sorrow; but we do not [illegible] shou'd really mourn for Mrs. Stout. [illegible] last few years she had been in failing health having a disease which was stabbing [illegible] heart, so she could not [illegible] here on earth. It is my understanding [illegible] stroke of paralysis was the immediate [illegible] of her death. She lived among [illegible] for the last few years making her [illegible] ly with her son O. R. Stout at Guilford College, and was in the home of [illegible] when the end peacefully came.

We feel to congratulate her today for she has gone beyond the pains, and [illegible] disappointments of earth to be with [illegible] ones already gone on before, and to [illegible] coming of her loved ones who [illegible] over there in the days that are to come.

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past:
The battle's fought, the race is [illegible]
And thou art crowned at last.
"Redeemed from earth and pain
Ah! when shall we ascend,
And all in Jesus presence reign
With our translated friend!"

Misses Annie and Mary [illegible] sang at the funeral services, very [illegible]

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."
And —"Abide with me: fast [illegible] tide."

May the dear Father of us all [illegible] and direct the bereaved ones.

Yours in the Master's service. A. [illegible]

Caudle.

Little Wilmer White Caudle, dear Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Caudle, departed this life at her home in High Point.

Wilmer was a sweet and promising [illegible]

She suffered untold pain for [illegible] fore she passed away. All that loving [illegible] and medical skill could do was [illegible] Her passing has left a vacancy in the [illegible] and a sadness in the hearts of her [illegible] erts, brother and sisters; they have a [illegible] tie to heaven.

They can think of Wilmer and always know where the little darling is.

There was a short service at the [illegible] then the little body was carried to West Side church where the service was concluded by Rev. W. M. Pike.

Then the little body was laid to rest in the church burying ground [illegible] flowers.

as long as her health permitted. She was a good neighbor and loved by all who knew her. Her christian character attracted people, and she had a large number of friends who will miss her. She was married in 1879 to William Daniel Kirkman who preceded her to the grave some years ago. She leaves to mourn their loss three sons and one daughter, W. Adger, Clark H., and Norman, and Lelia Kirkman. She will be greatly missed in the community, in the church, and most in the home.

Funeral services were held in Tabernacle church by Rev. J. A. Burgess and the writer in the presence of a large congregation. The body was laid to rest in church cemetery to await the resurrection morning.

"ONLY AS THEY RISE."

Thus only, according to Browning, do "angels reveal themselves to you. They sit all day beside you, lie down by you at night.... and all at once they leave you, and you know them." Know them for what they have been all the time, and we unheeding and unrecognizing their celestial rank. Life has so many unrealized links to the Infinite. God has so many fully credentialed but dimly appreciated ministers of His redemptive purpose. Often "a spark disturbs our clod," yet we admit the disturbance merely not the significance of it. 'Tis a lean day on which God fails to visit us with one or more ambassadors of His love. The trouble is that we become so stolidly accustomed to being met with blessing, we take for granted the whole scheme of kindness. In a world palpitant with God, who fills it to its utmost bounds, every day is revelation day for the attentive and responsive soul. Not a waking hour passes but we are freshly beholden to the Father of Lights. Whose grass a flower or plants a corn hill, watches a cup of cold water or smooths a pillow, for sake of others, is witness of God's good pleasure. Every highway cast up, every mountain tunnelled, for the feet of God's children "to make life' journey less toilsome"—speaks of God. The smile of encouragement the hand-clasp of a friend, declares our Father's. All the rainbow hues of life are the warm lights of the Divine Face, broken through the prisms of human service. Alas, that we are so slow to identify God's angels of benefaction! "'Tis only as they rise to heaven" that we recognize them for what they were and are in our lives.—George Clarke Peck.

I have never read nor heard a philosophic, rational, logical argument against Christianity; nor have I ever seen or heard a rational, philosophic, or logical argument in favor of any form of skepticism or infidelity. Jesus Christ was, and is, a Person—not a thing, not a doctrine, not a theory. Infidelity is not a person, not a thing, not a theory. It is a state of mind, an intellectual or a moral imbecility. It is a spiritual jaundice, sometimes green and sometimes black. They cannot be philosophically, logically, rationally compared. They are neither logical nor literal contrasts. The infidel is but the incarnation of a negative idea. He is absolutely but a mere negation. He stands to Christianity as darkness stands to light. Is darkness anything? Is blindness anything but the loss of sight? Is unbelief anything but the repudiation of evidence? One might as rationally load a cannon to fight against darkness as to dispatch a syllogism against a chimera.

Jesus Christ was a real Person, and had personal, positive attributes. He had a real and positive character, unique, original, transcendent. It was as fixed as positive, and as radiating as the sun in heaven. The originality and unity of His character is all-sufficient, in the eye of educated reason, to claim for Him a cordial welcome into our world and to hail Him as the supreme benefactor of our race.—A. Campbell.

THE MORAL RISK.

Some men who have plenty of money are a risk in a business way, while others who are limited in their resources enjoy an extended line of credit. The explanation is that character counts for more than cash. This is a lesson for the young man just starting in business to learn. He may not have much money, and his chances of accumulating a fortune may seem small, but if his word can be absolutely relied upon and if his moral character is above reproach, he will find many a helping hand extended to him as he fights his way toward success. Good character is an asset that all men may enjoy, because it is conditional upon what a man is, and not upon what he has.

TRYING TO SEE GOD.

The papers print a report that 200 people assembled in a grove in Minnesota to pray for a visible manifestation of deity. As was to be expected, they saw nothing unusual. A shower of rain at length broke up the assembly.

And yet it is the privilege of these people to see God. They failed because they went at it in the wrong way. They expected God to put on an appearance that would make Him visible to the eye of flesh. Instead of a change in the object of vision, the change needed was in the organ of vision. Instead of asking God to change Himself that they might see Him with the same eyes with which they see the sun and the earth, they should have sought a change in their own powers of vision in order that they might acquire the ability to see God. It can be done. We have the best of authority for saying so. One who came to reveal God and who said, He that hath seen me hath seen the Father, also said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Those Minnesota people were working at the wrong end of the problem. Instead of asking God to make a change in Himself, they should have been trying to make a change in themselves, in their own hearts.

WOULDN'T WE BETTER SHIFT THE EMPHASIS?

The world is much wrought up over the question of the origin of man. But when we stop to think about it we see that it is utterly beyond our power to make any change in our origin, however it was. We may glory in our ancestry or be ashamed of it, but we can't change it. The past is unalterable. But the future we believe is not yet determined. Our destiny we think will be shaped by ourselves. Believing this—and we have good reason to believe it—does it not behoove us to be more concerned about our destiny and less concerned about our origin? Let not curious questions take us from attention to the most serious concerns of the present state of existence. However we got here, it is certain that we will not stay here long, and it is a matter of very grave concern where we will go when we leave here.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee is now engaged with a hearing of a report of the Scopes trial. Bryan is gone, but Darrow is on hand. We hardly expect the court to find that the law against teaching man's descent from the brute is unconstitutional.

AN APPEAL.

May 31, 4:00 P. M., one of Shiloh's best members, a teacher of the young woman's class, Mrs. J. B. Leonard, is undergoing a very serious operation at the Lexington Hospital.

I am asking that all praying people of the entire conference pray for her recovery.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

SO VERY IMPORTANT.

Every pastor is asked to send to Dr. R. M. Andrews, President of the High Point College, a CORRECT mailing list of the families on his charge. It is exceedingly important that this be done SOON, and that the post office addresses be absolutely CORRECT. This mailing list is to be used by both the college and the Children's Home. The purpose is to mail literature to your people betimes from the College and also from the Home.

Please help by getting these names and correct addresses to Dr. Andrews at an early date. Surely you will not fail in this important request.

Also please note in Herald last week, and also this week, and if you were asked to take part in the program of education among the churches during the three Sundays in June be sure not to disappoint us. Take your place as best you can. If sickness or distress keeps you from going, please do your best to get some one else to go in your place.

Home Coming Day.

Next Sunday, June 6th, will be memorial and home coming day at Mt. Pleasant church near Kimesville, N. C. on state highway No. 60. This church is one of the largest in south eastern Guilford and with its large membership is a great force in the life of its section.

Preparations are under way to make the day a notable one, and former members, and friends from various sections are expected to be present for the exercises. At 2 P. M. a special Memorial address will be delivered by Dr. W. T. Whitsett. The present pastor, Rev. G. P. Millaway, is well known and popular, and is seeking to make this one of the notable days in the church's history.

THE INFLUENCE OF A SERMON.

John Newton preached in an English village. Such was the indifference that only a candle came to hear him. But among the number was Scott, the commentator. The sermon turned his thoughts toward the truth, and all the Christian influence of Scott's Commentary may be traced to that sermon. That restricted service, which seemed almost like wasting time, may have done more for the world than any other service in Newton's life. The world is listening yet to that sermon.—Methodist Recorder.

THE RULE OF THE CHRIST.

The will of Jesus Christ is supreme. He is the Master of men. His authority is unquestioned. His kingdom rules over all. He brooks no rivalry. He is the most imperious potentate that ever graced this planet. The meek and lowly Jesus has become the King of kings and Lord of lords.

He rules the universe imperiously in order that He might serve mankind graciously. He says, "I am the bread of life," and the only bread of life. You must take Him, or starve your soul. He says, "I am the door," and the only door of hope. You must enter by Him, or stay forever outside the pearly gates. He says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." You must find the way to God, to service, and to glory through Jesus Christ, or be a hopeless wanderer from the good and right way. He is all and all to this fallen race.

It is the rule of love. Love stooped and kissed a rebellious race in the manger of Bethlehem. Love entwined its everlasting arms about the leper, the demoniac, and the dead and imparted to them the health, the holiness, the beauty, and the hope of heaven. Love bled on Calvary and liberated a race of slaves. Love ascended to glory and blazed the way to the city of God. And love pleads at God's right hand that we might praise Him forever more.

—From the Word of Life.

—Dr. W. P. Lawrence was found dead in bed in High Point on Tuesday morning. Heart trouble is believed to be the cause of his death, as he had consulted a physician the day before, complaining of his heart. He was for years a professor in Elon College and leaves many friends who will be sad to hear of his death. He was 58 years old. He leaves a family. He had recently engaged in business at High Point, but had not moved his family from Elon.

THE CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT IN CHINA.

By Lloyd Balderston.

The outlook for Christianity in China is encouraging. Controversy among missionaries seems to be less virulent than it was a few years ago. All the testimony I got indicated that the anti-Christian movement was helping rather than hindering, because anything which makes people re-examine the ground of their faith is almost certain to strengthen that faith. There are some missionaries who denounce the Y. M. C. A. as an un-Christian institution, one basis for this being that some of the men in the Association are not literalists. I saw the Y. M. C. A. at work in many places and was much impresed with the spiritual quality of the men, both Chinese and foreign, and with the variety and extent of the religious work they are doing. Coupled with this are many activities not definitely religious, but certainly most of these are valuable in one way or another. Educational work is conducted by the Y. M. C. A. in many places. A reason for this is that there is always more demand for school facilities than can be satisfied. Another is that the business of conducting a school gives the institution a reason for being, when in the minds of many old-fashioned Chinese it would have none if it merely had a gymnasium and swimming pool and pool room.

I saw some moving pictures advertised as Y. M. C. A. attractions, which, if one may judge by the advertisements, would have negative religious value. With our own world so nearly movie crazy as it is, I could hardly base a general condemnation of the Y. M. C. A. in China on that fact alone.

The interdenominational feature of the Y. M. C. A. is particularly valuable. A powerful solvent of denominational differences is work done shoulder to shoulder with those of different church affiliations. The Y. M. C. A. in China is a Chinese institution, with Chinese boards of directors and under Chinese control. The officers of the National Committee are outstanding leaders, not only among Christian, but among non-Christian Chinese.

The Church of Christ in China, with headquarters in Canton, is a union of some seven different groups, under Chinese control. I had talks with people who are concerned in this new venture, both Chinese and foreigners. All were enthusiastic in their confidence in the future of the organization. In forming such an organization. perhaps the Chinese are pointing the way for us in the West.

Besides being present at the second biennial meeting of the "China Association for Christian Higher Education" at Shanghai Baptist College for two days, I visited many schools in various places. I was deeply interested in the work going on, and in the readjustments which are taking place. Whatever adverse criticism the total work of missionary education may merit, that it has in many ways rendered to China inestimable service is generally acknowledged. These and all other schools are continually struggling with the problem of how to persuade Chinese youth that it is honorable to work. The corollary to the ancient honor accorded the scholar is the idea that scholarship is the road to ease. This idea dies hard.

Just now a live question confronting all mission schools is that of registration with the Government. The new regulations place certain disabilities upon graduates of unregistered schools, and prescribe terms of registration. These include a Chinese principal or vice-principal, a Chinese majority on the managing board, and certain restrictions in regard to required courses in religion. I was present during several discussions on the question of applying for registration and heard reports of several others. I think the tendency in these discussions was toward preparing to apply.

In all the discussions of the Association, the Chinese participants showed to very good advantage. No one attending a meeting like that can find any ground for a feeling of race superiority on the part of Westerners. Perhaps the finest address of the whole convention was by David Yui on the needs of the Christian movement in China. One of the needs which he named is for statesmanlike vision in facing the problems which confront Christians in China. "When we shall have attained such a point of view, our differences will become matters not of hostility and division, but of enrichment and fellowship."

HOW DOES THE DEVIL LOOK?

Lucia Ames Mead.

The professor of sacred art distributed three photographs to each member of the class. The lesson was on the Temptation. One reproduction was of Ary Scheffer's well-known figure of a weak Christ calmly replying to the vigorous tempter on the mount who appeals to Him to throw Himself down and show His magic power of saving Himself—a tolerably respectable devil this, for whom one could have some admiration. The next was Hofmann's Christ, a strong, majestic figure with uplifted hand sternly rebuking the skulking, sinister Satan who with clenched fist, baffled and helpless, slinks out of sight. The third picture was the modern masterpiece of Cornicelius, hardly known to the American public, which presents one of the noblest faces of Christ painted since those of Raphael and Titian and Bonifazio. Here was a face whose dark, luminous eyes seemed to be looking into his own soul and also through the soul of the beholder. The black hair and beard in disarray, the attitude, and even the hands all indicated spiritual struggle; this struggle and its triumphant outcome made all that followed and even the crucifixion logical and certain, as Milton in his "Paradise Regained" with his rare penetration showed it to be. In that sadly neglected masterpiece, the poet foresaw that the life decision was made then, and that the answer to the Tempter at the beginning of his career was the supreme act.

The professor's talk was illuminating; but strangely enough, neither he nor his listeners saw the main defect in all the portrayals of the devil. In the last and noblest picture of the Christ, the devil with his great batlike wings and scrawny hands holding out a crown has a peculiarly hideous mien. None of the pictures came within a thousand miles of the spiritual truth.

Ruskin said: "It is a state of mind very much to be dreaded for a man not to know the devil when he sees him," and James Russell Lowell in discussing "New England Two Hundred Years Ago," sententiously observes: "If the devil take a less hateful shape to us than to our fathers, he is as busy with us as with them; and if we cannot find it in our hearts to break with a gentleman of so much worldly wisdom, who gives such admirable dinners and whose manners are so perfect, so much the worse for us." Bernard Shaw in his "Superman" saw what the painters have all missed—that the only devil who could tempt any one, especially the Christ, is an accomplished, friendly person who comes as a prudent and discreet adviser.—Zion's Herald.

A BOY'S CAMP IN GREECE.

By L. Ray Ogden, Director of Boys' School, Island of Syra.

The boys I am working with are not the sons of families in comfortable circumstances, sheltered from evil and taught within the home standards of right and wrong. They are the product of world war demoralization. They came into American orphanages suffering from starvation and almost every form of disease. They had been subsisting on their wits, when almost every mouthful of food they had swallowed had first been obtained through some act of cupidity or a more desperate impulse. A large number of them were without any schooling. Many bore a grudge against humanity in general for the cruel hardships they had been obliged to endure.

Not promising material, one will say, from which to make upright citizens. But wait a little.

In order to reduce overhead expenses to the lowest possible figure, the Near East Relief orphanages are very large—the one at Corinth numbering about two thousand children, and a similar number being cared for on the Island of Syria, while in the Caucasus, the great orphanages at Alexandropol contained at one time more than twenty thousand children. All their lives before coming to the orphanages the boys had been deprived of play and all the normal experiences of a child's life. It seemed, therefore, important that they should be taken in smaller groups and given an opportunity to express themselves more naturally and spontaneously than could done in the daily routine of the large orphanages.

So it was decided to establish a summer camp to which the boys might come in units of one hundred and remain for two weeks. This would give an opportunity for closer association with the boys, for my personal conferences, and for the use of some searching method of uncovering and correcting old faults.

The camp was managed with the utmost simplicity. No superfluities were allowed in the supplies. There was no communication with the outside world. A most simple life was lived, of preparing and eating food and policing quarters, of sports and sleep and walks and talks.

The talks were the prime factor in the experiment. When we received, nearly three housand years ago, from one who knew these ery countries during His own boyhood, the dmonition, "Know Thyself," it was unoubtedly meant that unless we did know ourelves no progress toward the advancement of ither individual or state could be made.

In the talks we first teach these boys to now themselves. We do not mince matters hen we show them the state from which they re emerging, at the same time pointing out o them that they alone are responsible if that tate should continue.

Many of these warped little minds have to e freed from a "grudge." Some have to be ntangled from a web of thought that has led hem to feel that the world owes them somehing, and consequently that they owe the vorld little. Many have bent under the weight f the very word "orphan" and feel that they annot surmount the stigma that attaches to t. I have been asked more than once, "What hance has an orphan?"

All of this mass of surging thought has to e stirred in the talks, and stirred vigorousy sometimes to bring things to light. The ight thrown upon the "thing" that raises its ead out of the brew is often a cruel light. Still n all the work with the boys here, this proess of bringing to the surface has to be gone hrough. Once things are brought out and vell-aired, practical, constructive measures an be applied.

The constructive talks, in which parable and xample are freely used, usually follow this rogram:

Taking Stock: Gardener, stockraiser, merhant—boys.

Laying a Foundation: Buildings—boys.

A Captain and His Ship: Preparation in ort or on the high seas.

Hero Worship: Influence of older boys on ounger.

Womanhood: The standard of a nation.

Personal Purity: Younger boys and older.

Personal Problems and Questions: For oldr boys.

Testimony and Decision: Of boys themelves, last night in camp.

Followed by:

Peter's Decision: Bold in the presence of riends but tempted to cowardice when actully put to the test.

Now on Saturday nights the boys take turns y units (there are 100 boys in a unit) in givng a little entertainment, and every time I m amazed at the way they develop in music nd the little skits they get up. Their group ames and their stunts are most interesting. Mr. Wilcox, the educational director, says hat here one finds the project method in eduation in actual practice. We do not entertain hem, but they take turns in entertaining in wholesome and simple ways the rest of the oys and us.

Every Sunday night our boys gather togethr for their evening meeting. We grown-ups marvel at the way in which the boys themselves do it all. This is the program given last Sunday. The boys sang both Greek and Armenian chants, then "Faith of Our Fathers" in perfect English. There were a few musical numbers, then a fifteen minute talk by one of the leaders, a boy of sixteen. He read his Bible verse and then gave his talk without the least hesitation or embarrassment. The meeting closed with one unit singing in beautiful harmony "Abide with Me" in alto and soprano. These boys are from seven to ten years of age, taught entirely by their 17-year-old leader, who is now also teaching in the orphanage school. Each Sunday night different units have their turn. Of course we, their elders, help in the planning and preparation, but it is the boys who do the work. It has brought tears to the eyes of visitors who have gone into the orphanage dormitories where one hundred small boys were saying their prayers for the night, singing, repeating a prayer, and then tucking themselves away without a whisper. That, too, was due to their own idea of the way it should be done after their camp experience. They were never told that they should do this, except perhaps by their own boy leaders.

I have never in America seen boys take so wholeheartedly and unreservedly all the teachings and ideals of a Y. M. C. A. camp and then follow them so consistently after leaving the camp. Never in any American camp have I seen boys so touched and so affected by the lessons from the life of Christ. They were so impressed by His power to resist temptation, and then, too, by His desire to be baptized as a further sign of purity and submission to the will of His Father, and of making the right start in His life work, that the boys would not be content with doing less themselves.

Finding how moved they were, I urged that when they went to swim that day they should make that act one of purification of mind and body, with earnest prayer that their new purposes might be strengthened. I never believed until I learned of the response on the part of the first group that it would be taken so very seriously and become so lasting in effect. Silently, from the camp talk every boy went to the water, prepared himself, then they sang together one of their Church baptismal hymns and went in where every lad washed himself every bit of his body thoroughly, and then dozens of them asked their friends to baptize them. I find since that it was spontaneous with them, for they never talked of it outside. Some adults might call this sacrilegious or profaning a sacred rite, but they would not if they could but have felt that spirit and seen the results. It would be a hard heart indeed that would not melt when, on the last night of each camp, those boys, by scores and hundreds make their confessions, and express their new determinations and their gratitude. The priest of the ancient Eastern church who gives communion to our hundreds once told me that he had never found such silent and genuine devotion as among these boys, and gave all the credit to the spirit of our work, as do the orphanage teachers and leaders.

THE CULTIVATED CONVERSATIONAL VOICE.

By Luther K. Long.

In the intimate relationships of life—in the home and among friends—the average person finds the largest and the most important sphere for the use of his voice. Here it may be sweeter than music, and more persuasive than eloquence.

We must always carry about with us essentially the same form and features with which nature has endowed us. The voice—being to a much greater extent under control of the will—is far more subject to improvement.

A voice may be naturally squeaky, shrilll, high, excessively, loud, harsh, combative, monotonous, or contentious. In various combinations, such qualities conspire to cause many otherwise attractive persons to make an unfavorable impression. How often do we, by the use of these same qualities, irritate, antagonize, or put to sleep, those whom we would soothe, instruct, persuade, or entertain?

Is it possible to make of the every-day, conversational voice a more pleasing and effective instrument for expressing our thought and feelings? It is, and the task is not too difficult. Care is required. For we must remember that the voice of the accomplished singer, has undergone discipline; and all agreeable and impressive readers and public speakers are such because their voices, some of them originally very ordinary, have been improved by persistent training. Why not, then, give special attention to the conversational voice?

Clear and distinct in utterance, medium to low in pitch, mild or strong in force as the occasion may call for—these are the qualities of voice one should endeavor to acquire.

A disagreeable manner of speaking is often due to a defect or to a disease of the nose or of the throat, readily relieved by treatment or an operation. Or the unpleasantness may be only a bad habit, the result of thoughtless imitation or the failure to maintain a thoroughly self-respecting attitude.

If one thinks before speaking, not only considering what words but also what sentiments to use, the voice will be better controlled, and will more perfectly accomplish the speaker's purpose.

Listening carefully to cultivated voices, while associating with refined people, is an excellent practice. Special vocal exercises, under the direction of a competent critic, will surely result in marked improvement.

But character is the most important factor in voice cultivating; because manner and speech are but the over-flow, or fragrance, of character. The angry person shows anger in his voice. If you are refined, gracious, sincere, your voice will exhibit these qualities.

However, one should not count too much on the unconscious, automatic regulation of the voice. An early beginning and faithful practice are necessary in order to eliminate faults, and to acquire excellences.

To use mild speech, to give the soft answer, to say the kind word, to speak the truth forcibly and in love—these are every-day requirements and opportunities. They can be met successfully only by the person whose everyday, conversational voice has received adequate cultivation.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Saturday morning, May 29th, was spent in the District Rally at Brown Summit, on Haw River Circuit, taking part in the discussions.

There was not a large crowd present, but the addresses were good, and the interest intense. It was more than worth my trip over there to hear the address on Foreign Missions by Dr. J. D. Williams. And some of the rest of us tried to make helpful addresses. I feel sure that the rally grew in interest until the close on Sunday afternoon.

I am hoping that all the rallies held Saturday and Sunday were helpful, and that they will result in great good.

There being no rally in the sixth district, I had the privilege of attending two Circuit rallies in that territory on Sunday.

Davidson.

Sunday morning, bright and early, Rev. E. G. Cowan and I started for Chapel Hill church on Davidson Circuit to assist Rev. C. E. Ridge in a Circuit rally. Brother Ridge had planned it well, having arranged for two young people from each church to give recitations, and having arranged for an abundance of special music. He had good singing both by his local people and by those invited from High Point and elsewhere.

It was truly a great day for the people of Davidson. They were there in large numbers, and they seemed to enjoy the day.

I preached at 11 o'clock, and Brother Cowan gave an address on Young People's Work in the afternoon. It was a real pleasure to be there and to have the privilege of speaking to so large a crowd of earnest listeners.

Denton.

Sunday evening found us in Denton participating in another Circuit rally. The Denton Church was comfortably filled with people. These also proved to be eager listeners.

Bro. Cowan spoke first, and I followed him. We had a good meeting which I trust will be helpful to the work on this Circuit.

Elwood Carroll and Rev. Glenn Madison, College students, are serving this charge this year. Rev. A. Ridge and Rev. C. E. Ridge were both in the audience.

Children's Day.

It is very important that, so nearly as possible, every church in the conference plan to hold Children's Day. This is the oldest, and to be sure, one of the most important special days of the year. If you were in Japan as Clyde J. Auman and his wife are, or in India as Jesse F. Minnis and his wife are, and knew the needs there as they know them, and they were in the home land as you are, what would you have them do about holding the Children's Day services and taking an offering for Foreign Missions? Of course you would expect them to rally to the cause and hold the service, and take the offering. Go thou and do as you would like to have them do were the conditions changed. This is one thing every church and Sunday school can do, and it will help so much if all will do it. I am glad to know that some have already held the services, and that many more are planning to do so.

THE CAT IN THE BAG.

Little Arabella Frost was almost asleep; her curly head was nestled on the soft pillow of her brass cot, and the dark lashes rested on her pink cheek. Almost asleep, but not quite; the little ears were still open, and she heard mother say to big brother Joe, "Then the cat is out of the bag."

"What cat, mother?" asked Arabella, sleepily, without opening her eyes.

"Never mind, baby; go to sleep," said mother.

"What did they put the cat in the bag for?" Arabella asked herself; "it must be a wild cat." Just then she saw the bag—it was empty; she saw the cat—it looked very wild; it seemed to be biting and scratching many people, and in a great fright Arabella screamed and—woke up!

You see, she had gone off to sleep and dreamed about the cat getting out of the bag, and mother had to take her on her lap to get the little girl quiet again.

Then mother told her that letting the cat out of the bag meant telling a thing that ought not to be told, and that a story was sometimes just like the cat she had dreamed about; it hurt people when it ran about.

"If you hear anything ugly about your little playmates, darling," said mother, "remember what the cat did when she got out, and tie your bag as tight as you can."—Elizabeth P. Allen.—Selected.

High Point.—Last Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service Dr. Brown delivered a splendid discourse from the text in Mark 14: 4; "Why was this waste of the ointment made?" These words were uttered by Judas on the occasion of the anointing of Jesus by Mary with the costly spikenard. Dr. Brown said that there is always some one to throw a damper on every beneficent enterprise, building a new church, contributing money for foreign or home missions by asking this question, "Why waste so much money?" This memorial to Mary and her devotion to her Lord will live through the countless ages.

There was no evening service on Sunday on account of the sermon delivered to the graduating class of High Point High School, in which the members of the congregation have joined for many years.

Mrs. Dorda Lee Cecil of 113 W. Farriss Ave. is the latest addition to our membership, she having united with our church on Sunday, May 23rd. We are delighted to welcome her to our ranks.

On next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock the Commencement sermon will be delivered by Dr. J. W. Hawley in the First Methodist Protestant church. Dr. Hawley is one of the ablest ministers of our denomination, and is at present the pastor of First Church of Pittsburgh, Penn. This event will conclude the work of the second year of the College. Next June the first class will be graduated, and commencement exercises will be held.

The North Carolina Christian Endeavor Convention is to be held in our church June 18-20, and approximately 250 delegates are expected. Many plans are being formulated for their entertainment while in the city.

Holt McPherson, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. McPherson, student at the State University, was recently awarded a charm for excellence in writing by the Tar Heel, student newspaper of the University.

Chas. C. Robbins, Jr., and Garland McPherson are members of the graduating class of the local High School. The Commencement exercises are being held in the Municipal Building this week.

Miss Lucille A. Pickens arrived at home Sunday evening from Baltimore where she has been since last October. She has taken a course in Library training at the Pratt Library, and has also been studying Pipe Organ at Peabody Conservatory of Music.

At a recent meeting of the City Council, Dr. S. S. Coe was re-elected City Physician.

Mr. Henry Koonce has accepted a responsible position with the Atlantic Coast Line Railway at Wilmington, and his wife will join him there later to make their home. Our congregation will part with this popular young couple with great reluctance.

TO PASTORS.

—If any of the brethren of the conference can use me in any of their revival meetings during the summer or early fall, I shall be glad to offer my services, and would appreciate the work.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Edited by Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro, N. C

Dear Friends of the North Carolina Branch:

You are anxious to hear the latest news from our missionaries, and I am glad to be able to tell you that in most instances the news is good. The lives of all our missionaries have been spared another year, and their work richly blessed.

In China, as you all know, the past year has been full of political unrest, and war has been going on intermittently most of the time. The Christian General, Feng, has had a number of troops stationed at Kalgan, and our mission has felt quite protected. Many of the officers and the soldiers have taken part in the meetings, some young officers' wives have been studying in our Bible Woman's School, our own Dr. Fleagle took care of Gen. Chang's wife when the first and only son was born, thereby gaining great honor for our mission and its doctor; and in many ways the presence and the Christian influence of the troops has been a great help.

Just now the papers report the defeat of Gen. Feng, and his withdrawal from Peking. How reliable these reports are no one can say. Should his defeat be really a fact, and his downfall a permanent one, his enemies may loot his former headquarters, and cause much disaster and suffering; but time alone can tell what the result may be. Our missionaries do not seem to fear any harm to the mission compounds themselves, but to the homes and business houses of the city. Let us pray that right may prevail and that no evil may befall the people of that North China district, who in years passed have had to suffer so much from famine, flood, and looting.

Dr. Roberta Fleagle was due to come home for her furlough last year, but because of the lack of helpers at Kalgan she graciously consented to stay another year. If conditions are such that it is not safe to travel, she will sail for America in June, and spend at least part of a year in America. Overwork and the long stay in the high altitude of Kalgan have combined to affect her eyes, and she has suffered much from headache, so she should have a time undisturbed for rest and recuperation before returning to China. She is very anxious to take back when she returns, a teacher and a nurse. Perhaps in North Carolina there may be just the workers needed; are there any young teachers who will hear and answer the call of China?

Mrs. Soderbom, who was Miss Maude Lawson of Newark, New Jersey, will look after the affairs of the school while Dr. Fleagle is absent; and a friend and neighbor, Mrs. Ahlbratt, wife of the British and Foreign Bible Society worker, and a trained nurse, will keep the dispensary open and do what she can for the sick and diseased women and children. Dr. Fleagle's salary is paid by one of your own churches, Grace Church of Greensboro, and if she finds it possible to visit North Carolina while in America I am sure you will give her a warm welcome.

In Japan Miss Mary Williams is busy every day visiting the smaller towns in the Nagoya district, holding mother's meetings and children's meetings and meetings among the factory girls, teaching Bible classes, and classes in English with the Bible as the textbook. She will not teach a class unless they are willing to study from the Bible, knowing full well that by the time a man has studied the Bible as an English lesson he is more than apt to become a Christian. Many conversions are made in that way.

Miss Ethel Hempstead has charge of the kindergarten at Atsuta, a suburb of Nagoya. She and Miss Williams live upstairs in the new kindergarten building. Besides the work of the kindergarten proper, Miss Hempstead visits the homes of the children, teaches the mothers sewing and cooking, and care of their children; teaches Sunday School and Bible classes, and conducts mothers' meetings. She expects to return on furlough about next January.

Miss Alice L. Coates, who is at the head of our work in Hamamatsu, is in America now, on furlough. She expects to return to Japan next August. She is the only "foreign woman" in Hamamatsu, a city of about 65,000 people. Last year, on the occasion of the silver wedding of the Imperial couple, she received the very high honor of being "recognised" by the government because of her meritorious service for the country, and was presented with a silver cup engraved with the imperial crest.

In Yokohama, at the Girls' High School, we find Miss Olive Hodges and Miss Evelyn Wolfe holding the fort alone. Miss Dawson is on her way home, having visited our mission station in India on the way. Miss Helen Barns is probably on the Pacific ocean now, coming home for furlough. Her eyes have been giving her much trouble of late, and she is coming home a little early, so as to begin treatment for them at once. The oculist tells her that rest and care will soon effect a cure. More missionaries are sorely needed in Japan evangelists, teachers, and kindergartens; who will volunteer to go?

At Dhulia, India, the ranks of the women at Birdwood have been reduced by one, Mrs. Hite having left for America. Her health has not been good in India, and she finds life there impossible. Miss Miskimen is in charge of the school, and is doing splendid service. Several of the larger girls are ready to go to Poona to higher schools. One of the teachers, who has longed to take the doctor's training, is being sent to the mission hospital at Vellore by the young people of the Connellsville district in Pennsylvania. When she receives her medical diploma, she will return to our mission as our own doctor and work for us in Suvarta hospital and the regin around Dhulia.

The hospital is finished, and almost ready for equipment and furnishing. In the meantime, while waiting for a doctor, it is being used for the girls' school, until a new school house can be built. A legacy of $1000 left by Mrs. Davitt of Pittsburgh is to be used as the nucleus of a building fund for the school. Miss Grace Perley, the nurse, has fitted up a little room in the bungalow as a dispensary, and is working day and night caring for the sick. There have been two epidemics of flu among the girls of the mission this year and a doctor is badly needed to open and operate the hospital. We are in correspondence with one on whom our hopes are centered.

Miss Frank is to be the evangelist in charge of the Bible women and have oversight over the spiritual instruction of the women and girls of Birdwood, when she has advanced a little more in the study of the language. She has passed the first examinations with honor, and is learning fast.

One thing I forgot to tell you in the Japan news. A legacy of over $700 was left to Indiana Branch, W. F. M. S. and the Branch voted to give it to help erect a kindergarten in Hiratsuka, a town badly destroyed by the earthquake. The Christian people in the town (our own church is the only Christian church there) had planned to put up the school themselves, so as to have a place where the little children could be taken care of and taught in Christian ways, but the losses sustained in the earthquake made it impossible for them to give the necessary funds. The minister's wife is a trained kindergartner, and could take charge of the school; so the Indiana women felt that here was a great need which this legacy would largely supply.

Scholarships and missionaries' salaries have been very well paid up this year. Almost all the Branches have done their share, some of them much more. Let us pray for more workers, and bend every energy toward the instruction in missionary lines of our young people, from whose ranks we must look for volunteers. We can all pray; we can all pay; we cannot all go, but we can help send those who can.

With love and best wishes to North Carolina.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Nearly eight hundred Sunday schools, at this writing, May 27th, have ordered the Children's Day supplies, but many more schools ought to send for the free supplies, and hold a service, for their own sake, and for the work of the Kingdom.

One fourth of your church's General Conference budget can easily be raised through the Children's Day offering for foreign missions. It will greatly help our Board if you will do this.

Just mail me a card at Berwyn, Md., stating how many services you need, and they will be mailed to you promptly, and without cost.

There is ample time to prepare for a fine service, and to raise the largest offering in the history of your school.

If you have not ordered supplies, let me hear from you at once.

THE MENACE OF HERION ADDICTION.

The health commissioner of a great city of the Middle West, investigating the cause of the rising tide of crime, reported that girls and boys are appearing in the underworld by the thousands at very tender ages—14, 15, 16, 17—practically all of the girls and most of the boys having come by the swift drug road.

Though herion is a comparatively new drug the number of herion addicts in one great city alone is estimated by the city bureau of criminal identification at nearly 200,000, practically all of them below the age of 30, constituting nearly 60 per cent of the inmates of correctional institutions of that city.

The herion addict at a certain stage of the drug effect considers himself a hero and seeks heroics; not long afterwards, unless he can get more drug, he suffers from cramps, diarrhea, nausea, vomiting, extreme depression

Scientific men, in view of the hopelessness of permanent cures, call drug addicts "the living dead" and estimate that there are already so many addicts in this country that if placed in single file the line would extend from Boston, Mass., to Los Angeles, Calif.

The alarming increase in drug addiction is due chiefly to the fact that the heroin addict has a mania for recruiting others and soon builds up a "snow gang," the drug being supplied him to give away free to the boys until they are "hooked." Soon the older members of the gang go forth and build up similar gangs. Formerly the expansion of drug addiction from opium, morphine, and cocaine was comparatively slow by process of addiction: now the increase is galloping through a process of multiplication.

The driving power which is spreading the disease of addiction is the enormous profits in the traffic. In the case of heroin these profits are simply fabulous, amounting often to thousands of per cent. Even in the schools; but chiefly after leaving schools and before settling down, like a young bird just out of the nest, youth of both sexes are "hooked" by the thousands, almost without expense, while they hold forth, particularly during late hours at dance halls, parties, pool rooms, and so forth. It would be possible to "hook" more than 1,000 youthful addicts into this incurable disease worse than death within one week with 1 ounce of heroin. The young addict in his heroin psychology makes a wonderful bandit, available for the organized looting of wealth. With his desire for heroics, he seems to love to carry out the will of his masters in daring hold-ups and robberies, unknown in former years; besides, for his own purpose, he needs more and more of the drug supply as time passes for himself. At first a few dollars' worth a day will suffice; before the end he will need $25 or even $50 a day. A youth in the Kansas State Penitentiary has records showing that in a very short period he had spent $20,000 on drugs and had never earned a dollar. The same heroic psychology starts the youthful addict upon a career of recruiting others into addiction, all under cover, with very few obstacles in his path. It can be said that the heroin victim himself, rendered antisocial by swift degeneracy, has a veritable mania for recruiting others; thus addicts quickly become peddlers, and then the disease advances by geometrical progression as in a galloping form through rapid multiplication.

The seriousness of the situation can be appreciated from the statement of the commissioner of corrections before the House Committee on Education on the 16th of this month. May I urge the Members of the House to examine that statement and the other statements contained in the hearing?

Ignorance—The Real Cause.

Manifestly, no normal youth, or, for that matter, normal adult, would deliberately embrace this "living death" of drug addiction if he knew what it meant. The whole recruiting system is based on the ignorance of the victims, and thorough education would literally sweep away the very foundation of this hideous traffic. Let me cite an example:

"Tuffy Reid," a youth of 20, of Los Angeles, Calif., was hanged recently at St. Quentin, the California penitentiary, for murder committed while robbing a store. Before the jury and before the governor the youth, his family, and counsel sought clemency on the grounds that the crime was committed while the youth was under the influence of a powerful narcotic drug, seeking money with which to maintain his drug supply, under penalty of extreme tortures when deprived of the drug. He said:

I never committed a crime until after I was "hooked" at the age of 16. A peddler offered me a pinch of "snow," saying it was "great stuff" and would give me a kick. When I held back he said, "Oh, be a sport; try anything once." I did. But it was once too often. I never dreamed what it would lead to. Oh, if somebody had only warned me.

Just before the execution he gave a statement that ended with these words:

There are so many ways in which they are "hooking" the boys and girls. Why, in heaven's name, doesn't somebody warn them?—From a Speech by Congressman W. F. Lineberger.

MEETING OF THE UNION BOARD.

The annual meeting of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration met in the Pittsburgh Book Concern on Wednesday May 19th, 1926. All the officers were reelected.

Miss Alice Coates and Miss Helen Barns, our missionaries from Japan, and Mrs. H. E. Amos, editor of the Missionary Record, were present and were invited to honorary seats.

Japan. The usual routine business, based on communications from the three Missions and the quarterly and annual reports from all the departments, was transacted.

The Woman's Society of the Hiratsuka Church will raise Yen 1000 for building a kindergarten building, and the Ejiri Church has already raised yen 1500, and will strive to raise Yen 2500 for a church kindergarten building.

The Isebara church was dedicated February 17, 1926, the cost was Yen 4160, the church raised Yen 2000.

The minutes of the Japan Mission Conference arrived too late for the meeting, but Rev. P. F. Warner reports it was the best attended session, marked by presence of young people, delegates, etc.

Purchase of a lot for the Hamamatsu Church could not be granted, although the lease on the present lot has expired.

The enrollment of the Blind School, the Girl's School, the kindergartens, and the Nagoya College was very encouraging, and the reports of the evangelistic department, including the Conference were gratifying.

The Board expressed its appreciation of the generous help tendered by the Nagoya College students in building a Science Hall, they having offered to contribute Yen3,000.00, and the Mission to contribute Yen 200, and the students assumed further obligations in carrying forward their work of adding to the institution, having formerly promised Yen 50,000 represented by the two wings to the main building now in use, and another building they are to erect, as previously reported.

China. Actual warfare has come quite close to Kalgan was expected to develop there at last report. Scarcity of provisions, etc, greatly increased prices, railroad and mail communications interrupted and alarms and probable grave disorders have added greatly to the burdens of our faithful and uncomplaining missionaries.

They report that the schools may have to close, and the work in the outlying districts will likely be interrupted.

The Girls' School had 90 enrolled, the largest number in its history, and indicates that old barriers are breaking down, and womanhood in China is coming into her own. Dr. Fleagle's medical work has been very successful, and her influence has spread extensively, and the Chinese doctor with his assistants has rendered good service where medical aid is in great demand.

The report of the Boys' School arrived after the Board meeting, and the meeting of the China Mission Conference was postponed until more settled conditions. Already applications of refuges were being made to our missionaries for the protection of the compounds.

Added to war conditions, an epedemic of typhus fever has been raging in Kalgan, and our brother Williams escaped it by the barest fraction, due to the fact that he had prompt medical attention, but the Norwegian doctor at their hospital was dangerously ill with it at last report.

We call upon all our people to remember our missionaries and their colaborers in the troublous conditions in which they now are.

General Chang Chih-Shiang, governor of the province, and successor to Marshall Feng, the Christian General, sent a large photograph of himself to the Union Board. He too is an earnest Christian, and gave Bibles and testaments to his officers and soldiers.

India. The division of the work was approved. Rev. J. F. Minnis has the Boys' School, and part of evangelistic work, and Rev. P. M. Cassen, besides treasurership, has the evangelistic department. He desires a bungalow built in a town where he will be in close touch with his work.

Plans for repairing one of the bungalows on the Boys' School compound, and erecting a small building for the school were considered, but action was deferred. The work reports failed to reach the Board meeting. The financial reports were in order.

The missionaries of the three Missions were disappointed to learn that their budget had to be reduced, for the first time in our history but they have, in a commendable spirit of cooperation, tried to comply with the Board's instructions, and not be forced to drop any important work, but the latter has not yet been determined.

The Union Board is expecting the church through the Children's Day offerings to greatly increase the Board's resources so that it may meet its obligations, and maintain the work abroad.

The Executive Committee of the Board will meet in Aug., the day to be determined later

NOT UNDER CONTROL.

By Edgar L. Vincent.

Out at sea voyagers sometimes come upon ships flying a signal which means, "Not under control!" This is at once understood by seafaring men, and they know that out yonder is a vessel whose rudder is broken or whose machinery has become so disabled that no further progress in the right direction can be made. Helplessly the poor ship drifts about at the mercy of the waves, always a menace to the safety of those on board her and a source of danger to any other craft which may cross her track.

I have seen men thus flying the sure and awful signal, "Not under control." They may be reeling down the street with brain dazed by drink; they may be dressing or living at a rate far beyond their means; they may be just entering upon a career of dissipation Whatever it be, the danger signal is out. Their life-barks are not under control.

I have heard young men and women fly into a terrible passion because their parents did not think it wise to allow them to go into places of questionable nature, where they might meet temptations and influences which would tend to destroy the blush of innocence. "Not under control!" There could be no mistake about it.

A young man was beginning to use the cup of intoxication. His thoughtful and experienced friend says, "I am fearful that this will be the cause of your ruin." "Pshaw," is the impatient reply, "I am strong enough to stop when I want to. Do you suppose I ever would keep up a habit which I knew was injuring me? When I see that drink harms me I will stop."

Rudder unshipped. Drifting! Not under control!

When the great Brooklyn Bridge was built the man who planned it told the people who would thereafter have charge of it that they must obey certain rules in regard to the amount of the traffic over it at any one time. For a while these rules were strictly enforced. Then one day, all upon a sudden, down sank one of the great cables, carrying with it for several inches a precious human freight. God's hand was on the cable, and it did not go any farther. But that bridge never will be as strong as it once was. Now a solemn warning has been given that it will be perilous to overload the bridge again. It was that one first time which took away the strength of the cable. It is the first glass which places the young man "not under control."

How can we be sure that we are safely going over the course which will lead us home?

I have not known of one single young man who went astray when following the lead of him who said, "Follow me!" Placing our trust in him, if storms arise, he says to them, "Be still!" No broken machinery, no unshipped rudder when he is walking upon the wave beside us. You may ask the oldest man you know of anywhere whether he thinks you will make a mistake if you let the Man of Galilee pilot your life-bark, and I am sure he will say, "No, my son; with him you will always be under control."—Selected.

PAGEANT AT HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

Next Saturday, June 5th, at 3:30, there will be given a Pageant of High Point College in which the history of the college will be depicted. It is the purpose of the pageant to show in a most realistic way the beginning of the college, its growth and present status. All organizations will be represented in the pageant. There will be gorgeous costumes, music and mirth.

We sincerely want the friends of the college to be present. The weather permitting it will be given on the portico of Roberts Hall.

ATTENTION PLEASE.

Plan For Educational Campaign.

The meeting, held in Grace Church in the interest of the High Point College on May 11, directed a committee to put on an educational program, at an early date, and so conduct it as to reach every church in the Conference. Accordingly we have mapped out plans for such a campaign, and we are publishing complete plan herewith. And we are asking everyone who is thus appointed to fall in with the plan and help us to put it over. The failure of any one to respond will break the plan, and thus frustrate the purpose. We trust all will respond. But if because of sickness or distress you cannot fill the place you are asked to take then please secure some one to go in your place, and notify the chairman of the committee.

We are asking that, on the three Sundays designated, congregations will release their pastors for this important service. This is the most important work before us just now, so all of us must respond. Where we have been unable to fill all pulpits pastors will please arrange this as best they can.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JUNE 13.

Joseph's Fidelity.

..Lesson Text: Gen. 39: 1-6, 19-23.

Golden Text: Prov. 22:29.

The Central Truth: The abiding presence of God is the all sufficient guarantee of happiness, safety, and success.

Scriptural Points.

1. Joseph's dreams of greatness and his injudicious telling of them greatly angered his brothers. They could no longer speak peaceably with him. They plotted his death. They finally agreed to sell him to a company of merchantmen, who were on their way to Egypt. These traders sold him to Potiphar one of Pharaoh's military officers. They doubtless made a handsome profit out of this promising boy of seventeen.

2. "And the Lord was with Joseph." How condescending and kind was the Lord of mercy to keep company with this slave boy! It was not altogether sympathy that led him to do this. It was Joseph's humility, faith and faithfulness that claimed the divine presence.

3. "He was a prosperous man." He prospered for two reasons. He was diligent in business for his master. And the Lord smiled upon him most graciously.

4. Potiphar was quick to recognize the fine business qualifications of this young man. He a heathen man, was also quick to recognize the hand of Joseph's God in the large prosperity that came to his business and household.

5. In the course of time Joseph was promoted to be overseer of all the business affairs of his master. He was given full oversight over the other servants. The farm, the flocks, and home affairs were put into his care and oversight. Potiphar's confidence in Joseph was so great and implicit that he relieved himself entirely of any further concern about business affairs. He cared to know no more about what he had than to get three square meals a day.

6. "Joseph was a goodly person, and was favored." He had now grown to full manhood. He was good-looking, handsome, the kind of man women go crazy over. No wonder Potiphar's wife fell in love with him! No

FROM MOTHER'S TREASURE-BOX.

Gertrude Fisher Scott.

"Of course I shall be very sorry to miss Marian's graduation, and I suppose she will be disappointed too," said Mrs. Johnson at the table where she and her husband and little daughter were finishing their breakfast. "But if I am needed at Grandma Dearborn's I must go and help them out for a few days until they can get some one else. I know you two will be all right here with Delia to look after you, and we can telephone each other every day."

"Oh, Louise and I shall have a great time together; you know how well we got along before when you left us. We'll miss you all right, but that will make us all the gladder to see you back home again. You needn't worry a minute about us, and I'll represent the family when Marian gets her diploma."

"But why couldn't I go in your place to the graduation?" asked Louise of her mother. "I've never been to one, and I'd like to go with daddy."

"Well, perhaps you can, I hadn't thought of that. Little girls aren't generally interested in such things."

"But it's different when it's your big cousin, isn't it, that you like better than any of the others?"

"Yes, I guess it is. You'll enjoy seeing the boys and girls all dressed in their best, and the music and the pretty decorations, but the speeches may seem long and tiresome to you. Perhaps you can snuggle up against daddy and go to sleep while they are going on."

"Oh no, I wouldn't think of that, mother! If I go, I'll do what the other people do and pretend I'm interested anyway."

"Very well, then, Delia can help you put on your pink dress and tie your ribbons, and daddy will be proud to take you with him, I'm sure. And when I come back I shall expect you to tell me all about what happened and how you enjoyed it."

A little later in the morning mother said good-by to Louise and hurried down to the station to take the train. The parting was not easy, but she left the little girl playing dolls with three of her friends on the front piazza and knew that as long as she was busy she would be happy and not miss her mother much. Mrs. Johnson and Delia had mapped out a very full program for the rest of the week, and if it was carried out, there would not be many hours when time would hang heavy on Louise's hands.

So the little girl got along beautifully and didn't miss her mother at all—or at least she wouldn't admit that she did. But, with two such devoted slaves as her father and Delia to satisfy her every wish, that is not to be wondered at! There was one thing, though, that she had intended asking her mother but had forgotten, and it troubled her just a bit. There was nobody else who could tell her about this particular thing, so she had to decide about it herself and act accordingly.

Because she was so excited over the thought of going to her big cousin's graduation and talked about it morning, noon, and night, it seemed as if Friday would never come. But finally it did, and when daddy left the house in the morning he gave Louise a large white envelope with her ticket in it and said he would meet her in the assembly hall as near two o'clock as he could.

As the school building was just at the end of the street where the Johnsons lived, he suggested that Louise could go there alone after Delia had got her ready. This pleased the little girl almost as much as the thought of the graduation itself, for generally when she went places, some one went with her. It did seem as if she was really growing up!

All that morning Delia was busy with her sweeping and dusting and then with some cooking, so Louise was up in her own room reading a new book that her father had brought her the night before.

After a little, when she heard Delia go downstairs and into the kitchen, she closed her book, and went into her mother's room, just across the hall. Softly opening the top drawer of the bureau, slowly she drew out a light-blue satin box with pale-pink roses painted on the top and locked with a tiny silver key. Holding it tightly, she went over to the window and sat down in a little low-backed rocking-chair that had been her great-grandmother's.

She must have been there almost an hour, fascinated by the contents of the box, when she heard Delia calling her for lunch. Quickly she returned the things she had taken from the box—all except three or four—and locking it put it back exactly where she had found it. Then she ran into her own room, opened a pretty ribbon bag that hung on the door, and thrust in what was in her hand. As she went downstairs, there was a guilty little expression on her face, but Delia was too busy to notice.

As soon as lunch was over and the table cleared, Delia went upstairs with Louise to help her get ready. The ruffled pink dress with its short sleeves and low neck and the hair ribbon that matched had been new for Louise's birthday party and, as she herself said, "were her very bestest" and only for special occasions.

She didn't know how becoming the pink was or how pretty she looked, but Delia did as she said with a smile: "Now, if yer'll only act as well as yer look, yer father'll be that proud of yer he won't know what to do. You can start along now, only do be careful of the automobiles and don't get in their way. Have yer a handkerchief, dearie?"

"Oh, yes, in this, with my ticket," answered Louise as she took the ribbon bag and hanging it over one arm ran out of the room before Delia had a chance to say anything more. Out of the house she hurried and down the street, not stopping until she came to the yard just this side of the big school building. Turning in she stepped behind a clump of tall lilac bushes and opening the bag was busy for a few minutes with the things inside. Then she started on again and soon became a part of the crowd that was surging up the steps and through the open doors into the hall.

Mr. Johnson was later in arriving than he had expected, and when he took the seat beside his little daughter the orchestra was just beginning its first selection. He glanced hastily at his program, then at the people seated about him, and then approvingly down at Louise in her pretty pink dress and ribbons. But as his eyes reached her hand he started for a minute in astonishment and next frowned a little before he began to smile. Then he wondered where in the world the child had ever found the white kid gloves that were yellowed with age and many sizes too big for her and stopped at the wrist leaving the rest of her chubby little arms bare.

From the gloves his eyes wandered to the dull gold medallion that hung on a heavy chain from her neck, and then to a lace handkerchief pinned at her waist, and an ivory fan lying in her lap. Surely Delia would not have let her come to the graduation dressed like this! And if she hadn't got the things at home, where had they come from! He did hope none of his friends had noticed the adornments or they would think it time for her mother to come home and take care of her!

This was not the time or the place to ask Louise questions, so he tried to get interested in what was taking place on the stage. As the afternoon wore on, the overcrowded hall grew hotter and hotter and the ladies all around them were removing their gloves and fanning themselves vigorously. Still Louise sat with her gloves on, but finally she began unfolding the lacy fan and moved it slowly back and forth.

At this her father bent over and suggested that if she took off her gloves she would be cooler. So he helped her unbutton them and then slipped them into his pocket. As he did so a faint perfume seemed to linger about which set him to wondering where he had smelled it before and why it brought up pleasant memories.

At last the speeches were over, the diplomas given out, the graduates marched out of the hall, and the people rose from their seats. Louise would have liked to stay and talk to people, but her father seemed in a hurry to get home, so they went along as fast as they could. No questions were asked until they were upon the piazza in the wicker chairs waiting for some of Delia's cool lemonade, and then Mr. Johnson began as he handed Louise the gloves that had been in his coat pocket.

"Louise dear, where did you get all the finery to dress up in this afternoon? I've never seen any of it on you before. Somehow you didn't look like my little girl."

"Oh, didn't you like me, daddy? I did try to please you. I wanted to look the very best I could, 'specially when I was going in mother's place. They're her things—out of the blue treasure-box. She's let me look at them sometimes—and told me all about them. She wore the gloves at her wedding, and the fan when she graduated, and the locket has her grandmother's picture in it—the one I'm named for—and the handkerchief her Aunt Sarah brought her from Europe."

"But did she say that you could wear them all today?"

"No—I didn't ask her."

"Well, how did you get them?"

"I—I just unlocked the box; the key is always right in the lock."

"You mean you opened something of mother's that she keeps locked, without asking her first if you might? Why, I'm surprised! Suppose something had happened to these things that she thinks so much of! You never could have replaced them. I think we'd better put them right back where they came from before we do anything else."

"And then she'll never know that I took them out, will she?"

"Oh, won't she, Louise?"

"You mean that you're going to tell her, daddy?"

"No, I'm not going to tell her; some one else is, my dear—some one who knows more about it than I do."

"You mean me, don't you? Well, I guess I am the one to do it, after all, and I'm going to tell her two other things too: first, that I'll never touch any of her things again without asking her, and second, that I really did not enjoy wearing them so much, 'cause I knew all the time I was doing something that wasn't quite right. Graluation wasn't half as nice as I thought it was going to be, and I do not believe I ever want to go to one again."

"Why, yes, you will. How about your own?"

"Oh, that will be different, of course."—Zion's Herald.

THE LITTLE TOWN OF UPSIDE DOWN.

There was once upon a time a good little girl who woke up one morning and got out of the wrong side of the bed. It was a dull, rainy day, instead of a bright, sunny one, and she had wanted to play out of doors in the garden. That is the way things started.

When her nurse wanted to wash the little girl's face, she sputtered and she pouted. When her hair was brushed, she squealed and she cried. She wouldn't let nurse put on her stockings, and she didn't want any breakfast. After breakfast she sulked with her nose flat against the rainy window pane. She was as cross as cross could be if anybody spoke to her.

Well, while she was standing with her nose flat against the rainy window pane, a little elf hopped out of a raindrop and slipped in through the window ventilator. "Hello!" he said, "I've come to take you to the little town of Upside Down. Come along! All aboard for the Upside Down Place!"

He took the little girl and whisked her off, and the first thing she knew she was on a puffy-puffy train that had its engine at the back and not at the front, and the train went backwards instead of going the right way! The little girl kicked and she screamed, but the train kept on going wrong! "Where are you taking me?" she asked.

"I'm going to show you what the Upside Down country is like," the little elf answered. "You belong there because you've been doing everything wrong since you got up this morning. That's why you belong there, and not with right side up people. That's why I am taking you to the little town of Upside Down."

So they kept going on and on with the engine at the back of the train and the train going backwards instead of the right way. By and by the little girl noticed that the trees were all upside down, with their roots in the air; the sky was where the ground ought to be; the houses stood on their roofs, and everybody walked wrong side up. She didn't like it at all, at all.

"I do not want to go any farther," she screamed. "I want to go home."

"I can not take you home. You belong in the little Upside Down country where the little girls won't let their nurses wash their faces, where they scream and kick when their hair is combed, and where they won't put on their stockings or eat any breakfast."

There was nothing to do but just as the elf said. And at last they stopped at an upside down station and got out at the little town of Upside Down. "This is where you belong," said the little elf. "You don't belong where things are right side up."

So the little girl got out at the upside down station and walked through the upside down station of the little town of Upside Down. It was not at all nice. It was horrid. When she spoke to anybody she met, that person snapped and snarled or else that person sulked and pouted. O, the little girl did not like being treated that way at all. She began to think that that was just exactly the way she had behaved to her nurse. And she said to the elf: "I am tired of this upside down place, and I want to be right side up. Can't I go home again ever?"

"If you do things the right way," said the elf, "then you can go home. But you really belong here." And he looked hard at the little girl. "Let me see how you act when the nurse wants to wash your face," he asked. "Let me see what you do when she puts on your stockings. Do you feel like doing things right and eating your breakfast?"

So the little girl said: "I want to go home and be right. Please take me home, and I will be good." And she showed the elf how she would behave when she went home again.

"It looks as if you might go home," he said. "But I must be sure you can be pleasant before I take you. Smile."

So the little girl smiled. And they went to the station and got on the train that went the right way and not the wrong way, and they went come lickety-split.

When they reached home there was the nurse waiting for the good little girl; and the girl said: "Oh, I am not upside down and wrong any more. I am glad I am home, where everything is polite and right side up. I do not want to go to the little town of Upside Down any more."

And what became of the little elf? That I don't know, but I wouldn't want him to take me to the little town of Upside Down would you?—Congregationalist and Advance.

BASKET MYSTERY.

Six months ago a number of little baskets, of Bornean make, were strung on about six feet of fine copper wire and placed in the circular case of the Peabody Museum at Harvard, where other objects from Borneo are shown. Immediately after they were hung in place they started to rotate, at first very slowly, a quarter turn one way, then a quarter turn back. In about fifteen minutes they reached their regular period of about five and a half revolutions a minute, and are still keeping it up. Scientists from far and near have come to look at them, but have not been able to solve the puzzle. Two young men, a Belgian and a Frenchman, who are studying in Cambridge, are now investigating the problem. They found that they could vary the period of rotation by inducing negative static electricity. But as soon as conditions returned to normal the baskets dropped into their old swing. An electroscope placed in the cabinet beneath the baskets showed no electrical discharge. Several theories have been advanced and rejected. The most probable answer to this mystery, the investigators believe, is that static electricity is responsible, but the whys and the wherefores they do not know. "It may be an entirely new principle," one of the men commented. "We may not learn the answer for fifty years. Such things have happened in the history of science. Perhaps it is the same power that sometimes enables people to locate a spring of water underground with a hazel divining rod." Meanwhile, the whirling baskets continue to dance and to mystify.—Zion's Herald.

Revival Meetings.

Revival meetings on Granville Charge are announced as follows:—

Rehoboth, First Sunday in July, Rev. Edward Suits to assist.

Mt. Carmel, Second Sunday in July—Rev. T. E. Pierce to assist.

Union Chapel, Fourth Sunday in July—Rev. Geo. W. Holmes to assist.

We are anxious for gracious revivals in all the churches and earnestly ask your prayers in the interest of these meetings.

Married.

Occasionally some young people come out from Hendersonville and other parts to be married in the Granville parsonage.

In the last company which came from Henderson, Mr. Silas Powell and Miss Cornelia Montgomery were the contracting parties. These are splendid young people, Mr. Powell is a Methodist Protestant while Mrs. Powell is a Presbyterian. We wish for them a very happy life.

The Drought.

The outlook for a good crop in this section is proving more serious every day. What is the remedy?

First, it is our privilege to pray for rain. God certainly controls the elements and can send rain upon the earth.

Second, the wise man has said. "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of our increase" and so shall our barns be filled with plenty.

Third, trust the Lord and do our very best—leave results in his hands. "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed."

Henderson, N. C., May 29, 1926.

Browers Chapel, Richland Circuit.—Our Sunday school is moving along very nicely. Children's Day service was held the fifth Sunday in May. Collection, $8.35. Mr. Wolf from Asheboro was with us and gave us a very interesting talk that was enjoyed by all.

Mr. Tharp from Cedar Falls filled our pastor, Mr. Hill's appointment the fourth Sunday in May; he gave us a very interesting sermon.

There will be a Rally Day service at Charlotte Church the first Sunday in June. All the churches on the charge are to be represented by five or six speakers from each church.

Our protracted meeting will begin the second Sunday in July; pray for us that we may have a wonderful revival.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Brown's home was destroyed by fire on last Thursday afternoon. They have the sympathy of their many friends.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Mrs. M. C. Henley, Reporter.

Mt. Zion and Community.—Pastor Hunter has returned home on his second trip to Hot Point under the care of his physician. We filled regular appointments hoping every day that his health would so much decline. We have had him with us and that his physical condition is much improved.

On Sunday, May 9, at 7:30 P. M. Bro. Hunter preached a splendid sermon and at the close of the sermon our hearts were made glad indeed because Bro. Sam Lane, a young man we all have loved from his very youth up, came forward and joined the church.

At the close of 11 o'clock sermon on May 16, communion service was held and we were again made glad because of the goodly number that partook of this service.

Our Sunday school isn't near as large as we want it but there is some splendid work being done and some stick-to-it members being added.

We have recently enjoyed a two week revival meeting at night conducted by "Gospel Team" of Billy Sunday club, men from Winston Salem. We witnessed quite a number of conversions and more reclamations and hundreds of reconsecrations.

At Pinnacle school building the Gospel Team of Gibson and Pilot Mtn. are conducting revival services—these services having been duly arranged by Prof. Colley and the pastors of the three different churches of Pinnacle. The meeting is starting on its second week with wonderfully fine results. We see the preachers doing personal work in and out of church for God that have never been anywhere but bench warmers.

The Missionary Societies, both Foreign and Home, recently met and reorganized fully determined to do more effective work this year than ever—watch the Herald for their reports.

We have a cradle roll department in our Sunday school; on last Sunday a committee composed of Mrs. Odell Jones, Mrs. O. P. Jones, and Mrs. S. T. Lane was appointed for the promotion of this work.

On Sunday 9th. at 3 A. M. Dr. Schallet of Winston came to us at Mt. Zion and made a splendid address to men only. That was indeed helpful.

We are [illegible] to have the committee appointed by Bro. Smith and and make some definite plans to respect our dead more by keeping cemetery and surroundings more in order and clean. This work is to be done before the third Sunday in June as that is the day we will hold memorial or decoration day.

May God add His blessings to all deserving mankind. C. W. Allen, Rept.

Holicter Halifax Charge.—Since our reporter, Mrs. Edwards, has moved away and we haven't elected another one. I will write a brief report from this church.

I guess some people think that we all have passed away in this church as there has been no report from us, but we are not. We have just neglected sending in a report.

Several of our Sunday school members have moved away and this makes our attendance in Sunday school very small. We still have a few who are faithful to their Sunday school. We hope our Sunday school will take on new life and we will have larger attendance.

Our pastor brings us a good sermon every appointment. Our last appointment, he preached on the "Call to the Ministry." It was a splendid sermon. We all like Mr. Spencer fine.

A number of our Sunday school members attended the Sunday School Convention at Antioch Baptist Church. We all enjoyed it.

A Reader of the Herald.

North Davidson Charge.—We had Memorial day at Mt. Pleasant the fourth Sunday in May. Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., President of our college, preached the sermon; all who heard him enjoyed it very much. In the afternoon we had an address by Rev. N. G. Bethea of Lexington, on his trip to the holy land; he told us of some of the scenes over there. We all enjoyed the address very much. And we are always glad to have these men come our way. It was a good day, large crowds. We were in need of more parking room. One of the good things about the Memorial Service was the fact that it was held in the new church. Our people have worked hard, and have been faithful ever since the church was started, and stayed with it until its completion. They are justly proud of it, for it is a credit to any community, and we hope soon to have all the people of that community in Sunday school and church.

All our churches are getting along fine, all moving toward the goals for the year.

Say, I have something to tell you that will be interesting to all preachers in conference, even to Mr. "Slewfoot."

On Saturday, May 8, I was asked to meet a committee composed of Bros. Jesse L. Evans, Harper Leonard and others from Shiloh, C. M. Yokley and others from Bethesda, J. W. Walser and others from Friendship. After a little talk, a few consultations they turned over to me a new 1926 Chevrolet Touring Car. And asked me to drive it home, and use it, which I did.

I have not words to express to these good people my appreciation for their wonderful gift. It seems too good to be true; but it is.

I have never seen a happier people, they are so glad to see their pastor ride in a new car, and to know that they made it possible. And they have never seen a happier preacher.

And that is not all. Bro. Baxter Leonard and his brother Ed sent for me to come over to Lexington; I could not imagine what they wanted; but soon after I arrived they got into their car and asked me to follow them. I was still in the dark; but I soon found myself in one of the best clothing stores of Lexington. Then they told me to pick out a suit of clothes at their expense. Can you think of anything better than a nice suit of clothes as a gift? Just when you need it most?

Don't you think I have the best work in conference?

Well, that was not all. Bro. Ed Walser came by in his Sedan and asked me to go over to Lexington with him, which I did. When we arrived in Lexington at one of the best clothing stores in town, he turned me loose and told me that the Brotherhood Class of Shiloh had asked him to bring me over and for me to pick out a hat, a pair of shoes, a shirt, and they would pay expenses, they also gave me a nice tie. Well, read on— that is not all: for the ladies of Shiloh Sunday school gave Mrs. Troxler money to buy a hat, shoes and dress. And my! she looks fine all dressed up. Now you know I have the best folks in conference.

We are looking for great things this year.

Pray for me that I may be able to give these good people my very best service. In return for these generous gifts, and many kindnesses.

May the Lord richly bless the entire conference. And may there be many souls brought into the kingdom this year.

Yours for service. R. S. Troxler.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Sin Of Backsliding.

Text: "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." Heb. 3:12.

To sin against God is bad enough, even for a heathen. It is worse to sin against light and knowledge. And it is worse still to sin against experience and a most sacred relationship. Backsliding is therefore the worst form of transgression. It grieves the Father of mercies so much for one of His children by grace to display "a heart of unbelief in departing from the living God."

Backsliding is a sin of unbelief, a sin of not loving God, and a sin of self-destruction.

Let us first consider beckslding as

A Sin of Unbelief.

Unbelief is of course the parent of all forms of sin. It is therefore set forth as the damnable sin. "He that believeth not shall bedamned." But the unbelief of the backslider is much worse than the unbelief of the man or woman who has never been born again. After being saved by faith it is entirely too bad to lapse back into the meshes of unbelief. The unbelief of the backslider is three fold.

First he defies and sets at naught the authority of God. God is the rightful ruler of His subjects. He exercises the rule of a Father over His children. It is a rule of love and tender, watchful care. To backslide is to rebel against this rule of love. It is to say to God, "I will not have thee to reign over me any longer." It is to say to the devil, "I take you as my master from now on." Backsliding is defiant rebellion against the true and living God.

Backsliding is unbelief in that it disregards the mercy of God. The backslider treads under foot the Son of God, and counts the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and does despite to the Spirit of grace. He even goes so far sometimes as to crucify to himself the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame.

And the backslider displays unbelief in the power of God. God is able to save unto the uttermost all who come to Him in true penitence and faith. The Lord of grace and glory has placed all His omnipotence at the disposal of believers for growth in grace and usefulness. And the surrender of the child of God to the powers of sin shows that he no longer trusts in Christ's power to keep him saved.

Backsliding is also

A Sin of not Loving God.

Obedience is the best proof of loving God. Jesus said: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." And not to observe the commandments is to display a shameful lack of love.

To love God with all the heart, mind, soul, and strength is the first and great commandment. And therefore not to so love Him must be the first and greatest sin. And the Apostle pronounces a fearful curse upon all who do not love the Lord Jesus Christ. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema. Maranatha."

Any one who loves God finds pleasure in speaking to God in prayer and praise. He finds joy in listening to the still small voice, speaking out of nature, history and the holy scriptures. He likes to keep company with God by "fellowship with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ." And he also gets delight by doing His will in conduct and service.

The backslider lets go all these pleasures of loving relationship. He ceases truly to love God. He goes away from the Rock of his eternal refuge. The throne of grace is no longer a privilege and a joy. He goes back to the pleasures of sin for a season.

And lastly backsliding is A Sin of Self-destruction.

Backsliding destroys the peace of God in the soul. Peace is a fundamental grace of the new birth. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Peace is the result of reconciliation, the removal of all enmity against God.

The sin of believers disturbs this peaceful relation, renews enmity, and lets in a flood of dark forebodings. Unhappiness is the base of backsliding. The real enjoyment of religion takes its flight. And the poor backslider is rent with tormenting fears.

The sin of backsliding is destructive of the righteousness of regeneration. He ceases to be right with God. He becomes a wanderer from the pathway of rectitude. His pure soul becomes the receptacle of impure thoughts unholy desires, and unworthy motives. And his life becomes blackened with secret and open sins.

And the backslider eventually blots out his hope of everlasting life. He faces the darkness of dreadful doom. And his feet take hold upon death and hell.

Be warned against the awful sin of backsliding. Keep close to God in faithful obedience and service. He is able to keep you in the right way always. Rely on His power to save from sin and sinning. Rest on His precious promise: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee."

Glasgow-Riggan.

At the residence of Rev. and Mrs. J. B. O'Briant, June 1, 11 A. M., Mr. Marvin B. Glasgow and Miss Mamie Riggan were happily married by the writer. These young people are both of Littleton, N. C., and are quite popular among a wide circle of young people. The groom is at present engaged in business in Winston-Salem, N. C., and the bride has been teaching for some time in the public schools of the State. They are both members of the M. P. Church in Littleton and Miss [illegible] friends are wishing for them much happiness and success in life. J. B. O'Briant.

THE [illegible] OF [illegible].

[illegible] "I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." [illegible] "Stretching forward" [illegible] and [illegible]. It is a [illegible] into the air in [illegible] it is [illegible] to what he can [illegible] most [illegible]," he should [illegible] within range of it [illegible] will not hasten its arrival. If [illegible] freshness will not retard it. If sickness impends, fussing renders one incapable of meeting it. Do not "[illegible] the [illegible] dead wrong." Fussing is worse than [illegible] "Be not anxious," said Jesus to His friends. Solicitous, yes; but [illegible] can be [illegible] but never fussy. "I have learned to take great comfort in God," said James Russell Lowell. What use of having a God unless we can rest in Him? "Do to-day's duty well; we have no business with to-morrow. But even this side of that point of [illegible] we are not warranted in fussing. Believe in your cause, in people, in God—in yourself, as ordained by God. Then work, hope, strive, love, be patient—but do not fuss.—George Clarke Peck.

THE RULING PASSION.

"We cannot have two passions," said Hunt, the eminent artist. "No man can paint and love money." For substantiation of Hunt's sweeping statement one need but call the roll of earth's immortal artists. The moment a [illegible]—or, for that matter, a pen or a violin bow or a voice—becomes necessary, it falls like [illegible] from heaven. Commercialism [illegible] every great gift it touches. It is a blight [illegible] to the soul itself. Nobody can drive the [illegible] of two [illegible] passions. "I sing to God," said Jenny Lind of her great talent. That was her passion. I cannot imagine her as selling her gift. And any discriminating audience would recognize the difference. Without sacrilege no one can sell any part of himself—time, strength, devotion, ministry, love—to [illegible] such things is merely a new version of the [illegible] traffic in slavery. Imagine Jesus making a fixed charge for His kindness or His [illegible]! The best that He had, all that He had to offer, even His life itself, was a gift. "Wherefore God hath given Him a name that is above every name." He is the model. The more we approach to the model, the diviner our contribution to the world.—George Clarke Peck.

—No great good comes without looking after it.

Gillburg.—We are still trying to move onward. Our Sunday school is very small now but since warmer weather is here we hope it will be much larger. We are sure that if it were larger we could do much better work.

We were very glad to have our pastor, Mr. Chambliss, with us on Sunday night May 16. He preached a very interesting sermon to the mothers. We hope it was helpful to all. We were glad to have him again the following Sunday to fill his regular appointment at 11 o'clock A. M. He preached a splendid sermon. Everyone enjoyed it very much.

We are very glad that Mr. Chambliss is back from school so that he can be with us more. Pray for the progress of our Sunday school. Reporter.

West Forsythe Rally.

On Sunday, May 23, West Forsythe Circuit held a Rally Day service at Pleasant Hill church. The program opened with the song "Holy, Holy, Holy," followed by a song service conducted by Mr. J. D. Anderson, Supt. of Pleasant Hill Sunday school. Rev. Lawrence Little, Secretary of our Methodist Protestant Young People's work in North Carolina, lectured on the Sunday school lesson after which Mr. Ira Houser delivered an address on "Life's Purpose." Immediately following Dr. A. G. Dixon, presented an interesting and inspiring sermon. His message was "you are too good to sin." The congregation was then dismissed until two o'clock. A picnic lunch was served on the grounds which was thoroughly enjoyed by everybody.

The afternoon service opened with the song "All Hail the Power," followed by prayer by Rev. C. H. Whitaker, pastor of West Forsythe Charge. Then we had the reports from the Sunday schools. It followed from these reports that two of these schools were absent two ran all the year, and two closed during the winter months. Our pastor announced that the work on the parsonage was almost finished and invited the people of the churches to see it. Dr. Dixon presented Dr. [illegible] pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church in Winston-Salem, who spoke on the Budget. We must confess that if the budget is not raised it is not Dr. Compher's fault. Pleasant Hill then sang, "Crown Him Lord of all." Dr. Dixon then spoke to us on "Missions." This was interesting and very encouraging to the Societies of our church. Pleasant Hill then sang "Great is the Lord" after which Rev. Lawrence Little made an address on Young Peoples Work. Rev. C. H. Whitaker made a few remarks and the program closed with the song, "Praise God" and the Benediction.

This was West Forsythe's first attempt at a Circuit Rally, but it was a great success we expect it to be even better next year.

Saxapahaw Charge.—Silence is not always an indication of idleness. Although a report has not appeared from this charge in some time, we have been about our Master's business. Some needed improvements have been made. A few of the members at Orange Chapel recently purchased a beautiful new pulpit Bible for the church. Concord has just placed new linoleum carpet in the aisles, and put a new foundation under the church.

Several improvements have been made at Salem. The floor has been oiled, the aisles and choir covered, and, through the influence of some, Mr. Bradshaw of Greensboro has just donated a splendid new organ to the church. The pastor and entire membership of Salem church are grateful to Mr. Bradshaw for this generous donation.

All-day memorial services were held at three of the churches on this charge during the month of May.

Mrs. Martha Lewis, widow of the late Bro. Marly Lewis, has been in the Wesley Long hospital for several weeks taking treatment. We trust this good woman will soon be able to return home.

Bros. R. S. Woody and Foust Thompson are the nominees for delegate to the next annual conference.

The pastor is grateful to the following: Mr. and Mrs. Newlin Thompson, sausage, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Durham, canned cherries, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson O'Daniel, pear preserves, and to Mrs. J. W. Overman for strawberries.

H. L. Isley.

Reidsville.—The work at this place is progressing very nicely. Our pastor always preaches splendid sermons for us.

Our Sunday school is doing well, and the attendance is good.

Our C. E. Society is doing good work under the leadership of Mr. C. R. Reed. Miss Blanche Weatherly led the meeting yesterday evening. The subject was "Pioneers" and was discussed by several of the members, and was very interesting.

We are glad to have Mrs. Clara French join our church. She comes to us from Mt. Carmel M. P. Church.

The following attended the District Rally held at Brown Summit Saturday and Sunday: Dr. J. D. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Setliff, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Dixon, Misses Lola and Effie McCollum, Nellie Mitchell and Frances Butler.

Our pastor will assist Rev. H. F. Fogleman in a meeting at Concord this week and will remain over Sunday. Brother Fogleman will preach for us in Brother Williams' absence.

Best wishes to the readers of the Herald.

Mrs. H. S. Dixon, Reporter.

South Davidson, Cid.—We are still on the "Map" and a faithful few as ever stepped are walking in the King's high way, but listen! we have had many discouragements; but if it takes that to make us better, why just come on. Our Sunday school is now coming by leaps and bounds. Our people are taking a great interest. Our superintendent, Mr. C. O. Leonard, and others bring us some good messages worth hearing. I am glad to think that some one has missed us, as the Mecklenburg reporter sounded the trumpet just what we are required to do.

We are getting up a Children's Day program. Hope to have it some time the last of June. The cottage prayer services are still going on. We call it the North prayer service now as another one has started up West of here a few weeks ago, conducted by Mr. Avery Woodell and others. It will be at the widow Wooddell's next Saturday night. So the old one will be at Mr. Isaac Black's next Saturday night.

Mr. Jasper Surratt has gotten about well again. Mrs. C. H. Conville of near Pomplin, Va., is now visiting her sister, Mrs. N. W. Lanier, and other sisters and relatives.

The home coming service at Piney Grove on the 4th Sunday was a great success; a large crowd were present. There were some grand experiences told, and a rejoicing time was there, a time long to be remembered.

Mrs. Harris Morris died suddenly on the 15. She was buried at Liberty Baptist on Sunday among a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives. She was 79 years, one month and five days old. A husband and one daughter survive. Mr. Morris is now making his home at his daughter's, Mrs. J. D. Wright. Mrs. Wright wanted Rev. Robert Short to conduct her mother's funeral but owing to limited time could not get him.

We were so glad to have Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hill of Randleman to call on us recently. Come again.

N. W. Lanier has been right sick, but is some better at this writing. The health of the community is right good at present. We are are always so glad to read the good reports from other places. So come on, reporters, and excuse me. Reporter.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

In Loving Memory.

Grandma Hardin, as she was affectionately en a faithful member from early girlhood ly eight years old. She wrote a sketch of r childhood days in her 85th year and sent ation. She was very industrious in her ld and worked willingly with her hands, benning her life work when the hum of the ing the flowers and the kind encouraging rds while we are living. I think it can truly said of her. She hath done what she could.

So her gentle spirit passed out
Of the shadow into eternal day.
And why do we call it dying,
This sweet going away?

Barnwell.

Mrs. Maude Apple Barnwell died at her home in the Stony Creek community near Burlington, May 1, after a long illness; aged 36 years. She was the wife of Mr. Layton T. Barnwell, who is a well-known resident of the community. The deceased leaves besides her husband, to mourn her death two children, her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Apple; two sisters, Mrs. Lucy Dickens and Miss Lena Apple; and one brother, Claud Apple.

Mrs. Barnwell was a devoted member of Carolina Methodist Protestant Church. In early life she was converted and joined Berea Christian Church of which she was for several years a faithful member; but later became a faithful Methodist Protestant. Both church and community will miss her.

The funeral was conducted at Berea Christian Church by her pastor, C. G. Isley; a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives were present. The splendid floral array was a token of the esteem in which the deceased was held by those who knew her. Interment was made in the Berea cemetery, whence her body will rise, in the morning of the resurrection.

A TRIBUTE TO FATHER.

David Sink Lecnard, 1847-1926.

David Sink Leonard of Davidson County Confederate Veteran and Soldier of the Cross, passed on last Thursday, May 20th. He was in his eightieth year. His children are: R. E. Leonard of the Bethesda community; Mrs. B. C. Lambeth, Trinity; Mrs. R. U. Zimmerman, Arcadia; Dr. Geo. F. Leonard and Duke S. Leonard, New Brunswick, New-Jersey; and Samuel E. Leonard, Rocky Mount. There are twenty grand children and five great grand children. One brother, Sam P. Leonard, is living in Texas.

Since he left the old home he has lived for the most part with R. E. Leonard and Dr. R. U. Zimmerman, being at the latter place when he died. He was in good health and good spirits the day before his death, writing letters to two of his children. A stroke early in the morning soon rendered him unconscious and in a few hours he passed out.

The funeral was conducted at his loved church, Bethesda, last Saturday afternoon by his pastor, Rev. R. S. Troxler, and Dr. A. G. Dixon, President of the N. C. Conference. His grandchildren performed the last official act for him, the grand sons bearing his body to the grave while the grand daughters carried the flowers. A confederate flag marks his last resting place, he being a member of Co. C. 1st Regiment, Junior Reserves.

Father has given a long life of service to his church, Bethesda Methodist Protestant Church, and to his community. Until the death of mother fifteen years ago he lived almost in sight of the church and he took us there on all occasions from infancy. He was officer in the church during his entire membership. He was teacher in the Sunday school almost continuously. He was song leader before there was any organ in the church. He was interested in every phase of church activity and gave liberally of his means to all worthy causes. His home was the pastor's home.

Our home was truly a Christian home. The family Bible was opened and read each night and each child was provided with a Bible of his own and required to read a portion of the Bible each night before retiring. Each night before the family retired a chapter was read, the morning after breakfast the Bible was opened and a portion read and then kneel in our family prayer. This part pertained to the entire home life. The home was the center of attraction, and its greatest treasure was worldly wealth [illegible] could have been found.

There are many things that make us happy today. Father lived a life that reflected credit on his children and grandchildren. He lived to a ripe old age, being ninety four years and seven months old. He saw all of his children grown to manhood and womanhood and married. He died with little suffering and no lingering disease, a thing that he dreaded. He left the richest inheritance that it is possible for man to leave on earth. Surely we can say with the Psalmist: "Yea, I have a goodly heritage."

The Children.

JOHN M. HART DIES SUDDENLY.

John M. Hart died suddenly at his home Sunday night about 9 o'clock. He had been in his usual health all day; on retiring he had a sudden attack of heart trouble. Death was almost instantaneous. He had been in failing health for the past few years, but was never confined to his bed. Ill health was the cause of his leaving his farm near Mebane about two years ago and moving to Mebane.

John M. Hart born April 7, 1865, died May 9, 1926. He was a devoted member of the Junior Order, which had charge of the burial service.

He was married about 21 years to Miss Margaret Squires. To this union were two children given.

The large crowd present and the many beautiful floral designs showed that his friends were numerous. The floral bearers were: Misses Virginia and Annie Jones, Matilda and Annie Nelson, Thelma Thomas, Annie and Mildred Squires, Rachel and Nellie McAdams, Margaret Qualls and Mesdames Annie Barfield, T. O. Leinder, and Geo. E. Wyatte.

Pall bearers were, Geo. F. Crutchfield, Geo. E. Wyatte, Dr. Crawford, R. B. Stockdale, J. W. Stokes, Thomas Riley.

He was a kind and affectionate companion, loving father and a good friend and neighbor to all.

Mr. Hart is survived by his wife and two daughters, Misses Dennis and Nannie Hart of Mebane, and one sister, Mrs. R. H. Shark of Hillsboro.

Funeral services were conducted from Chestnut Ridge M. P. Church Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock by Rev. S. E. Nicks of Hillsboro, B. M. Williams of Efland, and Dr. T. M. Holmes of Mebane, and the body was laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery.

Our hearts go out in deep sympathy for the family and loved ones, and up to Almighty God in prayer that he may comfort and keep them in this sad hour.

The family circle [illegible] broken, one you loved so well is gone, [illegible] our loss he has been taken, and [illegible] to see us home. While your heart [illegible] and your eyes shed forth those tears, will you not look up to Jesus—[illegible] prayer? He will help you bear your burden. Fill your hearts with [illegible] as you mourn for the loss of Father, as you view his empty seat.

Written by one who knew him.

Annie Squires.

Sykes.

Bruce Sykes, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sykes, was born June 6, 1901, and was found dead in bed in Baltimore Monday morning, May 17, 1926. Physician was summoned at once, but it was too late; they pronounced it paralysis of heart trouble. He was well and cheerful all day and had retired about 11 o'clock Sunday night, and never awoke again.

Bruce was a good and obedient boy, full of fun ready to do you a favor at any time. He was a friend to all. He served about four years as a sailor. Death was unexpected to all.

No time for a last farewell,
No time for the shock of fear
Scarcely a moments halt on the shore,
With the guide on the boatman near,
Dear Bruce, how surprised you were to go.
With little to regret, little to know
Only a moment of dark,
A dream of the fleeting mark,
And then the beautiful break of day
And the quiet peace of light,
And you found yourself where you long to stand,
In the repose of the brotherland.

No doubt his soul is a light to guide some one else to the other shore,

He professed faith in Christ in early manhood and joined Chestnut Ridge Church; he remained a member there until death called him home.

He leaves to mourn their loss, father, mother, four brothers and two sisters, host of friends and relatives.

Funeral service were conducted by his pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, assisted by Rev. T. M. Johnson of Mebane M. P. Church.

The large crowd present and the beautiful flowers proved that his friends were numerous. The bereaved have our sympathy in this sad hour.

A friend. Annie Squires.

Hughes

Martha Allen Wood Hughes was born the year 1850. After [illegible] years of faithful service she [illegible] which had been confined to [illegible] Skilled physicians [illegible] affectionate hearts did their best to save her life but on the [illegible] of the call [illegible] profession of [illegible] when she and her companion moved to Randleman many years ago, she transfered her membership to Mt. Lebanon church, where she remained faithful unto the end.

On the day following her death the funeral service was held from Mt. Lebanon Church. The large number present as well as the beautiful flowers, attested the esteem in which she was held.

The deceased leaves her devoted companion, and Miss Lenora whose love for her mother never failed, and four sons.

The service was conducted by the writer.

A Tribute of Love.

It is with sad hearts that we—the members of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of Mt. Zion Church, Pinnacle Charge, record the death of one of our most loyal and faithful members, Mrs. Sidney Mickey, who died February 13, 1926.

She is the first member lost by death. We shall greatly miss her as she was always present at our meetings and church unless providentially hindered. She was deeply interested in the success of our societies and always willingly gave of her means to promote the cause of the Master. And while we shall miss her we feel our loss is her eternal gain.

Therefore be it resolved

First, That in her death we may be drawn closer together.

Second, That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved husband and little children.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent each to the family—The Methodist Protestant Herald and the Missionary Record.

GREENSBORO MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION TO PRESIDENT COOLIDGE.

"At the regular monthly meeting of the Greensboro Ministerial assiciation held today it was unanimously voted that we respectfully but earnestly protest against the militarization of our mails by the use of the cancellation stamp: 'Let's Go Citizens' Military Training Camps.'

"We believe this use of the mails creates the impression abroad that we are a militaristic nation, and that it suggests to the youth of our land that international differences are to be settled by war rather than by justice and reason.

"Furthermore, the use of this cancelation stamp on the mail of those who do not believe in the training camps makes them the unwilling promoters of a system of which they do not approve.

"May we not hope for your influence in bringing about an abandonment of this objectionable use of our mails?"

The letter to the President was signed by Rev. S. K. Spahr, president, and Rev. R. G. Tuttle, secretary of the association.

—High Point College closed its second year with two notable services last Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday afternoon a pageant was presented by about one hundred students and teachers, designed to represent the history of the college thus far. Some of the difficulties and obstacles were indicated and over against these the rapidly developing achievements and successes in the college life of two brief years. On account of the cool weather, this pageant was given in the College Chapel instead of on the portico as intended. There was a good congregation of friends to witness it.

On Sunday morning in First M. P. Church, High Point, came the sermon by Rev. J. W. Hawley, of Pittsburgh, Pa., pastor of the First M. P. Church in that city. Scarcely too much could be said for this sermon. It was full of inspiration for young people confronting life's problems and also full of warning against the dangers of the way. True conceptions of success were indicated by contrast with lives of ease, idleness, and pleasure seeking. The appropriateness of the sermon was felt by all and surely every young person present must have been powerfully impressed and moved to choose the Christ way of self-denial and useful service.

—Greensboro people were delighted to have an opportunity to hear Rev. J. W. Hawley preach in Grace church last Sunday night. He preached another powerful sermon, full of the spirit of consecration to Christ. He teaches absolute surrender to Jesus Christ. He must be given the throne, the highest place.

—The editor enjoyed a very pleasant surprise last Saturday—a visit from a classmate in Adrian College, Dr. W. H. Hood, of Nevada. He and Mrs. Hood are touring the country in an automobile. They had passed through Tennessee and were headed eastward. They go where they please and stay as long as they like. Mrs. Hood is one of the regents of the University of Nevada, having been elected without opposition or competition. We were glad to be permitted to take these distinguished visitors to High Point College for the pageantSaturday afternoon. Leaving Greensboro, they expected to visit Wake Forest.

YOUTHS PROTEST.

The youth of Atlanta, Ga., entered a protest against the slanderous attacks on the young people of today being made by advocates of beer and wine in a way that caused all Atlanta to take notice.

More than 10,000 of the best young folks of that city marched in a parade, displaying banners protesting against the wets' declaration that prohibition is making drunkards out of the present-day young folks.

These booze advocates merited this rebuke and it would occasion no surprise if young people of other cities followed Atlanta's example. That there are men and women who will attack our boys and girls, branding them as drunkards in the hope of arousing enmity to the prohibition law, shows to what desperate lengths this booze hungry crowd will go to bring back the saloon and all its attendant evils.

Hats off to Atlanta's youth who resented the insult.—American Issue.

INVEIGHING AGAINST CREEDS, DOCTRINE, AND THEOLOGY.

This has become quite common with a certain type of newspaper scribbles, magazine writers, and some others.

It is found in a certain class of books, and even the pulpit sometimes joins this class of croakers. To our mind there has never appeared any good reason for this. For a person to decry creed, doctrine, theology, without any qualification, as is often done in these days, seems to smack of ignorance, vanity, conceit, or hypocrisy.

For a person to denounce all creeds, and profess to have none of his own, shows such a one to be either a fool or a hypocrite. For every body but an idiot has some kind of creed. Every body who is capable of believing anything has a creed. As creed means to believe, or what one believes, being derived from "credo," "I believe." So when a person says that he has no "creed," you know that he is either dishonest or ignorant, or both.

It is true, a person, or a number of persons, may not have a written or a printed creed, but they all have a creed nevertheless, i. e., they believe something, unless they be idiots.

There are two classes of persons who cry out against "creeds": those who hold most tenaciously to their own creed, while denouncing all creeds in general, and affirming at the same time that they have no creed. The other class is those who know little or nothing of the Bible or true christian doctrines, and assume an air of self-conceit that's annoying. Their attitude seems to be, that inasmuch as they themselves, have no correct, well-defined views of the Bible and its teachings, therefore, nobody else has. They themselves are the neplus ultras and the ultima Thules of all capacity to know. This latter class has become quite noisy and offensive in these latter days prating about things time-honored and sacred, of which they know little or nothing.

Yes, everybody has a "creed" of some kind, who is capable of believing. And to write or print that creed, surely cannot be a wrong, much less a sin, and let the public, yea, the world, know what a person believes, or any number of persons, who believe the same thing. Nobody has to believe it if he does not wish. It is much more honorable to formulate and print one's creed and publish it to the world, than to denounce creeds in general, while holding most tenaciously to an unwritten creed.

As to decrying doctrine and "doctrinal preaching," as is frequently done, discloses a lack of thought and knowledge. What is doctrine any way? "That which is taught.—" Webster. To do away with doctrine would be to do away with teaching. Doctrine and teaching, in the New Testament, are synonymons. "We said unto them in his doctrine," was the same as "he said unto them in his teaching." "They were astonished at his doctrine," was the same as, "They were astonished at his teaching." "What new doctrine is this?" was the same as, "What new teaching is this?" "Go ye therefore and make disciples (teach) of all nations teaching them to observe all things &c.," is equivalent to "doctrinize" all nations. The nations were to be "discipled" by teaching, or "doctrinizing."

As to what persons are pleased to call "doctrinal preaching," we need more of it, if it be of the right kind. The great leading, fundamental truths of the Bible need to be clearly, accurately, and explicity taught, as much so now as at any time in the past. Each generation needs to be taught the same Bible truths, as much so as needs each generation to be taught the multiplication table. Some elderly persons in their thoughtlessness jump to the conclusion that because they are fairly well-informed, that there is no need of further teaching on the great, leading, fundamental truths of Bible, forgetting that there are children being born all the while, and as they grow up, need to be taught the same truths that the elderly people already know. Also forgetting that the devil and his crowd put in full time, day and night, in every possible way, to teach (indoctrinate) error. The devil and his crowd take no vacation, and are "wiser in their generation than the children of light," in this respect. The strong, sturdy, clear-cut sermons that we used to hear on sin, repentance, faith, pardon, regeneration, the witness of the Spirit, entire sanctification; eternal punishment, eternal judgment, retribution, the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, heavenly felicity and glorification, we seldom hear. Yes, we need what some are pleased to call "doctrinal preaching." That is, clear, distinct, unequivocal, uncompromising teaching, or preaching, of the great vital truths, or teachings of the Bible. These vital truths have always stirred and awakened the people in the past, when clearly, earnestly, and uncompromisingly presented, without mixture of error. And will do so again. And are doing so, when taught and preached as in other years.

So we see that to do away with "doctrine" is to do away with teaching. Doctrine is the thing taught, and teaching is the act, or process, of indoctrinating, or imparting, the doctrine to another. We will have some kind of doctrine, or teaching, and why not have the true? Trace this unfriendly attitude to "doctrine," to its source, and you will find a hostile attitude to some of the truths of the Bible, or perhaps many of them or all of them.

In regard to Theology we see and hear a great many belittling things about it. But as in the cases of Creeds, and doctrine, it must of necessity come from those who are deficient in a correct knowledge of theology, or hostile to its teachings. For a person to say, as some have said, "I love religion but I hate Theology," is about as foolish as for a person to say, "I admire great engineering feats, such as railroads, canals, highways, dams, reservoirs—great buildings and monuments, ships, locomotives and machines in general, but "I hate geometry and mathematics as a whole." It is just as impossible to have desirable results in religion without theology, a correct theology, as it is to have any desirable results in the engineering world without geometry and mathematics in general. Whenever you see or hear a person belittling, belaboring, deriding, and denouncing theology and theologians, you can just set it down as an incontrovertible fact, that such a one knows little or nothing of theology, or if he knows anything about it, its teachings do not suit him. Its teachings are in opposition to his carnal, depraved, unregenerate heart, and of course, this proud, wicked heart of his rebels against its teachings. We believe, however, that ignorance of what theology really is, and the vital place it holds in the realm of human knowledge, is oftener the cause of persons decrying theology than otherwise.

This does not mean that everybody must, or can be, a theologian; any more than that everybody must, or can be, a geometrician. But we must have persons expert in all branches of mathematics, if we carry on the great engineering feats of the world. But as we need the expert mathematician in the world of engineering and mechanics, so we likewise need the theologian in the religious world. While many things in the Bible are so simple and plain that the "wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein, there are other things that require the trained, unbiased, unprejudiced thinker to arrive at a correct conclusion. A person by natural ability and training, capable of collecting all the facts, or evidence, in a given case, so as to arrive at a correct conclusion. A person capable by knowledge, training, and natural ability, to reconcile all seeming contradictions, and thereby silence the guns of the enemy. One who is able to dig down to the foundations, and in the language of Locke, see on what the thing "bottoms." Men like Bishop Butler, Albert Taylor Bledsoe and others. One of the evils of this age is to skim the surface of things, and ridicule everybody who takes time to think. And this class sits around like so many frogs and croak about creeds, doctrine, and theology, and they would scarcely know either, if they were to meet it in the road. They are too lazy, conceited, or lacking in real capacity, to think. And because they cannot, or will not, think, their knowledge of things high and deep is very limited. And so they deride and denounce everybody who knows any more than they do. We've never read an article, or book, by one of these croakers about theology, but what he, or she, soon disclosed the fact that they knew little or nothing about the subject. Vanity, pride, presumption—a haughty, arrogant, unchristian spirit has generally been prominent. This noisy, conceited croaking about theology generally comes from a set of ecclesiastical "reds." Their business is to tear down. They never build up. What do they offer us in the place of theology? Nothing but religious and ecclesiastical anarchy, and they be the sheiks and czars of it. They denounce all anthoxity in religion, but at the same time would have everybody bow obsequiously to their dictum. They are a set of religious Bolshiviks. A set of the most relentless tyrants—proud, vain, conceited, arrogant—near relations to the "Man of Sin," "who exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped."

To belittle, decry, ridicule, or denounce theology because there are, or may be, theologians who do not live in harmony with the teachings of true theology, discloses an unfair, weak, incompetent mind. Just as well denounce geometry, trigonometry, or mathematics in general, because everybody who has a fair knowledge of mathematics does not use this knowledge in an extensive, or renumerative manner. Mathematics is not to blame; but the individual—or, perhaps the circumstances in which he is placed do not demand it. So to belittle or denounce mathematics because all who know this science do not use it to any great extent, is to play the fool. And to belittle or denounce theology, because some persons have more theology than religion is to play the fool also. We cannot get on without mathematics, even the higher, unless we mean to go back to savagery—to the life of the Bushman and Hottentot. And it is equally true that we cannot get on without theology unless we mean to go back to heathenism, to all its silly, creed, heartless monstrosities. And to see, or hear, a person ridicule or denounce theology makes me indignant. It's an insult to Jehovah. And it makes me feel like "saying in my heart," nobody but a fool will do so. This is the class of which the apostles speak, that speak "great swelling words of vanity," who "despise dominion," and are "not afraid to speak evil of dignities."

Theology, from "theos," God and "logos," discourse, meaning a discourse, on, or about, God, and related things, is the most noble and sublime field of knowledge known to man. Ignorant, profane croakers, should keep silent. Well-informed reverent persons stand with uncovered heads in its presence. But fools and profane taunt and jeer—mock and deride, and belittle, showing themselves descendants of the long-eared species that bray.

And the fellow who is always vociferating about "creeds" and doctrine, if you will but analyize him a little, you'll see that he means your creed and mine, and not his. Though he stoutly denies having any creed. Yet he has something he believes and will fight for it to the last ditch. But he does not want you to have yours.

We know a considerable body of people who stoutly deny having any "creed," and denounce "creeds" in general. But this scribbler happens to possess two books, each containing their printed creed, or what they say they believe. These books we purchased from their own publishing house, and. in a sense. having their own imprimatur on them. "O consistency thou art a jewel!" As Brother W [illegible] heard a good old Brother say [illegible] casion, that "Men and women were the strangest folks he ever saw." And so it "are."

THE HUMOR OF THE PIONEER CIRCUIT RIDERS.

By H. H. Smith.

While the pioneerMethodist preachers often suffered hardships and privations, and some were inclined to asceticism, they were not without wit and humor. It is said that Bishop Asbury "rarely if ever indulged in wit while occupying the pulpit, yet it would flash out among the preachers in council and conference at times in the most genial manner." The Bishop never married. After defending his bachelorhood, he added: "If I have done wrong I hope God and the sex will forgive me. It is my duty now to bestow the pittance I have to spare upon the widows and fatherless girls and poor married men." Of one of the young preachers he said: "I find the care of a wife begins to humble my young friend, and make him very teachable; I have thought he always carried great sail; but he will have ballast now." Boston, he said, was "famous for poor religion and bad water." Traveling in New Jersey, he remarked, "Since this day week I have ridden over dead sands and among dead people, and a long space between meals."

Those who have studied the life of John Wesley know that he was quick-witted and on occasion could be humorous. He was by nature a most cheerful man, and said on one occasion: "Sour godliness is the devil's religion..... Are you for having as much cheerfulness as you can? So am I. Do you endeavor tokeep alive your taste for all truly innocent pleasures? So do I. Do you refuse no pleasure but what is a hindrance to some greater good or has a tendency to some evil? It is my very rule." One of his preachers even complained that Wesley tempted him to levity by his witty proverbs.

Dr. Eayrs points out how Wesley's good-natured humor never failed him in dealing with the odd characters with which he met. "He saw instantly the possibitities of a situation and used them. Michael Fenwick complained that, although he travelled with Wesley, he had not figured the published extracts from his Journal. He had his wish gratified, and more, in the nekt issue. Wesley so wrote: "I preached at Clayworth; I think none was unmoved except Michael Fenwick, who fell fast asleep under an adjoining hay-rick." Another preacher, when with Wesley at the table of a wealthy Methodist, bemoaned the departure of many from the Spartan simplicity of early Methodism. "My brother," said Wesley, glancing at the preacher's well-filled plate, "there is an opportunity for self-denial."

When Wesley and his companion, John Nelson, were once compelled to sleep on a hard floor with only a blanket. Wesley said, as he woke in the morning: "Be of good cheer, Bro-

There was [illegible] preacher by the name of William Hibbard who was always known as "Billy" Hibbard. When the secretary of the conference called his name, there was no response, though Hibbard was present. The secretary called again, "William Hibbard! William Hibbard," but still there was no response. The Bishop then said: "Brother Hibbard, why don't you answer to your name and stop delaying the Conference?" He replied, "Bishop, I will answer to my name when they call my name." "Isn't your name William Hibbard?" "No, Bishop, it's Billy Hibbard." "Billy," said the Bishop, "Billy, why Billy is a little boy's name." "Well, I was a little boy when they gave me that name," replied Hibbard. He was a presiding elder, and at one time, while representing a brother in his district, he said: "He seems to be tired of everything but rest." The character of the brother was so well known and the hit so capital that the whole Conference was convulsed with laughter.

Jesse Lee was humorous and quick-witted and always ready with the right answer. Riding along one day he was overtaken by a clergyman and a lawyer. They at once began to attack him on doctrinal points. The contest soon grew warm. Lee poured hot shot into them right and left. At length the lawyer broke out on him: "Sir, are you a knave or a fool?" "I am," replied Lee, "neither the one nor the other; but—" casting his eyes first at the lawyer and then at the minister—"I happen at present to be just between the two." He was soon traveling the road alone.

During the pioneer days there were few married preachers; almost constant traveling, and preaching nearly every day, together with such a meager salary, barred many from matrimony. When a member of the Virginia Conference had married and felt that he ought to justify his act, during the session of the Conference he said he had made it a matter of prayer and he believed it was in accordance with the Lord's will. Just then Jesse Lee rose slowly from his seat and said he was afraid the brother had fallen into a mistake, notwithstanding the fact that he had prayed over the matter. He then related his experience: "I once thought I ought to marry, and I thought a great deal about it, too. And I thought I must pray about it; but somehow or other I always found myself praying, 'O Lord, let Thy will be done, but do let me have that woman.' I wanted the woman, and my prayers always ended there. Perhaps the brother wanted the woman. and she and the Lord were willing, but they both opposed me."

Lorenzo Dow was one of the most eccentric preachers that ever lived. Many strange and humorous things are recorded of him. It is said that on one occasion a couple came to his home to be married. It was a stormy day, and Dow was sick in bed. He requested the couple to come and stand under his window, while he performed the ceremony with the following words:

"Under this window in stormy weather,
I join this man and woman together;
Let Him alone who made the thunder
Part this man and woman asunder."

FILTHY TOBACCO FOR CHEWERS AND SMOKERS.

Will H. Brown.

A Southern man writes to the Good Health Magazine from one of the tobacco-raising states, saying that a farmer who raises tobacco sent a protest to his State Board of Health against the use of "scrap tobacco," because of its horrible filth. He wrote that the strippings from tobacco were thrown in one corner of the room where men worked—some of them suffering from tuberculosis and other dangerous diseases, and that they all cough, hawk and spit on the pile of scrap tobacco. After a few weeks this is stirred up, to dry. When the crop is gathered, all of this scrap tobacco is taken to the market and sold for three cents per pound. It is then manufactured into cigarettes, cigars, pipe and chewing tobacco. The residue that cannot be used for these purposes, is ground up into snuff.

These are sold in small packages to consumers, who pay an average of 70 to 80 cents per pound, for the same filthy, diseased, unsanitary stuff that the grower received three cents a pound for at the warehouse.

The same writer says that a boy who knew all these conditions, said to a man who was smoking a cigar: "Aren't you afraid to smoke? There might be germs in it." The man replied: "If there are germs, I will burn them. Don't you see the fire on that end?" "Yes," the boy quickly replied, "but I don't see any fire on the end in your mouth, and that is the DANGEROUS END." The man concluded the boy was right, and threw the cigar away.

A Michigan paper says: "If all the smokers in the world were gathered together, they would be matchless by noon." Many of them are matchless, anyway—matchless for filth, and contempt for the rights of others to breathe pure air.

An English motorist was stopped by a policeman on account of poor lights. "I'll have to take your name, sir."

"John Smith," was the reply.

"Don't try that on me, sir," warned the man in blue. "I want your proper name and address."

"Then if you must have it, it's William Shakespeare, Stratford-on-Avon."

"Thank you, sir," said the policeman, jotting it down. "Sorry to have troubled you."

"Don't mention it," said the motorist driving on.

"I want to buy a dog. How much are they?"

"Fifty dollars a piece, lady."

"How many pieces must I buy to get a whole dog?"

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

So Very Important.

Every pastor is asked to send to Dr. R. M. Andrews, President of the High Point College, a CORRECT mailing list of the families on his charge. It is exceedingly important that this be done SOON, and that the post office addresses be absolutely Correct. This mailing list is to be used by both the college and the Children's Home. The purpose is to mail literature to your people betimes from the College and also from the Home.

Please help by getting these names and correct addresses to Dr. Andrews at an early date. Surely you will not fail in this important request.

Also please note in Herald last week, and also this week, and if you were asked to take part in the program of education among the churches during the three Sundays in June be sure not to disappoint us. Take your place as best you can. If sickness or distress keeps you from going, please do your best to get some one else to go in your place.

Commencement at High Point College.

It was my pleasure to attend the pageant which was staged in the College Chapel in High Point last Saturday afternoon. It was well planned, well written, and splendidly delivered. I wish very much that all our people throughout the conference could have seen and heard it. And I am trusting that President Andrews will have it rearranged a bit and present it to our pastors and Sunday school workers, and that a number of our churches will put it on with local talent. It will be a fine thing for the churches as well as for the college.

Sunday morning I heard the commencement sermon in the First Church, High Point. It was an eloquent presentation of great truths which gripped both young and old hearers from beginning to end. I take it a more extended report of the pageant, and of the sermon will be given.

Spring Hill.

On Sunday afternoon I went with the pastor, Rev. W. M. Loy, to Spring Hill, on West Thomasville for a service. It was a pleasure to preach to these good people again. The house was filled with earnest listeners. I found the ground cleaned off and lumber on the grounds for a new church building. They are planning to build a brick veneered building, and we are hoping that they will make it modern in every way. It is not a wealthy congregation, but they are going at it with a will and we believe they will succeed. Spring Hill is the Old Mother Methodist Protestant Church in that section, south west of High Point. It is the old home church of the Pickett family of High Point.

Lebanon.

Sunday evening found me with Rev. J. B Hutton and the good people of Lebanon It is always a pleasure to go back to Lebanon. I used to be there in meetings so much that it almost seems that it is one of the charges that I served in other years. I found myself very tired, and it was rather a labored effort on my part, but they listened so well that it was a pleasure to preach to them. Brother Hutton has the work well in hand and the church is growing in all its departments.

Campaign of Education.

Te campaign which is being put on as outlined in the Herald is purely of education. We are asking the speakers to go out two and two to our churches to tell the folks about the High Point College and its work, and to stress the Bible doctrine of christian stewardship. We trust all of them will go, and that the people will hear them gladly and that much good will be done from the standpoint of Christian education. These men will not be out asking for money. They will be asking for a deeper consecration of ourselves and of our possessions to the services of our Christ.

Because of unavoidable circumstances some few changes had to be made in the first published plan. Please note them in this week's Herald.

Appointments.

June 9 to June 29, wife and I with two friends are taking an automobile trip into Pennsylvania and Ohio. This will afford us a much needed change and rest from the strenuous, and yet pleasant duties of this office. We thank the many brethren who have rejoiced with us in the fact that we are to have this few days' respite. In so far as possible we are going to try to forget the problems of the work for these days, though our daily prayer will be for the blessings of God upon the work and the workers.

July 4th, not definitely planned yet.
July 10 and 11, District Rally at Pensacola.
Yours in His service. A. G. Dixon.

Palestine, Flat Rock.—As this reporter has not reported in a long time, she will say just a few words. First I wish to say mother is lots better, mother has been confined to her bed for the past six weeks. Is now able to be about in her room.

Our church work is getting along well so far as the reporter has been informed. Sunday school doing fine. Brother Cane is our new superintendent.

We were sorry to learn our beloved pastor was kept from filling his appointment fifth Sunday by the sad death of Mrs. Trogdon's mother. She has our deepest sympathy.

Since my last report Aunt Sarah Landreth, the beloved wife of dear Uncle John, has passed away.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Tucker have our sympathy in the death of their infant son, the second little flower to bud on earth and blossom in heaven.

Mr. Jasper Sharron, one of our members, has been very sick.

Our revival meeting will begin at Palestine third Sunday in July.

The "Billy Sunday Club" was at Palestine third Sunday night in last month and had service. They were from Winston Salem, we learn. Grace R. Tucker, Reporter.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Edited by Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro, N. C

To All Auxiliaries of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

I have received notice that the Asheboro Home Missionary Society will give $100.00 to the Scholarship Loan Fund this year. Good for Asheboro, they have done a fine thing in a splendid way.

Friends, $100.00 sent now may be loaned to sixteen students in a hundred years, allowing time for each to graduate and enter business or a profession before repaying the loan. (That is a rather low estimate, but not to get our hopes too high.)

Surely when we realize the far reaching extent of this work we will do our best.

Of course every auxiliary cannot give $100. but every one can give something.

Those of you who attended Branch meeting know that May was the time to secure Scholarship Loan Fund money; if you have not yet done this, please do it as soon as possible and report to me in order that applicants for aid may be given definite information,

Secretary of Scholarship Loan Fund.

Delegates were in attendance from all parts of the U. S. Every Branch was represented except three.

Among the representatives from foreign countries were Miss Alice Coates and Miss Helen Barnes our missionaries in Japan, Rev. and Mrs. Langdon from Africa, Rev. William Lee Spratt from India, and Miss Minnie Vautrin, Dean of Gingling College, Wanking, China.

All of these missionaries brought us messages from the countries in which they are working. As we sat and listened to these faithful workers, telling about their work and the great needs in the foreign fields, we wished that every woman in our Branch could have heard these stirring addresses.

I think some of us would have realized how little we are doing for the welfare of the rest of the world.

Southfield church assisted by Chatham Fields, Wakeford and Avalon Park churches all outdid themselves in making us welcome.

Automobiles met us at the railway station and conveyed us to the convention church and home again at night. Calling the next morning at 9:30 o'clock and so on throughout the week.

All delegates and visitors were entertained homes in the city, thus giving an opportunity of making a personal contact with our people. Surely no one could have been more cordial or royal in their reception and entertainment than were these people in Chicago.

These four churches are all on the south side of the city. All as a result of Church Extension and Home Mission work. Dr. Harvey of the Illinois Conference started them all.

They are community churches, built to meet the needs of new and growing developments in the city and each has members from many denominations. In some of these churches there was only one person who was originally a Methodist Protestant. They have not had years of denominational training and teaching, as most of our churches have had—so you can see what it meant to them to cooperate in entertaining one of our important Boards. It not only taught them the beautiful spirit of cooperation but as Mrs. Maier said, it helped to develop a denominational consciousness. I am sure the Board meeting will mean much to them, as it did to us. Pastors and people, although busy with building projects and other church work, gave freely of their time and cars and efforts to make us happy while with them.

The Program.

Space is too limited to give any adequate report of the splendid program. In the July issue of the Missionary Record you will find a full report of the year's work.

The sessions began each morning at 9:30 o'clock with a worship service followed by a business session.

Mrs. Andrew Lester of Penn., in a very interesting and instructive manner, gave a review each day of the Mission Study book. "Moslem Women." This book will be used in the Branches this year.

Mrs. Henry Hupfield of Baltimore, Md., President of the Executive Board, gave a comprehensive review of the general work of the W. F. M. Society.

"We have had a very successful year: we have prayed for workers; yet we haven't gone forward as we could have had it not been for lack of money," she declared.

The Budget as apportioned by the General Conference is $60,000 per year. $3000 of this is for General Conference expenses, which leaves us $57,000 for our actual work. We raised this year through the Branches $66,740.32.

Mrs. Hupfield urged each one to go forward as never before. "Extending God's work is no easy task—we must get close to the Master and feel His touch. Go forward, keep ablaze the Missionary zeal in your auxiliaries at home."

The report of the Corresponding Secretary was in part given at our Branch meeting.

"Facts from the Field."

The pressing needs at this time are a school building at Birdwood, Dhulia, India. Plans and estimates have been made and $1000. is held for the building. A teacher is badly needed in China. Miss Sampson of Michigan, a missionary candidate, was presented to the Board and accepted. She will go as a kindergarten teacher to have charge of the work in Yokohama Japan.

The support of all the native workers has not been pledged for the year.

The cost of scholarships and native workers is less in China and India than those in Japan and because of this, the workers in Japan are not always provided for.

It was suggested that a number of societies or individuals adopt a "Japanese worker" and contribute small sums toward her support.

We have 270 workers in all three fields.

395 Tithers and Intercessors were reported. Every Branch was urged to stress the importance of signing the pledge cards, at least the prayer cards. Every member can pray for the work whether she has money to give or not.

Extension of Work Recommendations.

That missionary societies be organized in every church throughout the denomination.

That a newsletter from each mission be sent to the Missionary Record each month.

That the daughters of our missionaries in Japan at the present time be placed on the scholarship fund of the W. F. M. Society. That Branches send delegates to their respective conferences so that our women may have a better understanding of the work of the church.

That we celebrate the 50th anniversary of the W. F. M. Society in 1929 at Pittsburgh, Pa., the birthplace of the organization.

All Branches were requested to hold Thank offering money until end of the year and send it in bulk.

More literature was sent out during the year than ever in the history of the Board. 25 percent more Study books were sold than ever before.

Number of subscribers to Missionary Record. 4150.

Saturday afternoon the Executive Board members were guests of the four Chicago churches on a 40 mile sight-seeing trip thro' the city. This was indeed refreshing, coming at the close of the fourth day in conference where we sat from 9:30 A. M. to 10:00 P. M.

On Sunday morning all delegates were privileged to attend the church of their choice. Mrs. Brown and I visited Wakeford church where Mr. N. M. Harrison, Jr., is pastor. Mr. Harrison is greatly loved by his people and together they are doing a fine piece of constructive work. Plans for a new Community church school and Recreational building have been submitted and an intensive campaign to raise money was on when we left the city.

Sunday afternoon Dr. Norman Mac Naughton, pastor of Southfield church, preached the Convention sermon.

Following this the Lord's supper was administered by the pastor, assisted by the pastors of the other three churches. The address of the evening was given by Miss Minnie Vautrin, Dean of Gingling College, Nanking, China.

Mrs. M. P. Harrell,
Cor. Sec. N. C. Branch.

—Miss Eugenia Hunter, of Grace Church, was graduated this year from Goucher College, Baltimore, and is expected home soon.

—James W. Swain, of Greensboro, enjoyed a visit recently from his sister, Mrs. Lynette Moss, and her family, of Wilson, N. C.

—Brother Wilbur Stout, son of Prof. H. C. Stout, has received the postgraduate degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of North Carolina. He lives in Burlington.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

The annual meeting of the Board of Regents of Westminister College was held at Tehuacana, Texas, May 26, 27. The attendance was unusually large and the concern for the college always in evidence. The situation was found to be rather critical and at first there was a disposition to close the school. The crop failures during the last two years, together with unsettled internal conditions, contributed to create a feeling of great discouragement. It seemed impossible to go on with the effort but after canvassing the situation most thoroughly and appreciating how much the school means to that section of the church it was deemed advisable to go ahead. Arrangements were made for the session of the summer school and part of the faculty elected for the regular school year. Dean Willis was placed in charge of the school for the time being.

There were a number of encouraging features about the last year. Dr. Phipps spent considerable time in the field and aroused more interest in the school than has been in evidence for some time. He engaged Rev. E. M Mouser to do some special canvassing which was a particularly good step. Rev. Mouser was appointed field agent for the college by the Regents and he will move to Tehuacana and give his full time to this work. He is greatly devoted to the college and is determined it shall succeed. His work has already resulted in some generous contributions. It looks to the writer as though the turning point has come and that better days are ahead for Westminister College.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Kansas City University was held in Union Hall Monday, May 31st. The following Trustees from the Methodist Protestant Church were in attendance: President A. N Ward, Rev. B. A. Brooks, Professor R. O Youmans, Mr. A. L. Cook, Mr. A. M. Kopf. Rev. W. M. Snyder, the new pastor of the University Methodist Protestant Church, and the Secretary of the Board of Education were invited to advisory seats. After the reading of the usual reports, election of officers and the transaction of other necessary business, the following notice was read by the Executive Secretary.

"To the Trustees of the Kansas City University Association:

This body is no doubt aware of the fact that for some years there has been no little uncertainty on the part of Methodist Protestant people as to the wisdom of continuing our part in the University enterprise. It becomes my duty to notify you that the Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church, at its annual meeting held in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, May 19, 1926, voted to enter into negotiations with the responsible authorities of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, looking to our withdrawal from the merger. To this end a committee was appointed as follows: Frank W. Stephenson, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education and Mr. H. M. Johnson, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a lay member of the Board."

It was suggested that a committee of four from the Trustees be chosen to advise with this committee and the one appointed by the Board of Education of the United Brethren Church at their recent meeting. Rev. B. A. Brooks and Mr. A. L. Cook were chosen by the Methodist Protestant group and Rev. S. B. Williams and Rev. F. M. Testerman by the United Brethren.

A special joint committee was chosen to make a thorough appraisal of the property holdings and all equities in order that an equitable basis of adjustment might be made. It is estimated that the liabilities will run close to $90,000.

It is hardly necessary to say that all concerned appreciate their responsibility in these matters and are anxious to fulfill every duty in the spirit of loyalty and good will. In a very large way our relationship to the sister church in this cooperative enterprise has been cordial, fraternal and very pleasant and to find ourselves in a position where it is necessary to dissolve the partnership is keenly disappointment to many. The effort was undertaken in a splendid spirit of brotherly love and with a high vision of Christian fellowship and cooperation. No single individual or isolated group of individuals are to be blamed for the present circumstances. They are a result of a large number of forces which have been operating for years and have finally reached a climax.

These facts are significant. It is estimated that the Methodist Protestant Church has invested over $500,000 in Kansas City University during the last thirty years. Of all the graduates and students sent out by the school there are not over a dozen now occupying our pulpits. Of course it is not the purpose of such a school just to furnish ministers but that is one of its important functions. At the rate it has been an expensive effort. In addition to this, few Methodist Protestant families send their children there. Of the sixty-five regular college students enrolled this year only four of them were Methodist Protestants. Two of those graduated and one of the other two will not return, leaving but one Methodist Protestant student next year. Some might enter but that is problematical. Another factor which has had no little influence in producing the present situation is the failure of the denominational budget. The nine thousand members of our church in that area do not have the resources in men or money to maintain a college and the small amount contributed to the General Conference Budget for educational purposes is not sufficient for so large an educational program as we have been attempting.

A comparison of the attendance of Methodist Protestant young people in our schools might be of interest; Western Maryland, 133; High Point, 102; Adrian, 63; Westminster College 44; Seminary 38; Kansas City University, 4. It is hardly wise to try to maintain an institution which is not making the contribution for which it is established.

THE ELECTIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The wets have won an election in Pennsylvania, and, as usual, they have flown to the chimney-pots to crow. They were beaten badly in Indiania, beaten badly in Oregon and elsewhere, but they won in Pennsylvania and so they crow.

They won in Pennsylvania because the dry vote was divided between Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot. The aggregate of the dry vote was far in excess of the wet vote cast for Mr. Vare, but still they say they won and that their victory is starting a landslide. True, they were beaten in the race for governor. True also, a dry was nominated as a Democratic candidate for senator. But they say they won, and that their winning indicates a great uprising of the people against the Volstead Act.

Mr. Vare won [illegible] nomination for Senator because [illegible] majority given him by Philadelphia [illegible] of that city, he was beaten by many thousands of votes. This indicates that Philadelphia is wet in sentiment, probably. No one ever denied it.

There are not [illegible] politicians in Washington at [illegible] that Senator Pepper would have won the nomination hand-down if he had not made the mistake of pussy-footing on the Prohibition issue. He walked lightly and talked gently, trying to pacify both sides. As a general thing, the American people like a man who will say, "I believe so and so, and if you do not understand what I mean, I will amplify my statement until you do. If you like it, vote for me; if you don't like it, vote against me." Pinchot was that kind of man, and he certainly deserved the respect and admiration of the drys, whom he has supported so faithfully. But of course Pinchot was without political backing and had little chance to get anywhere.

The wet victory may not be quite so victorious or even quite so wet, when all of the events are shaken down. Pinchot may run independently. Also the Democratic candidate is quite worthy of the support of any forward-looking Pennsylvanian, Democratic or Republican. If we were a Pennsylvania Democrat, we would vote for him with joy and thanksgiving. If we were a Pennsylvania Republican and a dry, we would leave Mr. Vare waiting at the polls and line up squarely behind Mr. Wilson for the United States Senate. Dry Republicans in Pennsylvania have the opportunity of a life-time to show that principle means more than politics.

BETTER DO IT NOW.

Hundreds of our Sunday schools are now actively preparing for holding a fine Children's Day Service, and their number is steadily increasing, as the supplies are going out daily to the schools that are ordering.

More than one half of the Sunday schools reported to the statistical secretary of the General Conference have not sent in any order for the supplies which are sent absolutely free, but, as more than half of the schools last year did get the supplies, we are encouraged, at the rate the orders are coming, to believe more schools will hold a service than last year, and this is greatly desired.

The time for holding the service is left entirely with the schools themselves, some held their service in May, most of them will hold theirs this month, but others wait until July and on, being governed by local conditions and requirements, but, of course, none must interfere with Rally Day.

The holding of a service is the main thing, and the gathering of the largest possible offering for foreign Missions is, of course, inseparably connected with it.

The Union Board is in large part responsible for the missionary education of the young and that involves imparting information stimulating missionary interest, training for larger service, and cultivating the grace of giving, otherwise we will not have a stronger more active, more liberal membership later on.

We must set before the young a worthy object which appeals to their better nature, and lays upon their hearts a sense of their responsibility to help evangelize the world, and will inspire them to be workers, be givers in the extension of the Kingdom.

The Children's Day Service fills an important place in all this, and it is a serious matter for a pastor, a superintendent to fail to provide the supplies the Board prepares at considerable cost, and distributes free, and does not hold a Children's Day Service as a part of the work of the Sunday school.

There is nothing that can take its place, nothing that can do its work, and I plead for all our schools to be given a chance to be trained aright, to have freely given to them that which the church has prepared for their information, training and usefulness hereafter.

Therefore, send me word without delay how many services your school needs, at Berwyn, Md., and the free supplies will be forwarded promptly.

It is gratifying to learn how favorably the entire service is being received, and the commendations of the pageant "Hold Me to Thy Cross," which forms a part of the program, are numerous, and it is believed that the schools will be pleased.

We have had a number of requests for the two large illustrated posters sent out last year, they have pictures of our missionaries, workers, buildings etc, and we still have more of them, and will gladly send them to schools that did not get them last year.

Once more, remember the two large embroidered Japanese banners to be awarded again this year—one to the school giving the largest offering for foreign missions, the other for the largest offering in proportion to membership of the school.

Please, PLEASE when sending the Children's Day offering to your annual conference treasurer state plainly it is THE CHILDREN'S DAY OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, for if you do not it will likely go into the regular budget, and, in that case, the Union Board would get 25 percent of your offering, whereas it is entitled to the entire offering. The Union Board greatly needs funds, and your best efforts in raising the largest possible offering are earnestly requested.

THE MORAL RISK

Some men who have plenty of money are poor risks in a business way, while others who are limited in their resources enjoy an extended line of credit. The explanation is that character counts for more than cash. This is a lesson for the young man just starting in business to learn. He may not have much money, and his chances of accumulating a fortune may seem small, but if his word can be absolutely relied upon and if his moral character is above reproach, he will find many a helping hand extended to him as he fights his way toward success. Good character is an asset that all men may enjoy, because it is conditional upon what a man is, and not upon what he has.

—They say fame is a calamity, take care!

ATTENTION PLEASE.

Plan For Educational Campaign.

The meeting, held in Grace Church in the interest of the High Point College on May 11, directed a committee to put on an educational program, at an early date, and so conduct it as to reach every church in the Conference. Accordingly we have mapped out plans for such a campaign, and we are publishing complete plan herewith. And we are asking everyone who is thus appointed to fall in with the plan and help us to put it over. The failure of any one to respond will break the plan, and thus frustrate the purpose. We trust all will respond. But if because of sickness or distress you cannot fill the place you are asked to take then please secure some one to go in your place, and notify the chairman of the committee.

We are asking that, on the three Sundays designated, congregations will release their pastors for this important service. This is the most important work before us just now, so all of us must respond. Where we have been unable to fill all pulpits pastors will please arrange this as best they can.

We have tried to check up carefully to see that the entire Conference is covered. If our plan leaves out a single church on your charge please have the men we are sending you double up a bit so as to reach all, or let us know so that any such churches may be reached later.

This job belongs to all of us and is big enough to challenge the very best there is in us, so we confidently expect the most hearty cooperation of everybody. As we pray let us work, and as we work let us pray that God will lead us out into VICTORY.

High Point.—A most interesting service was held in the First church last Sunday morning when the baccalaurate sermon to the students of High Point College at the close of the year's work was delivered by Rev. John W. Hawley, D. D., of Pittsburgh, Penn. After a beautiful quarette, "Hark, Hark, my Soul," by Shelley and a lovely Anthem, "Let all the Earth their voices raise," by the choir. Pres. R. M. Andrews made some interesting remarks in regard to the work of the students for the year just closing, which he declared has been most satisfactory. 207 students have been enrolled in the different departments; of these nine young men are preparing for the ministry, and three young women have decided on definite life work for the Master. 101 of these students are of the Methodist Protestant faith, while the other half is made up of Roman Catholics, Jews, Holiness, Reformed, Baptists, Methodist Episcopal, Lutherans and Protestant Episcopal. He then introduced Dr. Hawley, who is now pastor of the First Church of Pittsburgh, and he delivered a most forceful and splendid address to the 200 students seated in a body in the middle tier of pews, which had been reserved for them and the Faculty. He based his sermon on the text from Psalm 18:19, "He brought me forth also into a large place." Himself yet a young man, Dr. Hawley spoke with the vim and vigor of youth, and plead with his young hearers to make their lives count for something; to have convictions and live up to them. He quoted statistics which prove that the man who has a college education has 870 times as many chances to win prominence as the man who does not. He warned the young people not to yield to the lure of indulgence and soft living for hardship makes men great, and cited many examples. It matters not as much what kind of house you live in as what kind of person lives in your house. He congratulated the young people upon their great field of opportunity, and advised them to fix a certain goal for themselves and work to it. Work, work is the great panacea for unhappiness and disquiet. It is not so much the lack of ability that causes failure but drifting with no plan or purpose in life. In passing he paid his respects to the "human clothes racks" those who live only to wear fine clothes, and to the girls who buy their complexions at the corner drug store. In conclusion, he begged the young students to take God into their lives to be their guide and friend at all times.

Taken all in all, it was a matchless discourse, and is not often surpassed in our city. The large audience gave Dr. Hawley the closest attention and greatly appreciated the opportunity of hearing this eloquent minister. We hope that he will come this way again.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies held their monthly meeting with Mrs. J. G. Snipes on Steele St. Monday afternoon. We were much pleased to have Mrs. Lynch, a member of First Church, Charlotte as a visitor, and she made some remarks of encouragement to us. After the routine of business, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, who attended the Board meeting in Chicago, gave a most interesting report, which was thoroughly enjoyed. Mrs. Jones Burns, who has been a most faithful and efficient secretary of the Foreign Society, having resigned on account of home duties, Mrs. H. U. Oakes was elected in her stead. Miss Jennie Scott was elected leader of the Young People's Missionary Society. Interest in the young people's work is growing.

Next Sunday morning the pulpit will be occupied by Rev. J. E. Pritchard and Mr. L. F. Ross of Asheboro in the interest of High Point College. At this time Dr. Geo. R. Brown will hold a meeting for the same purpose at mother place.

The students of the college have about all dispersed to their homes for the summer vacation, and our best wishes follow them. We shall miss their bright, young faces from our congregation, and their absence will be noticeable and keenly felt. We hope that all of them may return to their work in September.

Dr. Andrews and Prof. Paul S. Kennett attended commencement exercises at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill on Monday.

Mrs. Pernelia T. Crawford and her son, Robert L. Trout, are the latest additions to our membership, having united with the church last Sunday. These good people come to us from Houston, Tex., and we gladly welcome them to our ranks.

Mrs. R. M. Andrews and children, left Tuesday for Henderson for a visit to her parents. Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Harris.

Mr. Eccles Everhart sails today from New York for Constantinople, where he will be engaged for some time in making illustrations for a book. His bride will follow him on a later boat.

We were glad to see the Editor of the Herald in the congregation Sunday, also Messrs. R. R and J. D. Ross of Asheboro.

THE OLD MAKER OF RUGS AND HIS SECRET.

Gertrude Elliot Scott.

"How long do you suppose it will be before you'll be ready to start again, Ted?"

"Can't tell, Marjorie. These pesky automobiles are too uncertain things for me to be very definite about. But it looks to me as if it would take half an hour anyway. Why, what do you want to do?"

"I think I'll walk down the road a bit as long as there's nothing I can do to help you. Wonder what kind of a stand we'll find back with some of the loveliest sweet peas for sale that I have ever seen. I'd like to pick some to bring the love flowers so I'll be back in a few minutes."

"All right, but don't get sunstruck. It's too hot to hurry any today. I'll run over for you if I get the thing started before you're back."

"There's no danger of that, I guess," and Marjorie smiled provokingly at her husband as he lay contentedly out under his big car. She then started down the lovely country road.

The stand was farther back than she had thought and in rather a lonesome spot, for there were no houses to be seen and a pine woods with its lurking shadows loomed on one side. The stand was small and the upper parts and sides were made of slender white birches, criss-crossed, covered. The sweet peas were beautiful with their soft tints and delicate fragrance, but tied tightly together and set in glass bottles with a sign "10 cents each" in rather scrawly letters on a piece of cardboard propped up against one of them. No one was in sight and Marjorie didn't know quite what to do—whether to take what she wanted and leave some money or wait until one should appear.

Finally, after a few minutes, she opened her pocketbook, got some change and discovered she had nothing but a bill, so she looked around once more, all in vain, to see if she could find the proprietor. There didn't seem to be one, but she saw a path on one side of the stand that led up a steep little hill, and she decided to try that. So up she went and soon found herself at the top and looking at a tiny house that was almost hidden from sight by great rambler rose bushes, pink, red and pale yellow and all about were beds of different shades and sizes, a veritable riot of color.

At first she just stood still and drank in the loveliness and fragrance of the scene before her, so surprised was she to find anything of beauty in this otherwise barren spot. Then she saw there was an old man sitting on the piazza of the house he was doing with his hand what looked to her like [illegible]. Going up to him, she said: "Oh, I'm sorry, but do I pay you for the sweet peas? I'm all there was on the stand."

"Yes, but you could have left the money down there. Folks generally do."

"But I didn't have any change. And I thought I'd come up and see your flowers and [illegible] surprise. Why, it's like a regular little Garden of Eden in the wilderness.

"You like flowers, eh?"

"Indeed I do. I noticed those sweet peas as I was driving by with my husband and when he had some little trouble a little way up the road, I just had to come back and get them for a friend that we're going to visit. And I like rag rugs, too. That's a beautiful one you are working on. Do you sell those as well as flowers?"

"Oh, yes, as fast as I can make them. I don't have much time in the summer, for my flowers take lots of care, but in the winter I work at them pretty steady, except when I'm out delivering them to my customers. Would you care to step into the house and see some I have on hand?"

"Oh, may I?" And perhaps you'll tell me how you make them. I've always wanted to know. I'm going to introduce myself. I'm Marjorie Stanton, and if you don't mind, I'd like to know your name."

"It's Wentworth, Silas Wentworth, but most folks call me 'the man that makes rugs.' I suspect a lot of them think I'm just plain crazy. Now I can leave this one where it is—we'll go in."

Laying the rug that was nearly finished carefully on a bench, the old man rose and led the way into the house. He gave Marjorie a comfortable chair and then going to a closet he brought out one rug after another and spread them on the floor for her to see. When the last one was down he said, "These are an order I've been making for a lady that spends her summers in Townsend; when that one out on the piazza is done I'll take them to her."

"Oh, Mr. Wentworth, they are beautiful," said Marjorie after she had looked at them carefully. "I don't see how you make them. Won't you tell me about it? Don't think I'm just curious; I'm ever so interested. It seems strange for a man to be making rugs. I never knew they did and you're an old man, too, and it must be hard work."

"No, it isn't hard and I love it. It's something like my flowers. You watch pretty things grow from dark little beginnings, and you put different colors together and get such unexpected results. I haven't had such a very eventful life myself except for my flowers and the rugs. I don't know what I should have done without them. I have my mother to thank for that; she used to love them, too."

"But do you live alone here, Mr. Wentworth? It must be lonely, especially in the winter with no other houses near."

"Oh, I don't mind people; in fact I came [illegible] away from them. I'm happier by [illegible] and I'm always busy. When you're [illegible] for callers you don't have time [illegible] about yourself."

"And you must be very busy to get so much done."

"Well, I'll tell you a little about myself [illegible] I don't generally talk [illegible] my business, but there's something about you that's different from most of th and I can see you're really interested in things. You're wondering, of course, why work so hard and what I do with the mone earn. An old man like me doesn't need mu to get along with, but I can use all I get. N for myself, but for others. It isn't a ve pleasant story, mine isn't."

"Don't tell me if it's going to make you t happy."

"It dates back a good many years—to t Civil War, in fact—a long time before y were born, Mrs. Stanton. I was a young m and in love with as pretty a girl as you'd ev hope to see. After the war had been going for some time, President Lincoln had to d pend upon drafting men, because there we not enough that enlisted. And as luck wou have it I found my name on the very fir draft list."

"Oh, then you fought in the war, didn you?"

"No, I didn't. That's just what I want t tell you about. I ought to have, more's th pity. But as I was saying, I was head ove heels in love with a girl as pretty as a pi ture, and when a man is in love, he'll do lot of things he is sorry for afterwards.

"Well, when that girl—we'll call her Bet sey for now—found out I was drafted, she wa angry, and pleaded with me night and day t stay at home with her. She told me I'd prom ised to marry her and if I went away and lef her, she'd be all alone in the world. And be sides, she said my father was old and needed me to help on the farm. It was rather hard t argue against that, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it must have been."

"Now in those days a man could buy of from doing his duty—thank God, he can't now—and three hundred dollars would send another in his place to the battlefield."

"Oh, I didn't know that."

"Well, I was persuaded to do it. I the strongest, most able-bodied fellow in the town! I listened to what that pretty girl had to say and stayed at home and I've been regretting it ever since. Of course it wasn't her fault entirely"—

"But weren't you happy after you were married and the war was over?"

"Happy? No, and never have been since, except perhaps when I get to working on my rugs and forget myself. That's why I've made so many of them; up around a thousand, I guess, and maybe more. Nothing ever seemed to go right after the war. Betsey only lived a few years and left me just when I needed [illegible] Nobody had any respect for me. I [illegible] man in town that had shirked [illegible] and all for a pretty girl that could wind me around her little finger!"

"Why, you don't seem like that kind now, Mr. Wentworth."

"[illegible] I've changed. I've had enough to "Have you lived alone ever since?"

"Yes, right here in this town. First I stayed at my father's, but he died the year after Betsey, and after a while I couldn't stand the big house, so I sold it and built this little one—away from everybody. After the war was over I had no friends. Most of the boys had died or been killed, and those that came back were ashamed of me for not going with them, and avoided me most of the time.."

"But the women?"

"It was the same with them. They were jealous of Betsey at first and then after she died they avoided me too—'cause their men folks did, I suppose; and even the children didn't have much to do with me. Guess I've always been a bit queer and my mother before me."

"Why, what do you mean?"

"Nothing, only people that make rugs always seem to be looked on as queer. We both made rugs. She taught me all I know about it when I was a boy. But I tell you I've been mighty glad these late years that I had the rugs to fall back on. They've brought me in a lot of money besides giving me something pleasant to do."

"But what do you use the money for? It's part of your store, isn't it?"

"Yes, the pleasantest part. You see, our town has a G. A. R. (though there's not many of the boys left now—more are in the cemetery than anywhere else) and they haven't much money. Well, once or twice a year I have a lawyer in the city who helps me with my affairs send them as big a check as I can spare to put into their treasury to spend as they please. Of course they don't know who sends it, just a friend. And every Memorial Day and Fourth of July there is a special check to buy flowers for all the soldiers' graves and pay for a dinner for the boys after they're through marching.

"Then over in Wenton there's a Soldiers' Home and I send all the money that's left to that. Some years it amounts to quite a tidy sum and other times it's small; it all depends upon how good business has been. You can't always bank on flowers—they're a lot like some people; some summers they don't amount to anything no matter how much care you give them. But with the rugs it's different; they're always about the same.

"I guess that's about all there is to tell, Mrs. Stanton, I'm just trying in my own way to make up to the other boys for all they did that I should have done years ago, and be the kind of a man now that I wasn't then. It's other people you've got to consider most in this world, isn't it, if you want to be truly happy?"

"Well, Mr. Went're surely doing your share now, an n't wear a suit of blue with brass it you're a soldier just the same. Thank you so much for telling me all these things. I want some of your rugs if you will make them for me and I know my friends some too. I'm afraid I've kept you from your work and have stayed longer than I should. I've no idea what time it is, but I can hear my husband tooting his horn for me down by the stand. He probably thinks I'm lost. Good-by for today. I'm coming to see you again soon, very soon, And whenever I think of soldiers and patriotism, Mr. Wentworth, I shall think of you up here busy with your flowers and your rag rugs, and I shall be glad that I know you."

WHEN MICKIE-DEAR WAS MISSING.

"Where's Mickie-dear?" called Robbie bursting into the kitchen, and speaking to nobody in particular, for there was nobody there. Jamie and Majorie followed, all of the three just home from school in the little country schoolhouse down at the "Turn."

"Kitty, kitty, kitty!" called Marjorie, opening the door that led into the dining room "Kitty, kitty, kitty!"

"Mick, Mick, Mick!" called Jamie at the door that led through a covered "walk" from the kitchen to the carriage house. "Where are you, Mickie-boy? Wake up, there!"

But no big, plump, furry, golden-coated Mickie-dear came bounding to answer to his name.

"Queer!" exclaimed Jamie.

"He's always here when we come from school, not matter if he's at the barn all day. It is is queer," agreed Marjorie.

Robbie's lips began to quiver. Mickie-dear belongs to the whole family in a general way, but very especially to Robbie and Great-Grandmother Burton.

"Maybe he's with Gramma," said Robbie, suddenly. "Sometimes he takes a nap in her sunshine for a while in the afternoon, she says; and maybe he overslept, especially if he was pretty busy all the morning."

He hurried in through the dining room the great-grandmother's sunny southwest room. Hopeful he looked toward the west windows. But great-grandmother hadn't even seen Mickie-dear all day.

"Very queer, too," she mused anxiously. "I have learned to look for a visit from Mickie-dear every afternoon. I enjoy it exceedingly: he's always so cheerful, and such a gentle man!"

Yes, Mickie-dear was all that and more. Robbie agreed mournfully. "We had some catnip for him," he explained. "Fresh catnip from Aunt Sweet-Marie's sweet-herb garden in her south cellar window." Robbie left his great-grandmother's room sorrowfully, and returned to the kitchen, where his sober little face told the others, without words, that he had no good news for them.

"Oh, if anything has happened to Micki—" cried Marjorie.

"Oh, there couldn't!" wailed Robbie.

"Course not!" exclaimed Jamie. He tried to whistle, but the whistle stuck in his throat. "Let's look all over the house, thoroughly," he said. "How silly we were not to do that at first.

So they started, and made a thorough search upstairs and down-stairs, and no Mickie.

Just then big-brother Kent came breezing in cold and snow-powdered, after his long drive from the village, looking around at their unsmiling faces.

"Mickie!" quavered Robbie.

Kent looked puzzled. "Sick abed in the wood-box from too much petting?" he inquired, drawing the corners of his mouth away down.

"Don't be funny, Kent" snapped Marjorie. "He won't come for all our calling, and calling, and calling! Mickie-dear's lost!"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Kent, impolitely, but cheerfully. "Mickie wouldn't get lost. In the first place, he has too much sense. And in the second place, where would he get lost? And he wouldn't run away, any more than I would, or you, or you, or you!" Kent almost had them smiling at the idea of one of them running away from such a perfectly wonderful home as they thought theirs was. But the smile didn't come through. Things looked too serious for that.

"Well, of course, you've looked all over the house. Let's try the carriage-house and the barn and the tool-house, and the ice-house and the old hen-house and the old sap-house, and the old stable and the new stable, and the pig-house and everything," rattled on Kent, still trying to get smiles back on those sober faces. It was no use, he found.

"He wouldn't be there," said Marjorie briefly but firmly.

"No, he's always here when we get home from school," agreed Jamie.

"Always!" said Robbie. "He knew we expected him to be here."

"But we'll go with you and look," consented Marjorie. "I suppose we should leave no stone unturned." She had heard her father use that expression that very morning, and this seemed to be just the place where it exactly fitted in.

So they started that very minute, none of them having taken off their outdoor clothing. And they searched in every one of those "outbuildings," which make almost a little village on the beautiful old Burton farm. Calling constantly, they went from one to the other, but no Mickie-dear appeared or answered. Downhearedly they returned to the house. Mrs. Burton had just come home from mothers' meeting, and Mr. Burton had come up from the west woodlot and was taking down the milk pails.

"Mickie-dear lost! Impossible!" exclaimed Mrs. Burton. But when she heard what a search they had made for him, she was anxious, too. So was Mr. Burton. "But he'll return all right," he said. Still, he looked sober.

"Oh, didyou feed the hens, Jamie?" he asked.

"I forgot—hurrying for Mickie!"

"Well, it's too late now—they've gone to roost. Give them an extra treat in the morning. Did you go down to the brook to look at your muskrat trap you set this morning?" he asked.

"No, I forgot that too.

"Well, then go now. Can't take the chances of an animal suffering in a trap overnight when it may have been in all day.

"I should say not!" said Jamie. "I'll go right off!"

"I'll go with you." said Marjorie. "May I, mother?" she asked, as Mrs. Burton came out from great-grandmother's room. "May I go down to Jamie's trap with him? I'll hurry and set the table when we come back."

"Yes, run along!" answered her mother, who knew as well as Marjorie that Jamie would like company. "But I don't like the trapping notion that Jamie's taken up. And neither does father, not really."

"But, mother, the muskrats are a nuisance, a pest! They catch little young ducks in the spring. Mr. Farr says so. And you know father means to raise ducks next year. And Mr. Farr will pay me lots of money for the skins And that'll help father out, you know."

So they ran down the pasture lane and through the cedar grove on the flat, and in a few minutes were within sound of the brook.

"The trap's right down there," said Jamie, "there under that bunch of elders that droops over the brook. Saw a musk—What's that!"

At the sound of his voice, a pitiful cry had sounded through the snowy air. It seemed to fill the air, all around, with its pain and terror. The children stopped. It came again. Then they knew it came from under the elders.

"Why, it sounds like a baby!" whispered Marjorie. "But it can't be! Oh, what can it be?"

They went slowly nearer. It came again Something light-colored, but dark against the snow, moved under the bushes. Then—

"Mickie!" gasped Marjorie. "Mickie, Mickie-dear!"

Yes, Mickie, beautiful, babied Mickie, struggling to free one soft forepaw from the cruel steel jaws of the muskrat trap! As they knelt beside him he stopped his struggles, and looked up at them with great shining bewildered eyes.

Without a word Jimmie sprang back these [illegible] jaws. Tenderly Marjorie took Mickie in her arms and cuddled him under her cape where he clung to her trembling and making strange little cries.

Jamie was unfastening the trap from the stake that held it. He lifted it high, and with his second hand he sent it flying through the air to land in the [illegible]

B. M. Williams.

Concord.—Our revival which has been in progress for the last week we believe has been a great success. The Lord has heard our prayers and has greatly blessed us. So far, we have had about twenty conversions. Most of the converts have been young people. Dr. Williams has preached some very stirring and inspiring sermons. Large crowds have been present each evening to hear him.

As a text Sunday evening Dr. Williams used Genesis 3:4-5. "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: For God doth know that in the day that ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." The subject for the evening was, "The Gospel of the Enemy."

Dr. Williams said in part: The gospel which Satan brings to man is a gospel to destroy us, and to destroy the word of God. The first thing that we should do is to remind ourselves that there is a personal devil. A person of intelligence, a person who is deceiving, a person who knows what methods to use.

There are always two distinct voices speaking to us. One is the voice of God, trying to save us. The other is a voice which seems to be of love, but one which is trying to destroy our character, and trying to defeat the purpose of God.

The methods which the devil uses: He comes with a question which causes dissatisfaction or discontent. He came to Eve with a question. "Can you eat of all the trees of the garden?" he asked. Of course, she couldn't. Satan then told her the words of the text. The first sin was not the taking of the forbidden fruit; it was the disbelieving God, and believing the devil. We can't believe the lies of Satan and believe the Bible.

Another method he uses is, he teaches that there is no hell, there is no sin, that sin is out of date. He says the word of God is not true. And there is no penalty for sin, no hereafter. "But,"—the speaker added, "is there no hereafter. Yes, we all know that there is." Another doctrine of Satan's is that there is no such thing as virtue, no such thing as honesty. No one has ever lived perfect. "But friends, it's all false. There are thousands of men today who had rather die than give up their virtue and honesty."

The devil gets his gospel through to men by using human agencies, books, shows, and such places. Be careful to keep no one from being a christian if he desires. Be careful what you read.

The last point the speaker brought out was the effect. After Adam and Eve had sinned they tried to hide from God. It has the same effect on men today. They try to get away from religious influences, because it makes them uncomfortable.

In conclusion, Dr. Williams appealed to the young people. "Anchor your souls with God, and avoid these gospels of the enemy. God has given his life for us, but Satan has given nothing."

The meeting will close in the near future.

Rev. E. G. Cowan was here several days visiting Mr. and Mrs. D. T. McLaurin.

Cornelius Sides has returned from High Point College, to spend the vacation with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Sides.

Concord Church, Saxapahaw Charge.—Since our reporter has left, I will try to write a few words about what our church is doing, and is planning to do.

Rev. H. L. Isley preached a very inspiring sermon at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning. His topic was "Christian Fellowship." It was enjoyed by all present.

On the third Sunday afternoon, Rev. J. D. Hardy and D. M. Davidson will preach at Concord church on timely topics. We hope to have a large crowd out to hear these brethren.

Our revival meeting will start on the first Sunday in August. Rev. R. A. Hunter is the pulpit help. There will be two services each day, one in the afternoon at 2:30 P. M. and one in the evening at 8 o'clock. Let each and every one pray for this meeting.

We were planning to have a Children's Day service the fifth Sunday night in May, but on account of measles it was postponed. We hope to have this service in the near future.

We are glad to learn that one of our members, Mrs. W. M. Lewis, who has just undergone an operation at Long's Hospital is improving some.

The "Wedding Bells" are still ringing in our community. Mr. Lacy Moore, a member of Concord Church was married to Miss Blanche Cheek of Carboro on Friday, May 28. We wish them much happiness through life.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Edith Guthrie.

Siler City.—What has been commonly conceded to be the best evangelistic campaign that Siler City has experienced, in recent years at least, closed last Friday. The Methodist Episcopal, the Baptist and the Methodist Protestant Churches were in cooperation. Services were held every morning and night and the three pastors, Revs. R. L. Fountain, Baptist; W. L. Maness, Methodist Episcopal; and Ferry Lee Gibbs, Methodist Protestant took turns at preaching.

Seldom before has the writer assisted in meetings of this character where there has been manifested such unity of purpose, harmony of spirit, and responsiveness of will. The sermons were earnest, timely and appealing. The singing was spirited, devotional and hearty. The congregation was large every night that the weather did not interfere, and that was very seldom. The invitations given, of whatever appeal they may have been, were always responded to by few or many. In other words, the campaign seemed to be as nearly perfect as this day and time will admit. At the close of the meetings, it was estimated that over forty would unite with the three churches as a direct or indirect result of the effort. The Lord surely was there in "old time power."

Brother Gibbs, the pastor of our church, is one of our most promising young men. He has just received his Master of Arts degree from Elon College, and will soon enter our Westminster Seminary, we hope, to complete his minister Seminary, we hope, to complete his ministerial course. He is not haughty nor egotistical, feeling that the world is at his command, but is humble and reserved. His kindly spirit, genial manner, and striking personality has made him popular with the splendid people whom he is serving devoutly and zealously. There's a future for our church in Siler City.

E. Lester Ballard.

Asheboro.—Clarence Bogg and Burgess Scott, two young men, were received into church membership yesterday morning on profession of faith. These two added to the thirty-one others make thirty three to be received since conference.

On next Sunday morning, Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., and Mr. C. C. Robbins of High Point, will speak to our people in the general exchange of pulpits throughout the conference.

On the third Sunday which will be June 20 we will conduct a memorial service and call the roll of our honored dead both as members of the church and as former pastors of the church who have deceased. The service will be at eleven o'clock and we invite all who are interested to return for the services.

Our Children's Day service this year is scheduled for the fourth Sunday evening in June.

A very fine meeting of our Brotherhood was held a week ago. Newly elected officers for the next six months are Dr. John Swain, President, Mr. G. W. Hayworth, Vice President, and Mr. Thaddeus Ferree, secretary and treasurer.

On Friday and Saturday of this week we will conduct a campaign among our membership for funds with which to buy the pews and carpet for the auditorium.

Glen Raven Church.—This church had something unusual recently when the district rally was held here. The chairman had a good program arranged and a large number on the program were present and did their part. Some were not present but visitors took their place and we had something very interesting and instructive to listen to. The discouraging part was that there were no more people present of the local church and from the churches in the district to be benefitted by the work of the two chairmen and speakers.

Our Sunday school is moving on. The children's day exercise was held by the children of the Sunday school Sunday evening, June 6. It has been some time since the first children's day exercise was held but it never grows old for those who are interested in the young life of the church. Some faithful work was done by a few in training the children and the children did well and the collections was very good compared with what we do.

We noticed in the Educational program that we are to have two speakers at Glen Raven on Sunday night, June 13th. We hope this meeting will have a large attendance. The special revival meeting will begin here June 14th. Expecting Rev. Mr. Hethcox to be the pulpit help.

Seven officers and thirty-eight enlisted men of the U. S. Navy are on their way to Alaska on a perilous mission. They are to begin, this coming summer, to make a photographic map of Alaska from the air. The expedition includes picked aviators, photographers and mechanics. The members of the expedition, by using four airplanes, hope to photograph 49,000 square miles of Alaskan territory this summer.

The work will be dangerous. There are high mountains and gigantic glaciers in Alaska and the weather is cold. As the work can be done only during the summer months at least four years will be required to complete the map, which will be made by the Navy Department in Washington from the pictures taken by this expedition.—Current Events.

In some States there are radio sets on more than one-fourth of the farms. The farmer's interest in radio has grown by leaps and bounds. In 1923 it was estimated that there were 145,000 radio sets on farms; in 1924, the estimate was 365,000; in 1925 the number had increased to 535,000, and now the estimate is nearly a million.

"Any part of the city for 50 cents," yelled the taxi driver.

"You can't sting me again," retorted Silas. "I bought the City Hall last week and they couldn't give it to me."

Old Uncle Eben Jones went into a life-insurance office and requested a policy.

"Why, uncle," said the president, "you are too old for us to take the risk. How old are you?"

"Ninety-seven come next August," said the old man, and added testily: "If you folks will take the trouble to look up your statistics, you'll find that mighty few men die after they are 97."

"ONLY AS THEY RISE."

Thus only, according to Browning, do "angels reveal themselves to you. They sit all day beside you, lie down by you at night... and all at once they leave you, and you know them." Know them for what they have been all the time, and we unheeding and unrecognizing their celestial rank. Life has so many unrealized links to the Infinite. God has so many fully credentialed but dimly appreciated ministers of His redemptive purpose. Often "a spark disturbs our clod," yet we admit the disturbance merely—not the significance of it. 'Tis a lean day on which God fails to visit us with one or more ambassadors of His love. The trouble is that we become so stolidly accustomed to being met with blessing, we take for granted the whole scheme of kindness. In a world palpitant with God, who fills it to its utmost bounds, every day is revelation-day for the attentive and responsive soul. Not a waking hour passes but we are freshly beholden to the Father of Lights. Whoso grows a flower or plants a corn hill, fetches a cup of cold water or smooths a pillow, for sake of others, is witness of God's good pleasure. Every highway cast up, every mountain tunnelled, for the feet of God's children—to make life's journey less toilsome—speaks of God. The smile of encouragement, the handclasp of a friend, declares our Father. All the rainbow hues of life are the white lights of the Divine Face, broken through the prisms of human service. Alas, that we are so slow to identify God's angels of benefaction! "'Tis only as they rise to heaven" that we recognize them for what they were and are in our lives.—George Clarke Peck.

I have never read nor heard a philosophic, rational, logical argument against Christianity; nor have I ever seen or heard a rational, philosophic, or logical argument in favor of any form of skepticism or infidelity. Jesus Christ was, and is, a Person—not a thing, not a doctrine, not a theory. Infidelity is not a person, not a thing, not a theory. It is a state of mind, an intellectual or a moral imbecility. It is a spiritual jaundice, sometimes green and sometimes black. They cannot be philosophically, logically, rationally compared. They are neither logical nor literal contrasts. The infidel is but the incarnation of a negative idea. He is absolutely but a mere negation. He stands to Christianity as darkness stands to light. Is darkness anything? Is blindness anything but the loss of sight? Is unbelief anything but the repudiation of evidence? One might as rationally load a cannon to fight against darkness as to dispatch a syllogism against a chimera.

Jesus Christ was a real Person, and had personal, positive attributes. He had a real and positive character, unique, original, transcendent. It was as fixed, as positive, and as radiating as the sun in heaven. The originality and unity of His character is all-sufficient, in the eye of educated reason, to claim for Him a cordial welcome into our world and to hail Him as the supreme benefactor of our race.—A. Campbell.

dear Aunt Mary has gone,
r body lies beneath a hill.
God knows best for us all.
ur Aunt Mary's work on earth is done.
angel came one morn,
And took Aunt Mary home.
We can never forget her heavenly face
Before and when she was passing away
And it is hard for us to understand
But maybe we will some day.
There are few left broken hearted.
Besides others she had known,
And they all know that the loss of Aunt Mary
Left a vacant chair in their home.
Alone in the lonely cottage,
Alone in life's pathway to roam:
Friends and neighbors have consoled,
Yet there is a vacant chair in our home.
But Aunt Mary's work on earth is ended,
No more tears to wipe away.
Sleep the sleep that knows no waking
Till the resurrection day.
Sad to know that we can never
See thy cheerful face again,
While on earth our hearts are severed.
We will hope to meet again.

WHAT ONE SPIDER CAUGHT ON THE WING.

Gertrude C. Mills.

In the warmer countries spiders grow to a larger size and some of them spin mammoth webs of great beauty.

In a southern California town there lived a spider who quite regularly spun his web between a Cherokee rose trellis and a clothes line post.

The family who owned the rose trellis and the post used often to notice the beauty of the web, which measured nearly three feet across.

One eventful morning the voice of the mother of the family rang out vibrantly. It carried an urgent summons to each hearer to come at once. They came and this is what the delighted group saw:

A background of glossy green Cherokee rose bush leaves washed fresh with morning dew. Before this the wide silvery gray web of the spider all hung with dewdrops that sparkled like diamonds in the sunshine. Towards the upper middle of the web—now each drew breath as they did—hung a little yellow bird caught by his wing-tips. It was almost too exquisite—the golden bird like a heart of the golden morning against his background of shimmering gray and glossy green! Indeed, it seemed unbelievable that a spider's web could hold him.

The family filled their eyes for a long minute with the lovely picture and then the warm-hearted mother, who could never see any difficulty without trying to relieve it, took a step forward. She was going to tear the web and let the pretty little prisoner free.

The disturbing move was all that was needed. With an exultant chirp the bird broke from his bonds and flew quickly out of sight.

He left a bright memory which, after all the family felt they owed to the spider!—Our Dumb Animals.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON JUNE 20.

June 3 [illegible]

Lesson Text: [illegible]

Golden Text: [illegible]

Devotional Reading: The Lord [illegible] our brother's keeper.

Suggested Points.

1. Since the events recorded in the last lesson Joseph had gone from the prison-dungeon to be governor over Egypt, seven years of great plenty had come and gone, and the second year of famine was in progress. Joseph's brothers, except Benjamin, had come to buy grain, and now they had come the second time, bringing Benjamin with them. Joseph had feasted them royally and had sent them away with his silver cup in Benjamin's sack. Joseph's steward pursued and overtook the brothers. A search was made and the missing cup was found in Benjamin's sack. This discovery filled them with distress and consternation. Appearances pointed to Benjamin as a thief, though he was innocent. In haste they returned to the city. And this lesson is the recorded appeal of Judah in behalf of Benjamin.

2. Judah was weighted down with a heavy responsibility. He had become surety to his father for Benjamin's safe return. Now it looked bad for Benjamin. It looked like that he would have to remain and be a servant to Joseph, to compensate the seeming theft. To prevent that and be able to take Benjamin home with him was the burden of Judah's carved plea.

3. It is remarkable that Judah did not make the plea of innocence. Benjamin no doubt protested most vehemently that he did not take the cup, and all were equally innocent. And strangely Judah acknowledged that they were all guilty. No doubt he meant deeds as bad as or worse than this supposed theft.

4. This heart-to-heart speech of Judah consists of three parts. He first recounts the circumstances that led to Benjamin's coming. Joseph demanded that Benjamin be brought in most unpromising terms. There was no chance of getting any more grain unless Benjamin came. Jacob protested most anxiously and fondly against Benjamin's going. His heart's tendrils of tenderest affection clung to the boy whom he loved more than his own life. But dire necessity, the specter of starvation, finally compelled the old man to yield. And Benjamin was sent along with the others.

5. Judah next drew a lurid picture of what might happen if his younger brother was not allowed to return. He doubtless recalled how their selling of Joseph and the deception they practiced had almost killed their father long years ago. Now he feared that his father could not survive the loss of the only remaining child of his beloved Rachel. He described to Joseph how a heartbroken father might pass quickly to the grave.

6. Judah next proposes to be Benjamin's substitute. He would be bondman in his brother's place, and let Benjamin go back to his father. It was a proposal of noble sacrifice on his part.

7. But dawn follows the darkest night.

After this distressing plea Joseph makes himself known to his brethren, and thereby changes the course of history. A love feast is held. Loads of valuables are sent to their father, with an urgent request to come at once to Egypt. The best of news was awaiting the anxious father.

Practical Points.

1. The human race is one large family with a common origin. For God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Acts 17:26.

2. The oneness of the race establishes the brotherhood of the race and the Fatherhood of God. "Adam, which was the son of God." Luke 3:38.

3. The privileges of brotherhood are large and varied. The bond of union yields strength, happiness, and prosperity. Each helps the other to a larger freedom and a larger opportunity.

4. A common faith in Jesus Christ creates a spiritual brotherhood. This is higher and more binding than the brotherhood based upon natural origin. "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister and mother." Mark 3:35.

5. The love of the brethren is a sure way of loying God. Jesus has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

6. Prayer for the brethren is a most delightful privilege and duty. "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." James 5:16.

7. Mutual defense and helpfulness are also precious obligations of brotherhood. "Am I my brother's keeper,,"

—Federal agents raided the home of Frank M. Keith, Rochester, N. Y., says an Associated Press dispatch, and seized a large quanity of caramels, each one containing one ounce of alleged whiskey of sufficient strength to knock out an ordinary person. Keith, says the dispatch, is listed in the Rochester directory as a technologist. Technically he was in the candy business, but when the agents submitted his product to analysis, they declared the filling was pure grain alcohol with a coating of wax or parafin to prevent leakage. The caramels were neatly packed in tin boxes for distribution. Besides the candy, the agents found a set of dies for making whiskey labels, a bottling and corking machine, and various kinds of whiskey labels and seals.

TO STRENGTHEN JAPAN LAW.

Japan possesses a law forbidding the sale of alcoholic beverages to young people under 21 years of age. The temperance societies ask that the age-limit be raised to 25 years. Fourteen representatives of the five political parties brought forward the bill to this effect which was adopted on the 25th of March by the lower House. As the question could not be discussed by the House of Peers before the close of the session, it will be taken up again next year.

On the occasion of the discussion of the bil an anti-alcohol or more exactly an anti-sake day, from the name of the alcoholic beverage most widely spread in Japan, had been organized for the 15th of March and gave rise to great demonstrations, especially in the schools.

R. M. ANDREWS, President

Friendship Station.—Our pastor filled his appointment today at 11:00 o'clock, preaching a most wonderful sermon, with a large audience.

It seems as though we are not doing our duty as a country, as a nation; when we do our duty God is going to do His. His part is done; if we would do ours there would be no use for Court Houses and county jails; they could be turned into churches. If we as a nation do not do more to try to save the lost; our country, our nation, is coming to some bad end. Parents will blame the children, but stop and think! how am I raising my children? Are they growing up to be a help to this nation or a curse and down fall. Train up a child in the way it shall go and when it is old it will not depart from it.

Siler City, Siler City Charge.—We have just closed a glorious union revival at Siler City. The Baptist, M. E.s and our church there joined forces against the forces of evil and God gave us victory. We received seven into membership Sunday morning. Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Woody, Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Cooper, Mr. Clarence Brady, Mr. Chas. Reitzell Stone and Mr. John Robert Forrester. We are glad to have these. We were, also, glad to have Rev. E. Lester Ballard of West End M. P. church to assist us in the meeting along the music way. Brother Ballard made hosts of friends who will not forget him soon.

Pray for our meeting which is now in progress at Liberty. F. L. Gibbs.

The world knows just two prayers, under which all others, from the beginning till the end of time, may be categoried: one, that of Ajax, the first word which is supposed by some to have been inscribed over the Temple of Apollo at Delphi. "Oh, that the gods would empower me to obtain my wishes!"—the typical, instinctive prayer of paganism; the other, "Thy will be done!"—The inculcated prayer of revealed religion. Here is a difference vast as that between Heaven and earth. Show a man's religion, and you most truly show the —Let us get out of the false notion that the only way to be dignified is to be distinguished, the only way to be good is to be heroic, the only way to help the world is to make a sensation, the only way to serve Christ is to do something big. Let us learn that the whole Christian life, whether it is lived on a scale of miles or of inches, is a beautiful and worthy life, and that what God requires of us is not to accomplish anything wonderful, but to do justice and love mercy and walk humbly with our God. God has two thrones—one in the highest heaven, one in the lowliest heart. —Van Dyke.

DIVINE HEALING, WHY NOT?

Is not "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today, and forever?" Does not His great sympathetic heart beat with the same throbs of sympathy that it did nineteen centuries ago? Has He not the same power now that He had then? Is He not just as willing to heal and save now as He was when His feet pressed the sod of Galilee?

Yea, verily, He is still moved with infinite compassion "to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." He is still an all-round Saviour. He is just as willing and anxious, now and everywhere, to save mankind from the ills of the body as He is to save them from the sins of the soul.

And He has given authority to His followers throughout this gospel age to administer healing in His name. In the last chapter of Mark, seventeenth and eighteenth verses, we have this utterance from His lips: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

In John 14:12 we have another statement authorizing believers to perform all the works of Christ, in both the [illegible] realms: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. A NEAR VIEW OF FIGHTING IN CHINA.

Miss Alice Murphy, a missionary in Peking, China, has written a most interesting letter to Miss Ethel M. Long, who is in charge of "The School of Many Friends" at Lintsing in the Province of Shantung. Miss Long is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Luther K. Long. We reproduce most of the letter here. Miss Murphy writes under date of April 19, 1926:

"Last week was spring vacation. I stayed at home like a good girl, until Wednesday afternoon. Just about all we could do was play tennis, but we had a good time doing that. Since the trains were running to Tungchow and no where else, I decided to go to Tungchow and see Gertrude for a day—just so I would know I had had a vacation.

"To be sure we knew that there had been some fighting near there, but there had been off and on for some time, and with no prospect of its getting worse. We had had some jolly bombs ourselves in Peking on Monday, so it seemed about as safe in one place as in the other.

"When I got to Tungchow, I found them very busy at the hospital caring for the wounded soldiers that had been brought in from the front. The fighting had been quite close the two days before but they had driven the enemy back five miles, so we could hear it only indistinctly.

"Next morning, as we wakened, we knew the fighting was much closer, and before we had finished breakfast word came that the army which has held Tungchow for the last two years had struck camp and was in full retreat. I went up on the high school tower and with some others watched the manouvers for an hour. It was fascinating to see an army in action in a real battle and to see how they organized the retreat and the placing of the men to protect their retreat. It was one of the most interesting things I have ever seen to watch those thousands of men and their guns, and even the line of the railroad was clearly seen. We could hear the constant roar of the firing, see the smoke from the bursting shells, and occasionally the flames of some house as it caught from a shell, or perhaps the burning of supplies that they might not fall into enemy hands. We could frequently disguish between the big guns and the rattle of the rifles and the steady sputter of the machine guns. After watching there for an hour I went down to the hospital to see if I could help for they were very busy taking in the wounded, and the doctors were operating almost constantly.

"I had been in the hospital only a few minutes when bullets began flying over the compound thick and fast, and we were ordered to the basement. The hospital is on the main road about one hundred and fifty yards from the city gate and between that and the railroad station. We expected sharp fighting there, but for some reason they gained admission to the city quite easily. Though the bullets struck the walls all around the windows, none came through, why, no one knows. An empty coffin standing just outside the window where we were saved us. As soon as we saw that it was inevitable that the other side would take the city, the hospital authorities gathered up the guns of the soldier-patients and disposed of them that they might be able to say to the enemy when they came that there were only patients in the hospital and no arms. We could see them entering the city on the run past our hospital windows. Dr. Love went out and stood at the gate and talked to the men as they came along. Seeing the American flag and the foreigner standing there they only asked if there were any of the enemy in the compound and went on.

"We stayed down in the basement until nearly two o'clock when Dr. Love said that he thought if we would be careful we might try to get home for some lunch. We had gone only a little way when the rifle fire near by started again, but we got home safely and were mighty glad to get inside a house again.

"The firing slackened about four o'clock so that folks dared venture forth from their cellars. On comparing notes we found that though bullets had come into the school buildings and smashed some windows, the only person in the compound to be hurt was the man who cares for the goats, and he had been shot through the leg. May be you think we were not thankful! They started again about dark and the heavy firing kept up all night between the city and Peking. The basement of the house where I stayed was so full of Chinese that there was no room, so we slept on mattresses on the floor in the center of the house and as far from windows as possible and prayed that the bullets might all bump into the trees before they got to us. It seemed strange how much we did sleep in spite of it all, and when we were fully awake at six in the morning the house was shaking and the windows rattling. The center of the conflict was at a bridge about three miles from us, but you could hear the rifle bullets striking around the house.

"About nine o'clock it began to rain hard the first rain of the year, and the firing ceased. The bridge had been surrendered and the rain must have dampened their enthusiasm. I have been so thankful for the rain. It is wonderful how it does relax one's nerves. That was the last shooting we heard to amount to anything, but the city was now in Fengtien hands and looting was in full blast. They say that Tungchow has been looted three times now in the last five years, and this is the worst of the three. The soldiers simply took everything that was takable. They forced the women to cook for them, and just made themselves at home in the houses. the people were much more afraid of the soldiers than they were of the bullets. War certainly does make brutes out of soldier boys.

"This kept up until late Saturday night when the army was ordered forward toward Peking. Many of the soldiers are now stationed around Peking, mostly outside the walls and are looting all the villages they come to.

"I had a chance to come in to Peking on Sunday afternoon with a man who had come through in a Ford to see how his little boys in the American school were. He said if I wanted to take the chances with them, I could. There were no prospects of another chance for no one knows how long, so I came. We saw many interesting things along the thirteen miles in, twice we were stopped and asked for our personal cards, but we got in without any special difficulty. The girls were quite surprised to see me, and I was mighty glad to be back."

PREVALENT IMPURITY.

Campbell Morgan in a powerful sermon once said that the seventh commandment is aimed at a sevenfold sin. It denounces a sin that is against the individual, the family, society, the nation, the race, the universe, and God. And he proved his thesis with tremendous power.

As I see it, it is primarily for the preservation of the family.

The sweetest, purest and most beautiful thoughts in life cluster around the family—the home.

Home—how the poets have sung it.

"Our home, the spot of earth supremely blessed,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest."

Mother—it is the dearest name on earth.

"Never, never has one forgotten his pure, right-educating mother."

"Happy he
With such a mother! faith in womankind
Beats with his blood, and trust in all things high Comes easy to him."

Daughter, there is perhaps no love on earth so unselfish as that of a father for his daughter. As her little fingers cling to his hand, they hold him more powerfully than massive chains.

Sister. Every right-thinking man would lay down his life gladly in her defence.

These and a score of other tender and precious thoughts, ideas and names cluster around the family.

And God who instituted the family at the very beginning and who has honored and blessed it at every step, takes the seventh commandment, and like a massive wall, throws it around the family for its preservation.

One of the leading thinkers of today has said that the damning sin of the time is not liquor drinking, is not dishonesty, is not lying, but is the social vice and the evil heart out of which it proceeds.

The Source of This Impurity.

What a wonderful teacher was Jesus Christ. He looked through all the false views of His age, through all the puerile excuses; through all the half-truths, down into men's hearts, and there pointed to the source of impurity.

"An evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh."

"For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies."

And Proverbs long before had said: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

"Keep thine heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

Christ looked down deep into the human heart and saw its impurity. There is the source of sin.

The Causes of Impurity.

The sinful appetency is in the heart. What indles it into life?

A most fruitful cause is bad companions. Evil companions corrupt good morals." I ave known of cases where the very nurses egan to defile the souls of the children comitted to their care. Servants are a fruitful ource of contamination to children's minds. ere is a strong argument for Christian work mong the negroes of the South. We vaccinate em to prevent their having and spreading nall-pox. We need to teach and save them. ot only for their own, but for our children's kes.

Evil associates cause impurity. A rotten apple quickly causes a whole barrel to decay. A egenerate in school can contaminate a whole lass.

Another fruitful cause is bad literature. ometimes it is the lewd story slipped from and to hand. One of our great men tells of ch a story put into his hands when a mere d. He read a page and then threw it down disgust. But it had seared its way into his emory.

Sometimes the cause is in our daily papers. All the news that's fit to print," is a fine otto. Much comes through some yellow jourals that is neither fit to print nor fit to read. ur news stands, and I fear our homes are lled with vile magazines. It seems that othing is being done to punish or prevent em. Anthony Comstock is dead and seems have no successor. This country will never now what it owed to that man.

Then there is vile literature that poses as igh literature, in the form of poetry and novs. Our land is flooded with erotic poetry and tten novels. A keen critic remarked to me e other day that not a novel had come out ecently that did not have something impure r suggestive in it.

A defect in your plumbing may let sewer as into your home. That is bad, for it causs sickness.

A defect in your judgment lets intellectual lth into your home. That is vastly worse, for causes spiritual rottenness and death.

Another fearful cause is bad pictures. The ude in art is usually the suggestive in imorality.

Then there are the moving pictures. What uld be our greatest blessing is becoming our ost awful curse. The screen is filled with the lacious and suggestive. Many pictures derade or deride married life. Many portray. ery lightly veiled, the most indecent things. he minds, hearts and souls of our youth and ur whole community are being slowly but rely tainted.

And little or nothing is being done to corect this.

Another serious cause lies in bad environent.

The business revolution that has thrust our sters and daughters into offices and places of usiness creates serious problems. There are oral lepers in some of those places. You had etter know where your loved ones are workng

The relaxation of so many social restrictions has brought serious dangers. Joy riding at night is wrecking many lives. Better be a trifle old fashioned and know where your daughters are at night.

Another serious cause is found in bad dressing. Laughing and sneering at the old fogy and prudish don't change facts. Much of the dressing of the last few years has been indecent and provocative of immorality.

Mankind fell and needed clothes to cover their nakedness. And they still need clothes. Kingsley's fine picture, in which he contrasts the Puritan maiden, modestly clothed, with the half-naked creatures of Charles the Second's court and party, will never lose its power. Christian women ought to dress modestly, whatever the styles from Paris may dictate.

The Evasions of Impurity.

Doubtless the reader has already been thinking some of these. Let us consider them.

"Evil to him who evil thinks." That sounds fine. But it won't do. The human mind and heart are so constituted that certain causes produce certain effects. The tongue tastes bitter or sweet or sour. The eye sees red or green or yellow. The ear hears harsh or sweet.

Seeing or hearing certain things produces impure thoughts and desires.

You may lie and say that the pickle and quinine and sugar you taste all alike taste sweet; but your saying so, does not make it so.

"Evil to him who evil thinks" is rot. Certain scenes produce impure thoughts. Avoid them.

"To the pure all things are pure." And some of those who quote this, are thoroughly impure in their lives.

It may be that some have scaled such heights, as to leave their natures untouched by what comes through eye-gate or ear-gate. But usually such persons, making such claims, are just lying, posing, fooling themselves, not others.

"Art and artists have privileges that ordinary mortals have not." Nude art is impure. The exposure of the model is impure. Most artists are touched by their environment. The whole atmosphere of the nude in art is salacious.

The artistic temperament does not give the right in God's sight to be impure in thought, word or deed. Yet we are so afraid of being looked upon and laughed at, as provincial or a Philistine, that we have been tacitly conceding such right. It is all nonsense. Men are men, whether artists or butchers. Purity is purity, and impurity is impurity, wherever they may be found.

"There is a double standard of morality." say some. There is no double standard in the sight of God. There is one law for all. Young and old, rich and poor, male and female, come under its inflexible requirements.

There is one law, one standard, one judgment, one hell, for all.

We are waking up here. Slowly but surely we are coming in this to accept God's truth and law.

"The Social Evil and Segregated Districts are essential." That error is all out of date. The Fiexner Commission and its finding, scientific and accurate, nailed that lie, and it will never revive.

The segregated district must go. The social evil as a tolerated institution must go. And thank God, they are going.

The Fruits of Impurity.

It leaves horrible marks upon the body, mind and soul of the individual. Disease, lunacy, shame, despair, are its fruits. It is the explanation of the vast majority of shattered homes and wrecked families today.

It is aiming a blow at our social structure that rests upon the family as its foundation.

It is sapping the life of our country, sending it along the path of ruin that other nations have followed. It is indeed the darkest cloud upon our horizon today.

The Cure for Impurity.

There are many things that will help in our struggle for purity.

Better home training and discipline, a return of real old family religion, will go a long way.

A careful selection of the literature that comes into our homes will be helpful.

The cleaning of our motion pictures, both through wise censorship and through earnest protest by all Christians, against the impure, will be of great advantage.

The rigid enforcement of our laws will do much to protect the ignorant and weak.

The toning up of public sentiment so that it will demand the clean and revolt at the gross, will help.

But after all there is only one cure. The cleansing power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only cure. That can regenerate the soul, transform the life, purify the affections, cleanse the tastes, and strengthen the will against the impure. That has cured in the past. Unless that cures now, our civilization is doomed.—Presbyterian Standard.

PEACE.

Peace does not mean the end of all our striving;
Joy does not mean the drying of our tears;
Peace is the power that comes to souls arriving,
Up to the light where God Himself appears.
Joy is the wine that God is ever pouring
Into the hearts of those who strive with Him,
Lighting their eyes to vision and adoring,
Strengthening their arms to warfare, glad and grim.
Bread of Thy body give me for my fighting,
Give me to drink Thy sacred blood for wine.
While there are wrongs that need me for the righting,
While there is warfare splendid and divine.
Give me for light the sunshine of Thy sorrow,
Give me for shelter the shadow of Thy cross,
Give me to share the glory of tomorrow
And gone from my heart is the bitterness of loss.

—There is absolutely nothing that man cannot do without, except God. With Him happiness is possible everywhere and always.—Van Dyke.

Myra Crawford Mission Club			3.80

Will somebody please tell me to what charge the Myra Crawford Mission Club belongs?

Mount Pleasant on North Davidson is the first individual church on one of the circuits to report over on the A. C. B.—Good for you, Mount Pueasant! We also note with pleasure that Hickory Ridge, Forsythe, pays its college assessment in full. Two charges, Mt. Pleasant and Siler City, go over on college assessment.

Some of the charges that started out early in the year are slipping down the line these last few weeks. Can't stand still, must go up or down. If you do not row up you will drift down. A. G. Dixon.

High Point—The congregation was delighted to have Dr. S. K. Spahr, pastor of Grace church, Greensboro, occupy the pulpit Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, when he delivered a spendid discourse from the text found in Malachi 3:10: "Bring ye all the tithes in the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Dr. Spahr said that if all Christians would systematically tithe their salaries and incomes, there would always be money in the treasury of the church to support the educational institutions, missions, and all the benevolent enterprises. He said that his people of Grace church often surprise him by their accomplishments. He congratulated the First church of High Point on the work that they are doing for the Master. Mrs. Spahr accompanied her husband here and we were much pleased to meet her.

Dr. Brown and Dr. S. S. Coe went to Calvary church, Greensboro, on Sunday morning, and held a service in the interest of High Point College. A general exchange of pulpits is being made for two weeks throughout the North Carolina Conference.

The State Christian Endeavor Convention will convene in our church next Friday morning, June 18th, and the sessions will continue through Sunday. Great preparations are being made for the entertainment of this body of splendid young people. There will be many interesting addresses by well known workers.

The Ladies' Aid Society held its monthly meeting yesterday with Mrs. H. A. Garrett on College Drive, associate hostesses being Mesdames E. L. Auman, R. M. Andrews, A. A. York, Paul S. Kennett, M. F. Vuncannon and Miss Millie Bowman.

The Brotherhood, or Men's Club, will be entertained at the residence of Mr. C. C. Robbins, south of the city, on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock, and a delightful meeting is anticipated.

Mr. James Braxton Craven and Miss Mary E. Robinson were married at the parsonage last Saturdy evening, June 12th, Dr. George R. Brown being the officiting minister. The bride is the pretty and attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Robinson, of Colfax, while the groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Craven, of this city. The newly married couple are at home at 701 North Main street. The congratulations and good wishes of a host of friends are extended to this popular pair as they begin their new life together.

Mr. Fred Pritchard, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Pritchard, graduated from A. and E. College, Raleigh, last week with the B. S. degree. His father attended the commencement exercises. Fred left yesterday for Charlotte to take up work as chemist for a large aniline and chemical company. He is a bright and most promising young man, and the congratulations of many friends are extended to him upon the fine record he has made in college.

Mrs. F. E. Bean, of Chicago, nee Miss Clara Connor, is here on a visit to her brother and other relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Penny have gone on a trip to Florida.

The attractive residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr., in Emerywood is rapidly nearing completion.

Mrs. J. W. Harriss, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Welch, and her son Welch Harriss, left Friday for New York whence they will sail on Wednesday, June 16th, for a tour of Europe.

Burlington.—We have just closed a two-weeks meeting, with Rev. E. D. Stone, D. D., Baltimore, Md., evangelist, and Rev. John Permar, pastor of Friends' Church, Graham, singer. Throughout the two weeks the attendance was good, and on the two Sunday nights of the meeting the full seating capacity of the church was required to accommodate the crowds. An unusual fact about the meeting was the large attendance on the part of people from other churches. Their presence and help in the services was greatly appreciated.

The preaching of Dr. Stone was of a high order, as was the singing of Mr. Permar and his large chorus. About forty persons were at the altar during the meeting but most of them were church members. There were three additions to the church. No doubt more good than can be tabulated was accomplished by the meeting, though we had earnestly hoped for more conversions. We encountered the difficulty that seems to be general—that of getting the unsaved to attend the meeting. Dr. Stone and Brother Permar each impressed our people as being earnest and efficient workers, and our good will and prayers are with them as they labor in their respective fields. Dr. Stone was the guest of the parsonage family during his stay in Burlington. He was a most genial guest, and will be pleasantly remembered.

On last Sunday Dr. T. M. Johnson and Mr. John Nicholson were with us in the interest of the Educational Campaign. Favorable comments have been heard on their addresses. Mr. Robert Councilman, the assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church, occupied our pulpit at night. His sermon was pleasing and helpful.

Bro. W. F. Ashburn is to preach for us next Sunday morning. He has a hearty welcome to our pulpit. Bro. G. W. Holmes has been a ready supply for us at different times during the year, and we are greatly indebted to him for his efficient service.

All the departments of our organization are functioning, and the work generally is in normal condition. Our Children's Day program is being prepared, and we expect to have it ready by the first Sunday in July.

We have just returned from a pleasant stay of ten days with Bro. Curry and the Maple Springs people, where we assisted Bro. Curry in a meeting. That church is rapidly becoming a suburban church. Splendid new homes are being built all around it, and we hope to see, in the near future, the old building replaced by a new and modern church, equipped to meet the growing demands of the community. Bro. Curry and his people are already working in that direction. Success to them! S. W. Taylor.

State St. Church.—Things are moving forward splendidly at our church. Silence from this writer had not meant that there was nothing to write.

All the work is going on encouragingly. Our pastor has been absent the past two Sunday mornings, but his place was ably filled; a week ago last Sunday Mr. Barrett conducted the service in his usual interesting and helpful way. Last Sunday Bro. Compher came down from Winston and preached for us while Bro. Bethea preached for the Winston folks. Bro. Compher presented the cause of the High Point college and the importance of tithing very forcefully and convincingly. We hope he comes again, he is well known and well loved by all the State Street folks and many others in Lexington. Mr. Hauser of the Winston church came with Bro. Compher and was to have talked for us, too, but as he was not feeling well his pastor gave his address for him in addition to his own.

A week ago last Sunday Bro. Bethea in Cleveland Co. presented the folks at Cleveland and Fallston a treat in the way of a talk on his recent trip to the Holy Land—and also presented them an opportunity to contribute to the new building we are going to begin soon.

A very successful revival meeting is in progress at West Lexington M. P. Church, conducted by Bro. Troxler of Thomasville. Bro. Ivey Crutchfield, the pastor at West Lexington, is doing fine work there. His people there and many other friends in Lexington predict good success for him.

Our C. E. Society was called off last Wednesday night and will be next Wednesday night on account of the revival at West Lexington.

Mr. Harkey has returned from an extended trip to Springfield, Mass. During her absence of two Sundays her Sunday school class was taught by Bro. Way. This good friend of ours always helps us out in every time of need.

The daily vacation Bible school will open the 23rd of this month. Mrs. Curtis Koontz and Miss Maxine Taylor from Halifax Co. will help Mr. Bethea in the Bible school, which will continue for ten days.

Mr. Avent of Enfield is spending a while with the folks at the parsonage, and was a delightful visitor at all the services Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Bethea have the most splendid visitors—and many of them—perhaps because, "Like seeks like."

Many plans for raising money are being discussed and some of them tried out by the ladies of the Missionary Society. So many things are going to be needed when we get into the new church. If any one knows any "tried and true" methods write to the Herald.

—"At bottom, every man feels that he belongs on a farm—that he is just enjoying a leave of absence."

TIME TO HURRY.

The Sunday schools determine for themselves the date for holding the Children's Day Service, as has been repeatedly stated, but it is advisable now to send your order for the free supplies to me at Berwyn, Md., and thus have ample time to make all necessary preparations for having an excellent service.

To send me your order without delay will also render us a service, as the stock of the supplies is running low, and we need to have as complete information as possible so as not to order fresh supplies at considerable expense, and have no demand for them.

While the number of orders received is very gratifying, nearing the 900 mark, there are many Sunday schools that have not yet sent in an order, and we earnestly appeal to all such that they at once send me word how many Children's Day Services they need, and we will have the order filled promptly.

As is usual in shipping a large number of packages, a few mistakes have occurred, and a few packages were not delivered, but great care has been, and is being exercised, and the best efforts have been put forth to rectify mistakes, and duplicate orders.

Special cards were mailed recently to two thousand persons identified with our churches and Sunday schools appealing for their cordial support in having a service held, and in securing the largest possible offering on Children's Day, in the effort to enable the Board to meet its financial obligations.

A special communication is being mailed to the Sunday school superintendents, signed by the members of the Union Board, making a further appeal for their best efforts in behalf of the Children's Day service and the offering, and urging that the offering be increased by securing contributions from those not present at the service.

In case of stormy weather or other causes interfering with the service, it is earnestly hoped that a determined effort will be made to raise a large offering by soliciting the church members, and through the classes of the Sunday school, for the Board imperatively needs all possible funds, and if the schools will heartily help as indicated there will be cause for all to rejoice.

We are asking that one-fourth of your church's budget be raised through the Children's Day offering, as the Board is allowed that much of it, and it ought not to be a difficult matter for the schools to do that, under the supervision and encouragment of the pastors and superintendents and teachers.

We have tried to make it very plain that the Board needs, greatly needs the largest possible Children's Day offering, and it must depend upon the Sunday schools to do their very best.

Remember the two beautiful Japanese banners which are to be awarded—one for the largest amount, the other for the largest amount in proportion to the school's membership.

The schools that receive the banners will hold them for a year, as the plan is to award them each year under the same conditions.

A number of the schools have held their service, and, from reports in the church papers, the offerings have been very gratifying, and we make grateful acknowledgment to them for their interest and their substantial help.

We hopefully await further reports from the large number of schools that have ordered the supplies, and remittance that will make an offering although prevented from holding a regular service.

BE SURE TO STATE, WHEN SENDING THE OFFERING TO YOUR ANNUAL CONFERENCE TREASURER, THAT IT IS THE CHILDREN'S DAY OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, or our Board may not get the largest part of it. Fred C. Klein.

FIFTY-SIXTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE

The chronicles of Commencement Week of any college are as interesting to the participants and their dearest friends as any novel—for are not its heroes and heroines, those who have wrestled in the arena, or battled in the field, or starred in the educational romances, contestants, warriors, knights and ladies of our own flesh and blood, or our intimate friends? Their deeds of valor or of chivalry in battling against Ignorance and for Truth have been wrought amidst circumstances very familiar to us, and have a glamour that might dimish somewhat in time or distance, but are the brighter because the nearer.

So, another Annual Commencement of Western Maryland College passes into history. The old College is growing bigger and better all the time, and the Alumni of each year have no reason to fear as to the general intellectual abilities of the majority of the youth that are now stepping into the places of world activity. Extreme radicalism in spots yields to rational common sense on the whole, and there is enough moral consciousness in general—informed with growing knowledge of natural law and inspired with some Christian idealism,—to save civilization in the lump, even though the present age presents its peculiar problems and difficulties, and secularism and materialism threaten the welfare of the race.

Senior Farewell.

Commencement really includes several events of the week before, one of the most beautiful traditions (and W. M. C. is progressive enough to sift even its traditions and hold fast only to those that have proved good) is the Senior Farewell given by the Juniors the Thursday before. Here on the campus, is given an original and always beautiful Class Play, (this year a Flower Pageant written by Miss Blanche Ford), followed by a burlesque prophecy of Senior achievements,—each senior being impersonated by a Junior,—then a very sincere passing of the loving cup to each individual Senior girl who is bade farewell in turn with a verse and song. The Senior Circle completed and the farewells ended, refreshments are served to the many guests.

This year a new custom was started by the Freshmen girls. They, too, after dark, a hundred strong with Japanese lanterns, in artistic drill and song in the Athletic Field bade their farewell to the Senior girls. The college people and friends were assembled in the electrically lighted grand-stand.

Field Day.

On Thursday afternoon, also, was Field Day, in which members of the Battalion engaged in many and interesting athletic events, too numerous to mention here. In the preceding competitive drill, Company B under command of Captain G. M. Garrett, won the honors. The competition was very close.

Speech Contest.

On the evening of June 4th occurred the Freshman-Sophomore Contest in Speech for the Norment prizes. All the readings were well done and reflected great credit on the Department of Speech, presided over by Miss Nannie Lease. The Freshmen speakers were Dorris J. Hoffman, Virginia W. Holland, Eleanor A. Noble, Richard M. Norris, Ernest B. Nutall, and Edward E. Shriver. The representative of the Sophomores were Dorothy L. Gilligan, Margaret M. Mills, Ruth H. Schlinke, Wilson K. Barnes, Francis R. Meredith, and Eugene C. Woodward.

The Gir's' Glee Club, or "Powder Puffs," splendidly trained by Miss Elise Dorst, Head of the Voice Department, rendered the music for the evening.

Preparatory School Graduation.

With this year's Commencement, the Preparatory School ceases to exist. This last class numbered ten,—five girls and five boys. Dr. Ward made the Address to the class and awarded Certificates of Graduation as Principal Barney Spier called the names of the graduates. The President's Address here was a timely one and significant, pointing out the wisdom of expenditures of the state in the education of its youth, and the infinitely greater cost of ignorance, non-education. Such messages should be broad-casted throughout the land, and Maryland should give good heed, as she is making better and better response. She needs just now instruction in keeping the law.

Certificates were given to George Cross Baumgartner, Wilmer Varden Bell, Ramon Garcia Carbia, Weldon Griffith Dawson, William Burton Sanders, Mary Henrietta Barnard, Dorothea Anna Bishop, Marion Katherine Hurley, Sara Elizabeth Isaac, Katherine Eloise Ridgely.

Recital Of Music Department Graduates.

On Saturday evening the Music Department Recital was another evidence of the unusual excellence of this department that has trained Mabel Garrison and many other fine artists in instrument and voice.

Miss Bowers rendered Cadman's "Easter Dawn in Hollywood Bowl;" Miss Curling Chadwick's "Thou art so Like a Flower," and Nibbard's "My Garden;" Mr. Herbert Nichols sang Schubert's "The Linden Tree," and "Who is Sylvia:" Miss Miriam Royer played Palmgren's "May Night," and Rachmaninoff's "Polichinelle"; Miss Blanche Ford rendered Chopin's "Scherzo in B Minor;" Mr. Stonesifer sang "Aria Celeste Aida," by Verdi; and Miss Jones sang Gound's "Recitative and Aria Jewell Song from Faust"; while Miss Carolina Wantz closed the program with Liszt's "Rhapsody No 12." The Piona Department with Miss Maude Gessner at the bead, is giving wonderful technique and mastery of that instrument.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Royal Law.

Text: "If ye fulfil the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self, ye do well." James 2:8.

This is the law, or edict, of the King of kings. It sets forth the most shining trait of kingly character. It rests upon the idea of racial unity and equality. It recognizes the fact that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." A threefold brotherhood makes this law all the more imperative. There is a creative or racial brotherhood. The Fatherhood of the Creator sets forth the brotherhood of the created. All mankind embraces a brotherhood united by ties of common blood, heritage and purpose. And there is a social brotherhood, a brotherhood of contact, both near and remote. Another name for this is neighborhood. All within touch or reach are neighbors. And there is a Christian brotherhood, the Head of which is Jesus Christ, Who is the Elder Brother of all who believe on Him to the saving of the soul.

The Parable of the Good Samaritan sets forth quite forcibly how this royal law should be observed. In this parable we see the exercise of sympathy, fellowship, and helpfulness. Accordingly the royal law enjoins a threefold obligation.

We first consider

The Love of Sympathy.

"The heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind." The infinite compassion of Deity is set forth quite forcibly in the ministry of Jesus Chrst. He was constantly "moved with compassion." His pity for the fallen race moved Him to come to this world, to become manifest in the flesh, in order to relieve the suffering, to save the fallen, and to bless the needy everywhere.

The royal law enjoins upon every one to share this compassion for the unfortunate. It is the way to be like God. It is the way to love God. And it is the way to grow into the image and likeness of God.

Solomon said of the virtuous woman, "In her tongue is the law of kindness." This neighborly sympathy enjoined by the royal law finds expression not only by words of tender compassion, but also by going on missions of mercy, by deeds of relief and uplift, and by gifts of charity.

This love of sympathy is the impelling motive of all genuinely good works. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind." Godlike sympathy is that which gives character to beneficence. Without it any one's professions and deeds of goodness are like "a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

Sympathy alone will not fulfil the royal law. There must also be the exercise of

The Love of Fellowship.

God "hath set the solitary in families," communities, tribes, nations, and brotherhoods. "It is not good for man to live alone." God has planned that the race shall live in sympathetic touch with each other. This touch of mutual interest imparts relief of the common burdens of life, ministers much social satisfaction, and makes everyone stronger to face the battles of life. In union there strength to endure and overcome.

The love of fellowship makes much use of language. Love cannot keep silent. It will make itself known. Where the word-language is not available, it will speak in sign-language or by correspondence. Nothing is more vocal than love. Like the sun love shines in all lands and among all races.

The love of fellowship leaps many a social barrier. It makes the king stoop to the level of his subject. It makes the subject ascend to the level of the king. It makes the rich and the poor to mingle together in a sweet brotherhood. "The rich and the poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all."

The fellowship of the saints is a necessary and inevitable outgrowth of that "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." The fellowship of the favored of God with the needy is akin to the fellowship of Him who came "to seek and to save that which was lost." To be like Christ is the supreme ambition within the reach of mortals. Association of the good with the needy and fallen is a mighty means of uplift. It is the lever of moral and social elevation.

Lastly the royal law enjoins the exercise of The Love Of Helpfulness.

The good Samaritan was a good sympathizer, a good mixer, and also a good uplifter. He relieved the half-dead man. He gave time, attention and money to secure his restoration to health and strength. He nursed him back to life.

Helpfulness is the crowning exercise of love. Without it the love of sympathy and fellowship amounts to little. Hear the admonition of the apostle James: "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit?"

Helpfulness is likewise the crowning trait of our holy religion. Our Lord and Master went about doing good. And He has commanded us to follow in His steps of lowly and uplifting service. "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

Not to extend the helping hand is a sin of omission that is heinous in the sight of God. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Let us be diligently obedient to the royal law, which is also the second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self."

Plan For Educational Campaign.

The meeting, held in Grace Church in the interest of the High Point College on May 11, directed a committee to put on an educational program, at an early date, and so conduct it as to reach every church in the Conference. Accordingly we have mapped out plans for such a campaign, and we are publishing complete plan herewith. And we are asking everyone who is thus appointed to fall in with the plan and help us to put it over. The failure of any one to respond will break the plan, and thus frustrate the purpose. We trust all will respond. But if because of sickness or distress you cannot fill the place you are asked to take then please secure some one to go in your place, and notify the chairman of the committee.

We are asking that, on the three Sunday designated, congregations will release their pastors for this important service. This is the most important work before us just now, so all of us must respond. Where we have been unable to fill all pulpits pastors will please arrange this as best they can.

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER DARBY'S MAGIC APPLES.

Great-Grandmother Darby, with a big red apple in her hand, sat on the steps one bright October morning, waiting for Barbara—poor little Barbara who just couldn't seem to make friends. The door opened, and the little girl came out, looking very, very unhappy. Giving grandmother a despairing glance, she quite suddenly threw down her books and stormily announced:

"I'm not going to school today or—or ever again. I hate it, and the boys and girls and everything." Two tears popped out of Barbara's eyes and rolled angrily down her cheeks. "You know, grandmother, if I do go I'll have to ask teacher to change my seat again. And I had it changed only last week But Billy is worse sitting behind me than Tom was, and I can't stand it. Monday he tied my braids to the back of the seat, and when I got up to recite they nearly jerked my head off. And yesterday he dropped a grasshopper down my back. And oh, grandmother, it hopped just awful!"

At the remembrance such a look of horror spread over Barbara's face that grandmother Darby couldn't keep from smiling. "Never mind, little girl," she said cheerfully. "I have something here that will end all your troubles." Holding out the bright red apple she continued: "Here it is. Run along to school now, or you'll be late."

"But, grandmother, just an apple couldn't end my troubles."

"It isn't just an apple; it's a magic apple," declared grandmother. "Give it to Billy."

"To Billy!"

"Yes, to Billy. You won't need to have your seat changed if you give him the apple Remember it's a magic apple."

Barbara's eyes opened wide. "It won't hurt him or kill him or anything?" she questioned in an awed voice.

"Of course not, child," laughed grandmother. "Just tell him it's a magic apple, and that it can't be peeled without falling all to pieces. Now run along; and be sure to do what I say."

Picking up her books, Barbara started down the street, with the mysterious apple held tight in one hand. As she hurried along she kept looking curiously at it. How could it be a magic apple when it looked so exactly like other apples?

When she reached the school room Billy was already in his seat. She must lose no time in enchanting Billy. "Here," she whispered, "is an apple. If you don't tease me, I'll give it to you at recess. It's a magic apple; you can't peel it without it's going all to pieces."

"What!" cried Billy, so loud that all the children turned to look.

"Wait till recess, and I'll show you," whispered Barbara, just as Miss Blake tapped the bell for school to start.

And Billy was good until recess, though once he nearly forgot, and started to dip the end of one of Barbara's long fair braids in his ink-well. It would have made a dandy brush, too.

But Billy [illegible] Barbara gave it to him out in the [illegible] and "Peeled it coyly and [illegible]

"Hey, kids, come here!" he called. "See this apple. It looks just like an ordinary apple, but it ain't. No siree, it ain't. It's a magic apple; that's what. Why do I know? 'Cause Barby-Two Braids told me so. She says I can't peel this apple without it falling to pieces. Now watch me."

Then, with dozens of eyes watching eagerly, Billy began to peel the apple. Round and round he went until the skin came off in one long curly spiral, but the apple inside split immediately into quarters, then into eighths—eight clean-cut pieces. "Oh," gasped Bill "it was enchanted, after all." Turning calmly to Barbara, "where did you get it!" he cried.

"Yes, where did you get it?" "Can you get any more?" "I'll give you a dime for one." "Pooh, I'll give you a quarter." Barbara was surroundel by a group of excited children all talking at once.

And from that day Barbara began to be popular in room 4.

"Oh, Barbara, can't you come over to our house and bring one of the magic apples? Mother says there couldn't be any such thing." This was only one of the many invitations that were showered upon her. Grandmother always cheerfully furnished the apples, and Barbara always had a good time The sensation the magic apples created died every visit a huge success, and Barbara was making friends at last.

But where did the mysterious apples come from? Great-grandmother Darby refused to tell. "Wait," she said "until Hallowe'en then you'll find out." And one day great was the excitement in room 4 when Barbara handed out invitation to a Hallowe'en party. And no wonder, for this is how they read:

"Please come to my party
And there you will see
How apples are cut up
So magically."

At 8 o'clock on Hallowe'en every one of the twenty-three children in room 4 was at Barbara's house. And Barbara's house was pitch dark all over except for a weird red glow that came from the big fireplace in the living room. And in front of this light was a dark figure in tall pointed hat and long cape muttering strange, sounding words over a big black kettle she was stirring.

"Abracadabra dingledat, abracadabra dingledybat."

Over and over she kept repeating the words. Above the steaming kettle hung a big apple. All the members of room 4 kept their fascinated eyes on this, as they sat in a semi-circle about the fireplace. Though the witchlike figure had said never a word to them about it each and every child felt sure that the charm was working. Inside the skin of the apple a mysterious something was at work even now cutting it to pieces. It was wonderful—almost unbelievable, in fact.

And now the charm seemed finished. The [illegible] her muttering and reached for the apple "[illegible] sticky mess, and [illegible] be complete," she said. "Watch [illegible] needle and [illegible] a big knot in the [illegible] inches from the end. Then she said:

"First of all, stick the point of the needle into the [illegible] apple as near the [illegible] Then take a stitch through the apple to a spot on the skin about an inch down the side of the apple. Draw the thread [illegible] until the knot rests against the apple. Next stick your needle into the same hole you brought it out of and take another stitch a little distance farther down the apple.

"Keep [illegible] all the way around the apple, making your last stitch end as close as possible to where the first stitch started, and where the knot with the three inches of thread sticks out of the apple. Now we have the thread lovely around the apple under the skin—none of the stitches showing on the outside.

"Take the apple firmly in one hand, then grasp close to the skin, the two threads at the top of the apple and pull hard. As the thread cuts through the apple, it begins to cut through it, and finally, as it is pulled entirely out of the apple it cuts it into halves—right through the core and all. So the first cut is made. In the same way you make as many more cuts as you like.

"Now," cried the witch, "you can all try it. Over there now, behind you, there is a large basket of apples and a cushion full of needles. Pick out nice big apples and start in."

Within a second room 4 scrambled for the apples in the dark corner and while it was [illegible] the witch hammered. The [illegible] from the room. Yes, [illegible] Merrily she flew up the chimney.

"I shall never tell us what was in the kettle, either," exclaimed Barbara. "Or how to [illegible] say the magic words," cried one of the others.

"But I guess I can [illegible] apple." declared [illegible] And there's all the charm you need. Turn on the lights, Barbara, and [illegible]

[illegible] Then [illegible] great-grandmother [illegible] delicious spicy cookies with thick orange frosting and a face marked on each with chocolate. These they ate with cocoa dipped from the witch's kettle. Yes, that's all there was in it—just cocoa with lots of marshmallow floating on top.

After the feast they ducked for apples in a big tub and ghost stories in the dark, and "everything had a hand of the lovely time." At last of all when they went home each child [illegible] carried a [illegible] that he had "[illegible]" all by himself.—Edith Mitchell, in The Continent.

—Where will you be this time next year?

YOU HAVE BEEN A GOOD BOY TO ME JIM.

"Children, I have a story to tell you," the old doctor said to the young people the other evening.

"Let us hear it," was the response, and the doctor gave his story as follows:

"One day—a long, hot day it had been I met my father on the way to the near-by town."

" 'I wish you would take this package to the village for me' he said, hesitating.

"Now I was a boy of twelve, not fond of work and was just out of the hayfield where I had been at work since daylight. I was tired, hungry and dusty. It was two miles into town. I wanted to get my supper, and to wash and dress for singing school.

"My first impulse was to refuse, and to do so harshly, for I was vexed that I should be asked to go such an errand after my long day's work. I thought he would go himself, should I refuse. He was a patient, gentle old man. Something kept me from saying no—one of God's good angels, I think.

" 'Of course, father, I'll take it,' I said heartily as I gave my scythe to one of the men. Father gave me the package.

" 'Thank you Jim,' he said, 'I was going myself, but from some cause I don't feel well today!'

"He walked with me to the road that turned off to the town. As he left he put his hand on my arm and said, 'Thank you my son. You have always been a good boy to me, Jim.'

"I hurried into the town, delivered the package and hurried back home. When I came near the house I saw a crowd of farm hands at the door. One of them, the tears rolling down his face, came to me.

" 'Your father fell dead just as he reached the house after he left you. The last words he spoke were to you.'

"I'm an old man now; but I have thanked God all my life that those last words were: "You've always been a good boy to me.' "—Exchange.

FAITH FOR A SIXPENCE.

I was walking along the streets of London one cold, wet night with a despondent friend trying to cheer him, and longing to see a spark of hope kindled in his heart. In our walk, we arrived at Victoria Station. While talking together, a little child stopped forward and said: "Any lights, sir?"

"No, Topsy," I replied. "I don't smoke."

"O, but please sir, do buy a box!" she persisted, in a pleading tone.

"No, no; run away, Topsy," I continued "I have no use for lights."

But still she persisted. At last, seeing her earnestness, I asked her what she did all day and at what time she was going home, for it was then past ten o'clock.

"Oh," she replied, "I go to school in the day, and after four o'clock I come out here."

"But why don't your father and mother take care of you?" I asked.

"Father has run away, and mother is ill in bed. I come and stay here till I have taken sixpence."

"But you don't always take sixpence, do you?"

"Yes, I do, sir."

"But you won't get sixpence tonight."

"Yes, I shall, sir.

"Well, how much have you now?"

She seemed inclined not to let me know; but I said: "Come, Topsy, you must tell me all about it." So, half afraid, she drew some coppers from a pocket in her cotton dress, and counted out three.

"Well, now, you will never get sixpence tonight." I said.

"Yes; I always take home sixpence."

"Now, Topsy; tell me what makes you so sure of getting sixpence?"

For some time she would not answer, but after a little pressing she said: "Because before I come out I kneel down by my mother's bed and say the Lord's Prayer; and mother says our Father will help me to get sixpence; and he always does."

"Oh, but I thought you said your father had run away?"

"Don't you know, sir, she simply asked, "that we have a Father in Heaven?"

"Yes; but you don't mean to say that he hears you about a sixpence?"

"Yes, he does, sir; and he will send me sixpence."

"Well, if I were to give you twopence halfpenny, what would you do?"

"Why, sir, I should run home to mother, 'cause my Father had given me all I asked for."

It is needless to say that the twopence halfpenny was speedly produced, and suitably acknowledged by the little one, who merrily tripped home.

And then I turned to my friend, who was all this time had stood by without saying a word. Our glances met, and my only remark was: "There, H., you have got a lesson." We forthwith separated—I to my bachelor chambers; he be led into hope by a little child.—The Christian.

FIGHTING PHIL.

When Phil Flanders climbed the hill to the new school which he was to attend, he stopped at the top of it and looked far away over the town with the fields and hills beyond. It was very beautiful in the warm sunlight, and the lad, lonely for the companions he had left behind when his people moved to Elmhurst, was comforted a bit.

The Elm Hill School itself was a fine new building which stood proudly on the crest of this commanding situation, and the new boy looked at it admiringly.

He soon learned, however, that the boys on the playground were inclined to try him out to see what sort of stuff he was made of, and there were times when Phil wished that he could talk as loudly as the rest, and manage to say a lot about nothing in partticular.

There were some of the boys of his own age who seemed to think it a sign of bravery to pick a fuss with each ther. But Phil couldn't see any sense in starting an argument, hopping about like a pair of excited roosters, and ending with a clinch and perhaps a few bruises and hurt feelings.

So just because he wouldn't fight on the slightest provocation, someone dubbed him a coward—and that hurt, but perhaps not quite as much as the derisive name which Freddie Flynn gave him—the name of "Fighting Phil." And then Jack Blake made a jingle which the other boys loved to take up and to chant mockingly:

"Fighting Phil! Fighting Phil!
He never fought, and he never will."

Phil would just laugh, but way down deep in his heart, he wished they would forget the silly rhyme, for Phil couldn't agree with the crowd that being ready to quarrel was any sign of courage.

It was a rule at the Elm Hill School that when any pupil received permission to go to the basement, he must write his name on the board and the exact time of his leaving; also the minute of his return. Then when the teacher approved the report, she erased it.

Miss Wiggins soon learned that she could trust Phil, and so when he asked to leave the room one morning several weeks after he entered the school, he was allowed to do so at once.

As he went down the big hall, he noticed workmen in the principal's office and heard Professor Quinby say:

"As long as we are moving the telephone, I think we will have one of those adjustable extension brackets."

"All right," replied the workman, "but I'll have to go back to headquarters for it, and for another instrument. This one is defective, and possibly—"

"That's all Phil heard as he passed on his way. He met the janitor going out of the building, and Phil greeted him courteously as was his habit.

Reaching the basement, a sudden wave of unexpected heat and the odor of something scorching—yes, burning assailed his nostrils. He rushed forward opening the door into a large inner room. Flames met him. The big bin where the waste paper from the different rooms was kept, was all ablaze!

Phil wondered if he couldn't put that fire out—seconds counted! He seized a pail, filled it with water, and dashed it upon the burning mass, but it only served to scatter the light pieces of paper which were on fire, and one of them blew directly against the janitor's sweater hanging on a wooden beam. The sweater was ablaze in an instant. Phil tore it down, although his hands were burned in doing it.

He pulled frantically at a big barrel of Dust Down to drag it away from the scorching heat. The material was heavily oiled, and Phil saw that it would be in flames in a moment and the fire beyond control. This time he did not notice that his hands were burned and bleeding. The barrel tipped and rolled out of the way.

Then the lad turned and ran for all he was worth up the steps, going straight out of the open door. Could it be possible that he was running away and leaving hundreds to their fate, unwarned?

Just in front of the school was a wee boy playing with his scooter.

"Let me take your scooter," begged Phil "Here's a nickel. I'll bring the scooter back in just a few minutes."

He did not wait for any answer. Thrusting the coin into the little chap's hands, Phil was off, and on the hill he had only to start the scooter and it went like the wind. At the foot of Elm Street he turned swiftly to the right Half way down the street was a public garage and Phil was there almost as soon as it takes to tell it.

"Telephone," he gasped, "Schoolhouse on fire—quick!"

At that instant, Phil's eyes located the telephone for himself, and seizing it he called in to the mouth-piece.

"I want to report a fire. Elm Hill School—basement all ablaze—hurry—fast!"

Almost before Phil was out of the garage he heard the engines go clanging past, and then he suddenly realized that he was weak and trembling. He went much more slowly up the hill than he had gone down.

When he reaced the school, the children were filing out in orderly response to fire drill signals, and soon the fire laddies had the blaze under control.

Next morning in the big auditorium, Professor Quinby called Phillip Flanders to the rostrum beside him.

"I want to tell all of you," said the principal, "what a hero Phil Flanders proved himself yesterday. His is the courage which counts. First, he took into consideration that our telephone was temporarily out of order Next, that seconds counted in getting the fire department here. He didn't raise an outcry and cause a panic, but he went after help and got it.

" 'Fighting Phil,' " he smiled, turning to the young fellow, "I congratulate you. The burns on your hands are tokens of your bravery. And thanks to you, the Elm Hill School stands proud and sturdy, and not a soul but yourself was injured in the least. Three cheers boys and girls, for 'Fighting Phil Flanders.'"

And such a cheer went up from the school auditorium benches, that the rafters rang, and the janitor in the basement hearing it, muttered to himself:

"They're cheering Phil Flanders—a fine laddie that! He uses his head more than his tongue!"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JUNE 27.

Review.

Golden Text: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God even to them that are called according to his purpose." Rom. 8:28.

Lesson 1. teaches that Thomas was the most skeptical of the eleven apostles, that he would not accept the testimony of others regarding the resurrection of Jesus, that, upon Jesus Himself appealing to him to examine His five wounds, he exclaimed "My Lord and my God," that Peter was asked three times "Lovest thou me?" and that the best way to love God is to bestow the service of love upon our fellow-mankind.

Lesson 2. teaches that God created the heavens and the earth by the word of His power in six days of twenty four hours each, that He created, in order, the matter of the universe, light, air, vegetable life, the planetary system, living creatures of the water, living creatures on land, and man, and that He created man in His own image and likeness to have dominion of the entire creation, and to glorify Him in holiness and service.

Lesson 3. teaches that the serpent was the first mouth-piece of the devil, that Adam and Eve were the first sinners, that in committing this first sin, instead of rising to heights of wisdom, (as they supposed they would), they sank to awful depths of shame and ignominy that they transmitted to their posterity the depravity of corruption and moral inability and that their sin brought a curse upon the entire creation.

Lesson 4. teaches that the first family were worshippers of the true and living God, that Abel offered a sacrifice in atonement for his sins by faith in the Sacrifice for sin yet to come, that God accepted Abel's sacrifice and regenerated his soul, that Cain, Pharisee-like thought he was good enough and offered no sacrifice for sin, that his offering of fruits was not accepted because of unrepented sin that he killed his brother in a frenzy of jealousy, and that he was banished from the presence of God and the home land.

Lesson 5. teaches that the race became so sinful that God sent a flood to destroy it, that Noah and his immediate family were saved in the ark, that God made an age long covenant with Noah, in which He promised never to send another flood, to perpetuate the race to the end of time, and to perpetuate the seasons and fruitful harvests, and that the rainbow would be the token or pledge of God's faithfulness in discharging the obligations of the covenant.

Lesson 6. teaches that Lot and his family were taken captive along with the rest of the inhabitants of Sodom, that Abram, with his trained servants and his confederate Hittite neighbors, pursued the conquering army routed the enemy by a night attack, and recovered all, that he refused to take even a shoe-string of the recovered property, that Melchizedec conferred a great blessing upon Abram for his faith and faithfulness, and that Abram gave tithes to this highpriest of the Most High God.

Lesson 7. teaches that Abraham entertained three messengers from heaven under the oaks of Mamre, and made them a feast, that the spokesman of these visitors was Jehovah Himself, who informed Abraham of the impending destruction of Sodom, for which he made earnest intercession for his nephew's sake, and that in deference to Abraham's anxiety Lot and his family were led out of Sodom by two angels.

Lesson 8. teaches that Isaac's prosperity was mainly due to his meekness, "for blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," that, unlike his father Abraham, he did not contend for his rights in the matter of wells, that, like Jesus, he pursued the policy of non-resistance, and that when the herdsmen of Gerar contended for the wells that he had dug, he would quietly give them up, pass on, and dig another well.

Lesson 9. teaches that Jacob, to escape his brother's wrathful threat, undertook a journey to Padanaram to visit his uncle Laban, that the first night out he had a dream of a wonderful ladder stretching from heaven to earth, up and down which, the angels passed, and above which God stood, spoke, and renewed the covenant made to Abraham, that this ladder represented the Atonement of Jesus Christ that united man to God, and that in gratitude to God's mercies he vowed a vow of faith in and faithfulness to Almighty God.

Lesson 10. teaches that Jacob feared to meet Esau from whom he had taken the birthright and blessing twenty years before, that he prayed with agonizing wrestlings to be delivered from his brother and from his own sins, that he received a great blessing from God and that by a large gift and much politeness he conciliated his brother so that when they met they embraced and kissed each other. The enemies became lovers in answer to prayer.

Lesson 11. teaches that Joseph had dreams of greatness, that these dreams greatly angered his brothers who sold him into Egypt, that God was with Joseph as the chief of Potiphar's servants and gave him large prosperity on Joseph's account, that Potiphar's wife severely tempted Joseph and shamefully slandered him, that Joseph was put in prison, where he remained many years, and that eventually he was taken out and made governor over all the land of Egypt.

Lesson 12. teaches that the second time Joseph's brothers came to buy grain he had his steward so put his silver cup in Benjamin's sack, for the purpose of delaying them and prolonging their visit that the apparent theft of the cup was likely to make Benjamin a bond-slave to Joseph, and that Judah, who became a surety for Benjamin's safe return, made a strong plea for Benjamin's release. He told Joseph that his father would likely die of grief if his youngest brother did not go back with them, that he could not afford to go home without Benjamin; and he proposed to be a bond-slave to Joseph in his brother's stead.

—A leopard was shot in India recently that, in the past seven years, had killed more than 100 human beings. The animal roamed over a large area and generally would go into houses for its victims. People barricaded their homes in fear of attack by the prowler. The government sent out many expeditions to capture or kill the leopard but it always managed to escape. Finally a British captain, after a hunt of more than ten weeks, succeeded where the others had failed. He shot the leopard as it was about to spring. The animal was very old and was nearly eight feet long.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Hickory Grove, Guilford Circuit.—Yo! jack frost has not [illegible] Sunday s'ool even'n' was rather cold and we have n't made report since.

The attendance has been very good and in spite [illegible] have been present. The teachers and pupils [illegible] get more interested in the work and then we may rest assured that the Sunday school will grow.

The fourth Sunday in May our pastor filled his regular appointment at 11 o'clock; subject: "I lift up."

He carried us [illegible] to a stop and told how we would [illegible] and on account of faith we would drift backward instead of going forward, it was fine.

The first Sunday in June we held our Children's Day. We had quite an enjoyable time hearing the children speak and sing; they all did well.

In the afternoon Rev. Paul Bennett from the High Point Circuit gave us a splendid address on W. M. S. Missions. Bro. Ivey, our pastor, also gave us some interesting remarks on same [illegible] enjoyed very much.

After the children had their treat by the pastor, the [illegible] were [illegible] to their homes, which accounted for the [illegible] crowd, but could have been worse.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Reporter.

First M. P. Church, Thomasville.—On Tuesday night, May 27, we had a social which proved to be a great success. We were to have a ten days or two weeks meeting, but as there were so many things going on we decided not to have them at that time, so the meeting will begin on the 4th Sunday night. [illegible] Tuesday night we had a social and all enjoyed it. [illegible] It has been said this was the best party in the history of the church. We felt the power of God was with us and the entire prayer meeting was revived and felt more to God than ever before. [illegible] Rev. Dr. [illegible] always just know what suits the boys to a [illegible] we [illegible] what we expected all the way through.

[illegible] Sunday night, June 10, we are going to have a supper. Come and eat with them.

With best wishes to the Herald and Conference.

A Member.

Pleasant Grove.—Our pastor, Rev. G. L. Reynolds, brought us another one of his good sermons Sunday morning, using as a subject, "What We Have in Christ." The Thomasville Evangelistic Club had charge of the service at night. We were very glad indeed to have these good people with us. They made us some splendid talks on the great responsibility that rests on the Church and Christian people, and the necessity of more active Christian workers.

Tuesday evening June 1st, at 8:00 o'clock, Mr. Wilson Myers and Miss Alta Mae Morris were united in marriage in the church by the pastor. Mrs. Myers is a member of the Pleasant Grove Methodist Protestant church. We wish them much happiness as they journey through life together.

Next Sunday at 11:00 o'clock is the time we are to have our Children's Day exercise.

Mrs. Ralph Kennedy, Reporter.

Trinity.—When we arrived at church last Sunday and found such a large number of cars parked on either side of the street, we hardly knew whether we were at the right church or not; but upon entering we were delighted to find the Midway Sunday school here to worship with us. It seemed so good to have so many people at Sunday school that it makes us long for the day when our own number will be that great.

We were also very glad indeed to have with us at this time our former pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, who brought a splendid message to the large audience that had gathered to hear him.

We want to extend a hearty invitation to the Midway people and Mr. Fogleman to visit us [illegible] never possible, for it is always a great pleasure to have them with us.

The Senior and Intermediate C. E. Societies had charge of the evening service in the absence of the pastor, who is helping in the revival meeting in Concord.

The W. F. M. and W. H. M. Societies met with Mrs. C. J. Roberts and Mrs. J. D. Williams last Monday afternoon.

A number of our people are planning to attend the State C. E. convention in High Point.

We are planning to have our Children's Day program the last of this month.

Lola McCollum.

Porter Church, Stanly County.—On May 29, we held our second quarterly conference at Porter, with a large majority of the members present. We also held the communion service on this day.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. Our teachers always have something to tell us worth listening to, and our pupils study the lesson as you may see all this together makes it interesting and instructive.

We are planning to hold our revival meeting beginning the first Sunday in August and continuing through the following week. We are praying and trusting that God will bless our efforts and labors with souls saved and added to his church.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Jason F. Whitley, Pastor.

Pine Bluff, Midland Charge.—We have not been withholding our reports because we had not had any thing to report, but because we enjoyed seeing others use the space in our paper. We are back again to say God has blessed us and everything is moving on.

On last Sunday our Sunday school gave the children's day exercise. The day was an entire success throughout. The morning was given to the small children and the afternoon was used by the Honorable H. W. William of Concord, who spoke on the "Race of Life." This was an inspiring address from beginning to end.

Rev. J. W. Hulin has been doing some fine preaching since he has been with us. Every one on the charge seems to like him immensely, and greatly enjoy his presence in the homes.

May God bless our church and the efforts put forth for the advancement of His Kingdom is our wish.

Fountain Place Church, Burlington.—A few month has now passed since we assumed the full-time pastorate here. We have never fully gotten over the first night residence here. Before we had finished our supper we had callers, is right, and haulers as well. for all the night visitors had their saddle bags well filled. Filled with good things, beginning with a rolling-pin, they also provided something to roll besides an arrogant parson. I can not here name either the gifts nor the givers, for the lack of space, but it proved to be the "stitch in time," so we had both a hearty breakfast and much besides. These folks constitute a fine fountain for the physical as well as the spiritual man. And so—

Our Sunday school is going forward in fine fashion. It is well organized, and is very efficient in its work. We have had new pupils every Sunday since the first of May. We are going now well over the hundred mark in enrollment and run above 90 percent in attendance. Our goal for July 11th is a hundred and twenty-five. On this date the school will be two years old.

Three small but active Christian Endeavor Societies are going forward with the work among the young people. A Monthly Social and get-to-gether has been established and on Friday night, May 28, a most delightful time was had by the younger generation. About forty were in attendance.

Last Sunday night we held our Children's Day exercises, which proved to be the most interesting and inspiring service of this kind held in this church. The largest congregation in the history of the church was present, taxing every available seat. The offering was $24.31 for Foreign Missions.

New seats have been bought and will this week be installed. One of the city schools graciously favored us with the use of their seats all these months since the opening of our building last fall. The new seats are Opera Chairs, being the noiseless, ball-bearing type. The cost is about $800.00.

Friday night of this week the Christian En-vor Societies of the Third District will et with this church for the organization of Denominational District Union of Christian deavorers.

Beginning June 13th, 9 A. M., a Daily Vaion Bible School will be held for three eks. The following ladies compose a part of teaching staff. Miss Junita Amick, Miss dah Amick, Miss Margaret Thomas, Miss ances Pritchett, and Mrs. G. H. Hendry. e indications are that we will have a most eresting and profitable school.

The Philathea Class of young women is pre- ring an elaborate pageant which they plan present in the near future.

The men of the church have been quite busy ening and nights making much needed uipment for the primary department of the nday school, such as sand tables, class ta- s etc. Besides this, on a recent night they lt a number of fine tables for use in the ial department. Also put up some street ns, and a bulletin board, and besides this y have painted the kitchen cabinet, and ne tables. This is only a part of what they ve really done, much if it eludes me just w, the fact is, they are making something ery week.

July 4th to the 11th, is Anniversary Week. which time the church will pass its second estone. A special program is being arrang- Several of our ministers will be asked to each each in turn one night during the ek. More about it later.

Cordially, G. H. Hendry.

Shiloh Notes.

Mrs. John B. Leonard is now improving m a serious operation at the Davidson Hos- al on Monday, May 31. The church has t up a united petition for her early return the vineyard of service, for she is one of r most beloved workers. She had just taken arge, as teacher, of a fine class of young men.

Mrs. Baxter H. Leonard was carried to the ne hospital June 8th for an operation for pendicitis. She is reported to be getting ng splendidly. We hope she will soon be le to come back, for she is one of our most ithful ones.

The enrollment of our Sunday school has ached 237. Our average attendance for the st several weeks has been around 200.

We hope to keep growing until we reach r goal of 300.

Bro. Troxler preached an inspiring sermon "The Difficulties of Life." His next ser- n will be on a different phase of the same bject. Our church has been pretty well filled preaching Sundays. Our pastor increases popularity and usefulness.

It's an inspiration to be in a Christian En avor and see our young people taking such active part in this great work. They are ally doing things. What a host of trained rkers the church will have to carry on the rk of the Master when the present leaders ve passed on!

Mr. Baxter Lanning of near Tyro visited r Sunday school Sunday. He and his fam- have visited our church several times this year, and we are always glad to have them. We want strangers to feel welcome when within our gates.

Howell.

Sarah Frances Howell, born February 18, 1843, died May 29, 1926.

She professed faith in Christ in early life and joined the Baptist Church at Fayetteville and later moved her membership to Central Falls where she remained a consistent member. She lived a quiet Christian life that shone in her home. But the last few years of her life her health would not permit her to attend church regularly but she always read her Bible and loved to talk about Jesus and heavenly things. She had been confined to her bed for nearly six weeks, and a week before the end came she had a stroke of paralysis. She suffered intense pain but bore her afflictions with sweet patience. Her neighbors, friends and children did all that could be done to comfort her but God saw best to take her from our midst. She left the sweet testimony that she was going to rest. During her illness she often talked of seeing Jesus and often asked for old hymns she loved to hear to be sung. She was married to J. [illegible] Howell and to this union were born three sons and eight daughters. Four of the children preceded her to the grave many years ago. The surviving are her husband, Mr. J. H. Howell, Randleman, Rev. J. A. Howell, Helton. Five daughters, Mrs. G. W. Hendrix, Asheboro. Mrs. I. W. Phillips, Asheboro. Mrs. Joel B. Trogdon, Stokesdale, Mrs. Bell Balla, Randleman and Mrs. J. K. McNeil, Charlotte. She also leaves 25 grandchildren, 20 great grandchildren and one great great grandchild. Six of the grandsons were pall bearers and several of the grandchildren carried the flowers. The beautiful floral offering showed the high esteem in which Mrs. Howell was held. We will ever cherish her dear memory and would tend our sincere love and sympathy to the bereaved family through the loss of their dear mother. The funeral services were conducted at Giles Chapel by Rev. B. C. Morris of Asheboro and Rev. W. H. Neese of Randleman after which interment was made in the church cemetery in the presence of the grief stricken relatives and friends where she awaits the resurrection morn.

She's sleeping, sweetly sleeping
In a new made grave today;
We are weeping, sadly weeping
For our mother has gone away.
Mother, we miss thee, yes, we miss thee.
You know not our sorrow,
But how sweet it will be;
When we meet thee on the morrow.

CHRISTOPHER: BELIEVER.

A Thanksgiving Story with a Mountain Setting.

"Mam, I been aimin' ter tell ye. Teacher don't aim ter hev no school the day arter termorrow, fer because hit'll be Thanksgivin'."

"Thanksgivin', eh?" Hepzibah Ingram emitted a raucous laugh, unpleasant to the ear of Christopher, who squatted on the ground near her and gathered chips.

"Hit's a happy time, Mam," he argued, busily filling his basket. "Hit's the day ter be thankful."

Hepzibah spat neatly across the ax, which lay idle beside the pile of wood she had just cut. "Thankful fer whut?" she jeered. "Fer the cornerap that dried up on the hillside, while the hawgs half-starved and went ter nothing? Fer half-a-crap uv beans twined twined around them daid cornstalks? Fer the rise thet come then onexpected an' washed yor pap's logs down the river loose ter God-knows-where? Thankful fer all them things huh? Thankful fer a chanct ter starve all winter?"

She spat again savagely and gazed upon the boy with burning eyes.

"But, Mammy," Christopher rested his hands on the rim of his basket and spoke earnestly, "We got a passel uv beans an' plenty uv honey an' the 'tater crap ain't bad an' Pap will bring back a sight uv flour when he takes his calves ter Baneville termorrow."

"Bring back?" She turned upon him savagely. "Bring back? Don't yer know whut he'll bring back? A thin, flat pocket"—she slapped her hip—"and a belly of rum." She concluded with a smart tap upon her own abdomen. "Thet's whut he'll bring back, jes' whut he's brung ever' year uv the fifteen since I married him."

"Maybe he wo'nt this time, Mam. He 'lowed he'd fetch my new book an' some 'brought-on' goods fer ye a dress, an' like ez not he'll surprise ye this time, Mam." The boy's tones were full of comfort.

"Like ez not he won't be back fer a week," she closed the topic. Christopher took his basket into the house and set it behind the small step-stove. As he laid the fire, he pondered.

Only a few days ago the teacher had stood with her arm about his shoulders and tried to tell him of the power of prayer. He had listened shyly, grasping only half of what she said and then had slipped away without vouchsafing her an answer. But now her words came back to him. Suppose he should try prayer for this thing he wanted so sincerely. Christopher's heart pounded against his side. Hearing the dull crack of Hepzibah's ax, he mounted the ladder that led to his bed in the loft, a pile of quilts spread upon the boards. Here he knelt.

"Dear God," he began in a whisper. "Ye ain't had much acquaintance with me afore less'n maybe Ye hyeard the teacher mention me, but ef Ye'll do hit this time fer me, You an' me may get ter be real sociable. Ef Ye'll only go along with Pap—he'll be startin' afore sunup in the mornin' ridin' uv the grey mare, an' drivin' his calves—an' ef Ye'll only stay with him and holp him not ter return his han' ter his pocket arter he hez put his calf-money in thar, 'sep'n ter pay fer my speller an' Mam a 'brought-on' dress—pore Mam, God—he hez wore lin'sey uv her own makin' all these years an' her allers awantin' a piece uv 'brought-on.' Ef Ye'll jes' only keep Pap sober this onct an' watch him ever' step uv the way home so's caint none uv 'em give him a swig uv their liquor—I'll do any-thing, honest ter God! An' us all will hev a real Thanksgivin.' Ef Ye please—Amen."

Hepzibah hurried back to her chopping, a mist between her eyes and the logs, for she had gone to the door of the cabin and had heard part of his prayer.

"God bless hit's little heart," she murmured. "Hit desarves better, hit shore does."

"Christy," she called in stern tones, "Ye better be drivin' ol' Pied in. The Big Ball is fast drappin' behind the hill yander."

"All right, Mam. She is goin' down pretty red ternight, haint she?"

"She shore is, too."

The boy crossed the branch in front of the cabin and went whistling up the path, his bare feet making no sound. Soon he began to hear the tinkle of Pied's bell and he knew she must be nearby on top of Cedar Point, so he hastened his steps. The sun had dropped out of sight, when he came upon her standing beneath a scrubby cedar, chewing her cud and occasionally switching her tail.

The boy patted her jaw affectionately and spoke into her ear. "Wait fer me a minute, Piedy, tel I kin go ter the P'int an' see the sittin' uv the sun onct more. Hit'll take me on'y a leetle spell."

Reaching the Point, he found the great, red orb still clinging to the western skies and he gazed as at the face of a departing friend. So Christopher beheld the going down of the "Big Ball" twice that day and then he hurried home for the milking.

"Ef God'll do thet, now, hit'll be a big act," he agreed with himself as he cross the branch close upon the cow's heels. "Hit shore will."

After the chores were done and the evening meal over, Hepzibah and Lish, her husband, sat in cane-bottomed chairs in the open door. There was a bright fire on the hearth, though the weather was warm for November. Christopher sat at their feet and smiled out in friendliness at each new star that appeared.

"Reckin ye'll start afore day, won't ye, Lish?" Hepzibah opened the conversation.

"I 'low to," he answered.

He sat with his chair tilted back against the door and smoked his pipe peacefully. He was heavily-built and good-natured with a wise twinkle in his blue eyes and a heart as tender as a child's. Lish was a good worker and a good trader as long as he stayed sober, but altogether irresponsible when drunk.

"I reckin the calves will bring a nice leetle pile."

"I'm accounting on hit."

"Pap, which do ye aim ter git fust, my new or Mam's dress?"

Lish drew in a large mouthful of smoke and blew it out again. "Wa-al, I don't know as hit makes any difference—they'll both uv 'em get hyere at the same time."

"Whut time will ye git back?"

"Ef they haint no trouble, I orter git hyere a bit arter sundown."

"Ye go'n'r take Old Becky ter load the pokes uv flour on, Lish?"

"Reckin so."

Hepzibah never expected to see the flour, the book nor the dress. She expected the mule to return about sundown the next afternoon, and the old grey horse to bring Lish in any time the next week, but she held her peace.

After they were in bed, she said drowsily, "Christy shore sets a heap uv store by thet new book."

"And I am aiming he shall hev hit," Lish promised as she had heard him do so many times before.

While Christopher was doing his morning's work about the place, to himself he kept saying, "Ef He'll only do hit;" and as he followed the creek bed a mile and then trudged along the wagon road that skirted the hill another mile and a half before he reached the small frame schoolhouse, he kept thinking over and over, "Ef He'll only do hit."

As if in answer to his thought, the teacher, a mountain girl of exceptional ability and training, told them after a morning prayer, that she had learned that whatsoever ye ask, believing, ye shall receive.

Christopher then believed. From that moment he was sure of his new book and the new dress and a happy Thanksgiving. When he studied his spelling lesson from Teeny Gay's book that day, he bade the old speller adieu with the certain knowledge that his next lesson would be prepared from his own textbook.

Light of foot, he traveled homeward after close of school. He found Hepzibah going through her stack of blankets, selecting those she would use for covers as the nights grew colder. She had woven them herself, a beautiful collection of plaids and checks and stripes and plain ones with fancy borders.

Christopher hung up his dinner pail and started to the woodpile for his chips.

"How wez school terday, Christy?" inquired his mother, more amiably than usual.

"Fine, Mam. I'm go'n'er hurry through my work now, so'st I kin read my new book a spell afore dark, ef Pap happens ter git hyere."

"Pore leetle lamb!" she sighed as he went through the door.

"We won't wait fer no sunset terday, Ol' Piedy,' the boy told his cow as he started down the hillside, while the sun still shone through the cedar branches. "Hit's glad Mam will be ter git through early fer onct."

"Mam," he said to Hepzibah some time later as he helped her strain the milk and wash out the buckets, "Teacher 'lowed hit ud be nice fer them ez didn't hev no turkey fer Thanksgiving jes' ter hev a chicken. At 'ar Dominicker would set mighty purty under dumplin's, now wouldn't he?"

"He nigh about would," she answered without promising him anything. Hepzibah did not know what the morrow might bring forth.

At last the boy and his mother sat in the doorway and listened for the sound of hoofs in the chilly autumn dusk. She listened for Old Becky. He listened for Becky and the grey horse bearing his "Pap."

It grew dark and colder.

"You go on up an' lay down, Christy. Ol' Becky may hev stopped som'er's ter graze an' will be a leetle late gitting in. I'll put her under the shed an' give her some corn. You jes' run on up."

"No, Ma, Pap' had some kind uv a backset, but he'll be hyore afore long an' I druther wait, ef hit's all the same ter ye."

They had not waited long when they caught the sound of the horses' feet. Both listened intently.

'Ye hyear Ol' Grey, Mam?"

"Blest ef it haint," replied Hepzibah, dreading to see the crooked saddle, sagging form and lolling head. If Christy had only spared himself this!

"Fetch the lantern, Boy," she directed him.

Briskly the animals trotted to the gate; just as Christopher emerged with the lighted lantern. Hepzibah leaned over the post and peered into the circle of light as Lish raised the lantern a moment, taking it from his son. Straight and sober he sat above his bulging saddle pockets; while Becky switched impatiently and turned her head from side to side in her efforts to see the load upon her back.

"Them calves shore brung a pile," Lish informed them proudly. "An' hit wuz a sight fer see whut I could git fer the money. Hyere, you hold the lantern Hepsy, an' Chris can help me ter onload. Yer book's in them saddle pockets thar, boy, an' I got ye a writin' ablet an' a pencil." Lish was delighted with himself.

Christopher's voice trembled with suppressed excitement. "How about Mam's dress?" he questioned.

"We'l, whut about thet, now? Ef I didn't plum ferget—" But they both knew he was joking. "Wa-al, hit's a pime blank beauty, already sewed up an' trimmed an' got buttons on. All yer mammy has ter do is ter step inter hit an' put on her Sunday shoes an' that hat on top uv Becky's bundles an' she's ready fer go any-wheres."

Hepzipah's hands trembled as she set out his belated supper. Her voice also was too shaky for words, but Lish understood that his had pleased her more than anything he had ever done.

As his appetite began to be assuaged, he talked again. "Boys, I never had sech a good time in my life, a-matchin' my calves again at thar merchandise. I tuk the last nickel uv 'em up in trade so'st I wouldn't hev none left fer nothin' else," he admitted, embarrassed.

Christopher sat down by the lantern and turned the pages of his spelling book. There they were, all the familiar words on the first pages, but oh, so new and clean. He would not mit his pencil nor mark on his tablet tonight. He would save that joy for tomorrow—Thanksgiving Day. "An' I'm aimin' ter thank Him fust thing in the morning, fer He shore done hit, only better'n I ever 'lowed He would." Christopher perked his treasures quickly out of line with a splashy tear. Lish was talking to Hepzibah over his empty plate: so the boy slipped quietly to bed, where he slept with his head upon the book, his tablet and pencil securely held in his arm.

Thanksgiving morning was bright.

Christopher stood, hands in pockets, and watched Hepzibah at the business of picking the feathers from the young Dominecker. He studied a while in silence. "Mam," he finally arrived at a conclusion, "I reckon as how hit uz really God as killed 'at chicken."

Hepzibah glanced at him sharply. "Hit uz me wrung thet chicken's head off, Christy."

"I know, Mam, ye did. An yet God plime blank killed him. Fer because hit uz God made Pap do whut he done, an' because he done hit uz why we had the chicken. An' ef ye say so, I'll git God ter make hit inter 'a turkey afore dinner."

'Naw, Christy, hit's good enough ez hit is Don't ax no more favors uv the Lawd so soon an top uv all these benefits." Hepzibah spoke reverently. "I never thought He could er done hit."

"I wuz a leetle skeered myself at fust, arter I axed Him ter go with pap—"

The sound of Lish's voice near at hand startled them both.

"Wa-al, Boy, ef thet wuz Him with me yistiddy, I'll say one thing—He shore is a fine One ter hev travel with ye."—Lydia Beck Smith, in Presbyterian Advance.

THE REPOSE OF FAITH.

Says A. C. Benson: "I am quite as much at a loss as anybody else to say what is the object of life, but I do not feel any doubt that we were not sent into the world to be in a fuss." Nobody, least of all a believer in the patient God, can afford to "be in a fuss" about anything. Fussiness defeats itself by wasting powers that are needed for real tasks and tests. It is steam blown into the air instead of the cylinders. It is analogous to what the machinist calls "lost motion." It clouds real issues—and disturbs everyone within range of it. If a train is late, fussing will not hasten its arrival. If frost threatens, fussing will not retard it. If sickness impends, fussing renders one less capable of meeting it. Even "when everything goes dead wrong," fussing is worse than useless. "Be not anxious," said Jesus to His friends. Solicitous, sympathetic, eager, alert, resourceful, but never fussy. "I have learned to take great comfort in God," said James Russell Lowell. What use of having a God unless one can rest in Him? Up to that point we have no business to be content. But even this side of that point of maximum dutifulness we are not warranted in fussing. Believe in your cause, in people, in God—in yourself as commissioned by God. Then watch, hold on, strive, pray, be patient—but do not fuss.—George Clarke Peck.

THE INFLUENCE OF A SERMON.

John Newton preached in an English village. Such was the indifference that only a handful came to hear him. But among the number was Scott, the commentator. The sermon turned his thoughts toward the truth, and all the Christian influence of Scott's commentary may be traced to that sermon. That restricted service, which seemed almost like wasting time, may have done more for the world than any other service in Newton's life. The world is listening yet to that sermon.—Methodist Recorder.

THE BEST GIFT.

"I'm afraid—I haven't given you—the right kind—of gift." It was Christmas night, and the words, punctuated with sobs, came from my little eight-year-old girl.

"Why, yes, you have, dearie," I replied. "Didn't you give papa your love and a promise to be a good and kind to all your brothers and sisters?"

"Yes, but I don't think that was enough. I ought to have given you something to show it."

In the morning she had climbed into my bed and as she snuggled up to me she said, "Papa, I haven't got you any Christmas present." I knew how little money she had had to spend, and so I said, "Wel', you can give papa your love and that willl be better than any gift." And she had dressed and gone down into my study and on a scrap of paper had written:

"Dear Papa: "My Christmas gift to you is my love and to be a good girl and to be kind to the rest of the children. Yours truly, Maxine."

As I remembered that little note I felt a tightening in my throat and took her in my arms and said, "No, dearie, your love is more precious to papa than any gift you could have given."

And then, like a flash, it dawned upon me that in this experience of my fatherhood, God had given me a vision of His own Father-heart. So, frequently, we mourn because we are not able to do more for Him than we are. We wish, like Naaman, that we could do "some great thing" to show how much we love Him. But God says to us:

"For real love have I desired, and not sacrifice;
And the knowlege of God more than burnt-offerings."

If we really love Him, though our only manifestation of it be a love note on a scrap of paper, it is acceptable to Him.

"Vainly we offer each ample oblation;
Vainly with gifts would His favor secure:
Richer by far is the heart's adoration;
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor."

—Rev. H. L. Bailey, in Zion's Herald.

ALL

When we are urged in the book of Proverbs to acknowledge God in all our ways, the emphasis is evidently on the word "all." It is easy for us to acknowledge God on extraordinary occasions, but what God desires is that we shall acknowledge Him in every event in life, as some one has said, "The overthrow of an empire and a shower of rain will thus be seen equally as having been sent by our heavenly Father."—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE [illegible]

Mrs. W. [illegible] Hoyle.

Our hearts were again made sad when the dark angel came into our midst and removed from among us the good mother and superintendent, Mrs. W. [illegible] Hoyle.

Mrs. Hoyle was born February [illegible], departed this life May 17, [illegible].

She had been in feeble health for the past two years, yet how patiently she bore her sufferings, but her sufferings are o'er.

Mrs. Hoyle, before her marriage to Mr. Hoyle, was Miss [illegible] of Lincoln County, and to this union two daughters were born, Mrs. Bert Mode who preceded her mother to the grave several years and Mrs. C. E. Philips of Monroe. She leaves to mourn their loss an only daughter and a heart-broken husband, seven grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends.

She professed faith in Christ when a girl and joined Oak Grove church.

After moving to Lincoln County she moved her membership to Macedonia church and ever remained a consistent member.

In Mrs. Hoyle's passing the community has lost a good woman, a Christian friend the church a valuable member. She was always interested in the work of her Lord and Master. The husband, a true and loving wife, the daughter a good sweet mother and we can again see dear wife and mother on the other shore.

The funeral services were conducted from Oak Grove church May [illegible] by her pastor J. M. Morgan assisted by Rev. [illegible] and interment was in the church [illegible].

The large crowd of sorrowing relatives and friends that met to pay their last respects to the deceased showed the esteem [illegible] was held. The floral offering was very beautiful. May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved.

Pearl Barnes.

Mitchel.

Mabel Kir[illegible] was born March 16, 19[illegible]2, and [illegible] May [illegible], 1926. About four years ago she professed faith in Christ and joined Pilgrim U. P. church where she remained until she was called home. Sister Mitchel was faithful to attend her church until conditions arose over which she had no control that kept her away. We feel assured that in heart and life she was true to her Master.

Her illness was very short and her death was a great shock to her friends and the community. She was laid to rest at Pilgrim church. Funeral was conducted by her pastor assisted by Rev. W. C. [illegible].

church was witnessed by members of the immediate families and a few friends of the bride. The vows were spoken before an altar of roses and fern.

As the bridal party entered, the "Bridal March" from Lohengrin was played by Miss Josephine Murphy, cousin of the bride. Bridesmaids were Miss Eula Clark and Miss [illegible], both of Trega Point, the latter cousin of the bride. The bride and bridegroom entered together. The bride was lovely in a dress of white [illegible], with picture [illegible] of white [illegible] carried a bride's [illegible] lilies.

The couple left immediately after the ceremony on their wedding trip to Washington, Philadelphia and other points north.

Mrs. Myers is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Z. B. Morris, of Thomasville, but has made her home in Greensboro for the past four years, where she held a position with the [illegible] Power Company. She is a young woman of pleasing personality. Mr. Myers is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Myers of Thomasville. The young couple will be at home after [illegible] with the parents of the bride.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Our Sunday school is doing very well; 220 present, collection $5.5[illegible] last Sunday.

The members of Mt. Pleasant that have been sick and in different hospitals are all home again; some of them are doing well while others are slowly recovering. We hope to see them all back to church again soon.

[illegible] were Messrs. Sam Shepard, Mrs. John [illegible], Curtis and Miss Fern Amick.

Mrs. Sarah Coley, one of our oldest and best members, who has been in declining health for some time, was not able to be out at this writing. We hope for her recovery.

Mr. John [illegible] has been an invalid for some time, does not seem to improve much; [illegible].

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society [illegible] in the midst of a [illegible] with zeal and [illegible] the new members [illegible] and a greater interest being taken in attendance and the improvement of the meetings. Last Sunday evening our society had, as visiting co-workers, the newly organized Christian Endeavor Society, of Brick (Reformed) Church. In the last business session held Miss Mal Smith was elected as a delegate to the Young People's Summer Conference.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society had a good meeting Sunday with W. G. Causey leader. We wonder why more of our people don't take an interest in this work.

Children's day will be observed next Sunday, June 20th at eleven o'clock and in the afternoon at three o'clock. Rev. T. O. Pender and P. E. Lindley will be there. Come everyone that can, let's give them a good showing.

All of the girls and boys that have been away to college are back home again and are filling their vacant places in the church. They are Misses Edyth and Margarett Causey, of N. C. C. W., Misses Gladys Spoon, Edna Coley, Georgie Amick, and Lillian Schoffner: Messrs Condon Coley, Guy Alexander, and Vance Burgess of Elon College, and Oscar Burgess of Guilford College.

The weather is very dry through this section, and if we don't soon get rain it will be impossible for the crops to do good, but we are trusting the Lord to send rain.

—The Roman Catholics are holding a eucharistic congress in Chicago, attended by immense throngs. As many as 200,000 people are reported present at one time. The throng is not always orderly, as curiosity to see at close range makes necessary police restraint. Catholics are much like other folks of the same intellectual and moral grade.

—Captain W. S. Lineberry, a prominent member of our church at Gray's Chapel, is dead at the age of 79. The funeral was on Tuesday in which the pastor, Rev. A. O. Lindley was assisted by Brothers Millaway, Ashburn, and Gerringer. Captain Lineberry was a Confederate soldier. He served as superintendent of the Soldiers' Home at Raleigh from 1910 to 1917. He was highly esteemed in church and state. He leaves nine children, one of whom is Mrs. Willis Booth. of Calvary church, Greensboro.

—Congressman W. C. Hammer made a speech in the House of Representatives at Washington to prove that Andrew Jackson was born in North Carolina, contrary to contention of a representative from South Carolina that he was born in that state. Why spend so much time on so unimportant a question? Or is it indeed important?

—Dr. Louis Mann, a Jewish rabbi from Chicago, spoke in Greensboro Monday night to an audience composed of Jews and Gentiles. His subject was, "The Jewish Problem: Jewish or Christian?" He had in mind the dislike to which Jews are subject and discussed the causes and cure of it. He admitted that Jews are partly responsible for it. Yet he contended that the qualities that make the Jews hated and despised are largely the result of the treatment to which they have been subjected. He urged Jews to free themselves from characteristics that make them objects of hate and contempt. He said there are too many varities of Jews, almost as many as of Heinz's pickles. He said one reason Jews are not more highly respected is because they do not respect themselves enough. He also pointed out to his Gentile hearers that they are not true to the teachings of Christ when they indulge in race hatred. He said those who do it are not real Christians, only nominal. At the close of the address he gave opportunity for questions from the audience. A number were asked which he answered in fairness. One question was, "Would it not promote harmony between Christian and Jew if each would read the other's sacred scriptures?" He said no doubt this would help greatly. Dr. Mann made a good impression on his audience and his address tended to sympathy and harmony. We would be glad to hear him again.

—All of the one hundred counties in North Carolina are now organized into County Sunday School Associations, and all held county conventions during year.

—In the one hundred county conventions held during the year a total of 1,541 Sunday Schools were represented. The attendance records show that at these conventions there were 409 pastors, 769 superintendents, and 3,799 teachers. The estimated total attendance at these conventions was 24,350 people, or an average of 243 at each meeting. The State Association furnished two speakers for each of the one hundred conventions.

—The funeral of Captain W. S. Lineberry was attended by more people than could be seated in Gray's Chapel church. In addition to the ministers named in another paragraph, Rev. J. E. Pritchard assisted in the service.

TO OUR LADY READERS.

We reecntly published a review of a great new book written by a woman in the interest of women—"The Bible Status of Woman." We regard this book so highly that we have ordered a number of copies to be used as rewards for work done. There are in almost every community a number of people who would subscribe for the Methodist Protestant Herald if earnestly asked to do so by some lady in whom they have confidence. This is the work we want done.

If you are willing to undertake it, send us your name and the name of your post office and also the name of your church, and we will send you subscription blanks and a copy of our proposition.

WHO ARE THE HERETICS?

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(The following article by Bishop Candler, with the above title, is so true, we feel that readers of the Herald ought to read it, and for this reason commend it to their careful and thoughtful persual.—J. F. Dosier.)

The liberalists, being unable to defend themselves against the just charge that their teachings are manifestly contradictory of the tenets of historic Christianity, have betaken to the artful device of making counter charges against their evangelical opponents in order to divert attention from the real issue between them.

They seek to magnify ethical principles and minify doctrinal truths, and allege that orthodox teachers and preachers ignore or deny the moral principles of Christianity. Underlying this false allegation is the groundless assumption that between the moral truths of the religion of Christ and its saving truths there is positive antagonism, or, at most, that they have no vital connection with one another, the erroneous assumption that the moral fruits of Christianity are most excellent and abundant when they are cut loose from its life-giving roots.

There is also underlying this liberalistic counter movement that the rationalists possess the luscious fruits of the Christian religion while the advocates of evangelical Christianity cling to dry and useless roots.

A case in point is a recent editorial in a liberalistic periodical under the caption, "Who Are the Heretics?"

Through several paragraphs the editor screams this idle question. Here is his first paragraph:

"Who is the real heretic? Not the man who questions the scientific accuracy of the opening chapters of Genesis and doubts if God made the world in one calendar week, but the man who does not believe that God is creating the world today; that he has been creating it all through history; that the centuries are but days of some great unfolding purpose; that he is working today as wonderfully as in Genesis; that He is forever striving to create a beautiful world wherein redeemed men may live happy, brotherly lives; that he walks in Chicago, New York, London, Paris, Berlin, as really as he walked in the garden of Eden. The man who does not believe in the present, creating, purposeful God is the real heretic."

The cool assumption back of that sleazy stuff is that if one does not accept the rationalistic view of the teachings of the book of Genesis concerning creation, he does not, and cannot, believe in a "present, creating, and purposeful God." Truly a preposterous assumption! Where in all the world is there an advocate of orthodox Christianity who does not firmly believe and fervently proclaim the fact of the existence of the eternal and ever-present God? Liberalists may in their misty modes of thinking and speaking dim this great truth by modified pantheism or God-enslaving theories of natural law, but evangelical teachers do not indorse for a moment such nonsensical notions.

Again the excited editor cries:

"Who is the real heretic? Not the man who questions the verbal inspiration of the Bible, but the man who does not believe that God speaks to his children today just as He spoke to Israel. The real heretic, the man of all others, is he who insists that God is dumb, for he takes the whole foundation out of religion and leaves us an empty, silent world. What should worry us is not how God spoke in Bible times, but how He is speaking today. Does He speak through holy scripture; has He been speaking words of grace, power and comfort through the mouths of prophets, saints and poets in every age; is He speaking today through our holy men; does He speak to us ourselves when we turn eager ears to hear? The man who cannot say the humble 'yes' to these questions is the heretic and has no place in the pulpit of today."

Where is there in all the earth an evangelical preacher who does not insist upon the great truth that our heavenly Father speaks to men today, and that "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God?" (Romans viii:16.) But are liberalists famous for their experience or proclamation of the doctrine of Christian assurance?

What this editor means, or seems to mean, is that the declamations of himself and his modernistic comrades are in the matter of divine inspiration on a level with the inspiring writings of the Old and New Testaments. That conceit of his no sensible man does or can believe. Historic Christianity is "built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself the chief cornerstone." (Ephesians ii:20); and other foundation can no man lay than that is laid" (1 Corinthians iii-11). Certainly no liberalist who denies the Virgin Birth and bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ can lay in his modernistic mortar a firm foundation for faith in God equal to that which has been laid in the sacred writings which "came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (II Peter i:21.)

Mankind cannot maintain vigorous spiritual life on the pabulum supplied by the parvenu religion proposed by modern rationalism. The most gifted man among all the liberalists cannot write so much as one short letter which when laid alongside Paul's brief epistle to Philemon will not appear poor and puerile in comparison with the apostolic communication

This erratic editor proceeds to ask:

"Who is the real heretic? Not the man who cannot subscribe to all the doctrines of the creeds, but the man who does not believe in the New Testament life."

Who believes most strongly and exemplifies most beautifully the New Testament life, the creedless apostles of liberalism or the faithful men and women who "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints?" Are modernists models of gentleness, zeal for the rescue of the perishing, and saintliness in life and conduct? Can the loftiest light among them take rank with the humblest captain of the Salvation Army who believes in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, the deity of Christ, and the saving grace of the Redeemer's atonement? Where are the saints of liberalism? Who among them stands for the preservation of the Christian Sabbath or exerts himself for the regeneration of lost souls? Where are their home and foreign mission enterprises? Do they propose anything better than eugenics for the outcast people of the slums? Do not their rationalistic theories of "comparative religion" leave the heathen in his blindness bowing down to wood and stone?

Adverting to the Scriptural hope of the men of faith that from the right hand of God Christ "shall come to judge the quick and the dead," this exponent of liberalism says:

"We feel no qualms or fears when we hear a preacher deny the second coming—for is not Christ here? But we shudder with indescribable terrors when we hear some preachers today denying the power of Christ to transform the world. That is the unspeakable heresy."

The exponents of evangelical Christianity believe and rejoice in the power of Christ to transform the world. But what transforming power is left by the liberalists to Christ when they deny His supernatural birth, discredit His miracles, doubt His resurrection, and deride the glorious hope of them who look for Him to "appear the second time, without sin unto salvation?" (Hebrews ix:-28).

The final paragraph of this liberalistic editorial opens thus:

"Who is the real heretic? Not he who questions the physical resurrection of Christ and has difficulty with some other New Testament miracles, but he who denies the power of God to work some great miracle of transformation in our time, and even hinders God."

Who among evangelical Christians denies the power of God to work some great miracle of transformation in our time?" Who but the liberalists minify the miracle of regeneration? Does the denial of the resurrection and miracles of Jesus incline them to belittle that great work of regenerating grace "the exceeding greatness of the power" of which, St. Paul declares, is "according to the mighty power which God wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places?" (Ephesians i:20 and 21).

If this rationalistic editor teaches anything clearly in his place, it is that one may deny all the characteristic tenets of the teaching of Jesus and yet be a better Christian than one who believes them all. By implication at least he would have us infer that one may have in a superior degree the mind of Christ by rejecting all the claims that the Savior made for His supernatural personality and His supreme place in the universe.

In ancient times there was a Jewish sect of whom it is recorded that "they trusted in themselves that they were righteous and despised others" (Luke xviii:9).

Have we now among us a sect of rationalistic pharisees who imagine that they are more Christ-like than the saints of all ages because they deny all the supernatural elements which have given the Christian religion its characteristic nature for the twenty centuries of its history? Has pharisaism and sadduceeism been fused in this novel amalgam of modernism? Have we now in the land men who combine in themselvss the smirking vanity of the Pharisee and the sneering skepticism of the Sadducee?

Baccalaureate Sunday.

Possibly there is not a more beautiful service for Baccalaureate Sunday in all our colleges than that of Western Maryland College, splendid in tradition and reality.

Processional,—student body, graduates and faculty, in cap and gown.—marched down the old college path to their positions on the platform of Alumni Hall singing, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The Invocation was made by Rev. J. N. Garner, of St. Paul's Reformed Church, all joining in The Lord's Prayer. A violin solo, Borowski's "Adoration," played by Kurt Ait, of Baltimore, followed. The College Choir, supported by Bohl's Orchestra, of Baltimore, followed. To the reading of the Ten Commandments by Dr. H. T. Stephens, the Choir and the whole student body standing, chanted the musical responses, after which Rev. J. P. Rupley, of the Westminster Lutheran Church, led the congregation in reading the Psalter, Ps. CXV the Apostles' Creed, all singing the Gloria. The Scripture Lesson, Jno. 4, 1-31, was read by Rev. R. N. Edwards of the Westminster Methodist Episcopal Church, the congregation then singing the great hymn of faith. "O God Our Help In Ages Past."

President Ward's sermon was the utterance of a prophet and the vision of one anointed with power. The text was John 4 31, "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

The way of communion with God, the aim of all religious aspiration, was the theme and the thought centered around the subject. "The Church of the Future." This, said the speaker, was his concern on graduation, 31 years ago. Along what lines would the Church perfect its worship? It is the same question that is engaging men's thoughts today. Men are still asking "What will be the Church of the future." So it is in all times and in all lands. "The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts,"—its prophecies are usually inspired, and its dreams generally come true.

The Church is never an end in itself, but a means of finding God. The visible church is not a finality. It will change. It is forward-looking, always towards the Kingdom of Heaven. When a person dies he does not go to church, he goes to Heaven,—if he dies facing that way, Jesus' idea of the church was that it is a means to an end. The Church Visible is not a final product. The Jews thought their temple worship was the final expression of religious worship, and that their way would prevail throughout the ages. Jerusalem would be the centre of worship for all time. Some of us today are just as insistant as the Jews then that our way is the only way. GENETICS.

By Luther K. Long.

"Without overstepping fact one may say [illegible] genetics, the science of descent, has been [illegible] the whole branch of twentieth-century [illegible]." So declares Professor E. M. [illegible] Harvard university. And well-informed people generally will agree with him. While the purpose of Professor East, in an article in Scribner's Magazine, is to [illegible] special emphasis upon the moral and [illegible] social values pertaining to the human race [illegible] the study and practice of genetics—"the science of descent"—he does not despise the profit that has come through the improvement of domestic animals and plants. He says:

"[illegible] has made possible better [illegible] of livestock.

[illegible] is to be feared because of re- [illegible] present stocks. Meat production is more rapid. Fattening is more efficient. Milk [illegible] increasing steadily. Both sheep and [illegible] have heavier and stronger wool, or [illegible] finer wool, according to the [illegible] bred to them."

[illegible] with the breeding of plants— [illegible] of species—"the science of descent"—tells the same story of progress. Professor East continues:

"New types, specialized for different purposes, are constantly being created. Novel varieties appear in increasing numbers year by year, and though the great majority of them are probably little better than the older types they are designed to replace, here and there a strain stands out whose inherent merits make it worth millions. In fact, if one studies the chief varieties of farm crops now grown, he finds scarcely a single one which was known to the world fifty years ago, so rapid has been the man-made evolution of the vegetable kingdom."

My own experience in promoting better plants and flowers has been in work with the Gladiolus—seeking for better colored, larger, more perfectly placed, and better shaped flowers. I shall relate here a little of my work along these lines.

It is now more than twenty-five years since a lady gave me about forty Gladiolus bulbs. I took good care of them and really enjoyed the blossoms, though they were small, and not at all well marked. They were as good as anyone else in that place was growing. The next winter, while studying one of the best seed catalogues in the country, I came across descriptions of some really good Gladioli.

Discarding my old bulbs and sending for the newer sorts, I succeeded in producing a quantity of very satisfactory blossoms. Each year additional varieties were secured, and the joys of watching for new colors and forms increased.

Learning that new varieties could be produced from seed, I began the long, slow process of getting flowers from seed.

Then there was an interval of several years during which I did not grow these flowers, because I thought the summers on Lake Superior were too short.

At my next place of residence were located the farms of one of the largest seed and bulb companies in this country. There, through association with the manager, I became interested in the process of cross-polinating flowers to obtain new varieties. This work was exceedingly facinating, and I soon had to my credit some very fine specimens of new Gladioli. Then, a frost—"a killing frost"—interfered. Coal could not be had in sufficient quantity to run my furnace during the cold war-winter of 1917-18—and the bulbs froze in the cellar.

The following several years in southern Georgia did not afford me time and opportunity for this work; but it was resumed in Michigan, with very satisfactory results. Now, in southern Maryland, I have planted more hand-polinated seed and a good number of selected seedlings; and I am waiting—rather impatiently, I must confess—to see what the results will be. If some specimen bulbs, which I have isolated, continue to do as well in Maryland as they did in Michigan last year they will be well worth propagating.

Meantime, my interest in the improvement of the human race has greatly increased. It is most instructive and inspiring to note the combinations in children of the diverse qualities of their parents—often resulting in superior men and women. There is also something original in each child—it varies from both parents. Intelligence in contracting marriage, and good sense in bringing up children—with the grace of God helping—will be sure to result in greatly improved families.

A WORD OR TWO ABOUT THE PASTORS' CONFERENCE.

We believe the program for the Conference is one of the best we have had, and that's saying a good deal. This is true both as to speakers and subjects.

We are trying this year to put special emphasis on the spiritual needs of the minister. We are hoping that the results will be a deepening of the spiritual life of all who attend. Let us pray to that end.

You will note that the program is confined to the mornings, the addresses at night being held in connection with the Young People's Conference. The afternoons will be given over to recreation and rest and fellowship.

There are fewer addresses on this program than usual. We have tried to avoid the criticism that the programs are too crowded. There is plenty on it, but not too much; and there are plenty of breathing spaces in between.

Now just a bit of information: The pastors attending the Conference will board and room in the College dormitories. The program will be given in one of the class rooms of the Roberts Hall. No bedding is provided, so the preachers will bring sheets, a pillow and case with them. The cost will be one dollar a day. This barely covers the cost of board. The registration fee will be the same as formerly.

Now, let's plan to come. Come for the beginning and stay through the close. You can get back to your work for Sunday. And you will be immensely benefited by the week's stay at the Conference.

Executive Committee, Pastors' Summer Conference.

REGISTRATION YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE, HIGH POINT COLLEGE, July 19th to 26th.

STILL THEY COME!

The tortoise brought us several more registrations since the last list was published. You folks believe in the motto "Slow but sure." I can hardly say that they are coming in by the scores yet much less the hundreds. You ought to make me publish two or three hundred a week for the next month.

And say: Do you realize that the Conference is only four weeks off? That four weeks will be gone before you know it, and some will say, "O, I intended to register for the Young People's Conference, but I put it off until too late." Don't let that be the case with any of you who read this. Send your registration in by next mail.

PASTORS, SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS, CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PRESIDENTS, HAVE YOU REGISTERED? You ought to set the example for those of the rank and file. Have you urged the matter in your church, school or society? Put it up to them good and strong next Sunday, and send us a large list to publish next time.

Thank you; thank you; thank you!

High Point.—The 28th Annual Convention of the N. C. Christian Endeavor Society was held in our church last Friday, 18th. continuing through Sunday. Approximately 300 young people from the various sections of the state were here, entertained in the homes of the city. The President, Mr. J. O. Corbett, of Graham, was ill in a Hospital and unable to be present. One of the outstanding features of the Convention was the address on Friday afternoon by Rev. A. A. Corey on the theme, "I will strive to do." On Friday evening splendid addresses were delivered by Messrs. A. J. Schartle of Boston and Kirkpatrick.

On Saturday evening at 6 o'clock a Banquet was served by the Ladies' Aid Society of our church in the S. S. Assembly room to 185 young people, and a happier, jollier crowd is not often found. Mr. Chas. F. Evans, All-South Secretary, of Chattanooga Tenn., acted as toast-master, and many witty speeches were made, and the room resounded with repartee and happy songs. On Sunday morning at 11 o'clock the pulpit was occupied by Mr. C. F. Evans, who gave a splendid address that made a good sermon, although he is only a laymen. Two speakers addressed the Convention Sunday afternoon. Mr. Evans speaking on "Our Coming Conventions," and Mr. Hewitt F. Cunningham on "A Prayer for the Future."

At the closing service on Sunday evening the best address of all was given by Mr. A. J. Schartle of Boston, who said that it is time for the American people to stop slandering our youth, and give more time and attention to aiding and encouraging them. The crying need of the young people is Christian homes supported by Christian parents. He stated that nations and individuals fail only when they do not play four square with God He declared that the safety of America begins not at the battle front, but in the American home. Mr. Schartle highly commended the work being done by the Young People's Societies of N. C.; however they are as yet only touching the edges, there being only three out of every ten persons receiving religious education. This address was truly inspiring to the young people assembled, for he declared that he is not in sympathy with those who criticize and decry youth. The place of meeting for next year was not decided.

The Mission Band held its monthly meeting in the church with Mrs. D. A. Neese and Mrs. L. R. Johnston leaders. Several girls of this group left yesterday for a week's camping at Miller's Mill with the Girl Reserves division of the Y. W. C. A.

The State Executive Board of the Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies will meet in the church on Thursday, and about 20 members are expected. Luncheon will be served them at 1 o'clock. Among the local members are Mesdames Geo. R. Brown, Minnie P. Harrell, R. M. Andrews, H. A. Garrett, and others.

Mrs. C. C. Robbins and her daughter Annie left Tuesday, June 15th for a visit to her brother, Mr. Holleman, in Greenville, Miss. and will return via Atlanta, Ga. They expect to be away two or three weeks.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Charge.—On June 13th Children's Day Services were held. The children did fine work as they had only five practice periods. The collection was $9.02, and only 72 in membership with our Sunday school.

Rev. M. P. Chambliss, and Mr. Kittrell were with us; were very glad for them to be there at the Children's Day Services. Hope they enjoyed it. Our pastor being absent Brother Chambliss and Mr. Kittrell filled his appointment.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Pair were with us on that day and today Mrs. Pair is very ill. She was taken to the Hospital and operated on for appendicitis on Wednesday June 16th. We all sincerely hope she will soon be able to come and be with us in our Sunday school work and church work again.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Maggie Hawkins, Rep.

Mt. Carmel, Granville Circuit.—We were very glad indeed to have Rev. R. A. Hunter with us on the second Sunday. He and Mr. Kennett exchanged pulpits. Mr. Hunter was our help during the special meeting last year. and we all learned to love him and enjoy his wonderful sermons. He not only talked to us about the college but preached one of his splendid sermons like he always does. Children's Day service will be held the first Sunday night at 8 o'clock. Our special meeting begins the second Sunday in July. Let us all hope, trust, and pray, that this may be a glorious meeting. Mrs. C. S. Finch was hostess to our Missionary Societies last Thursday. We had a splendid meeting. All members present except one. All tho' we are few in number I feel that we do good work. Hope we may even do better, for there is much to be done. Reporter.

Asheville.—We are glad to have Miss Novella McIntyre at home again from High Point College.

While Brother Bates was away in S. C. Sunday Rev. Hanner Casto of Bethel Home preached in the forenoon and Rev. Mr. Linburger of the Lutheran Church here preached in the evening. Both gave us good messages. Brother Bates will be away next Sunday on the Educational Campaign. During his absence the Board of Stewards will thoroughly canvass the membership for the full payment of all the financial obligations to date. Rev. J. S. Williams, chairman of the Board, will preach next Sunday morning.

The June meeting of our Brotherhood was very interesting. The woman's Missionary Society met with Mrs. J. S. Williams last week. The attendance was very good and there was a good program. Reporter.

THE POWER OF MONEY.

Christianity triumphantly withstood the sword, the fagot, and all forms of persecution. The assaults of the forces of unbelief, materialism, sensuality, and false religions, though gravely menacing it at times, were unable to destroy it. Highly intellectual skeptical philosophy, presented by brilliant pens and eloquent tongues, were impotent to disredit it and arrest its extension. But Christianity today confronts more powerful opposing agencies than in any previous period of its history. Working in unison for its overthrow are godless human learning, keen, subtle, and scheming, and Mammon, grown to far huger proportions than were ever dreamed of by those living in the centuries agone. Infidel scholarship alone would not constitute so serious a peril. That has been in action against revealed religion in large measure before, though without the facilities for doing damage that it has at this time. But the foe that now most threatens Scriptural Christianity, which is the only true and saving Christianity, as the vast aggregation of wealth which is so largely set for its destruction.

The power of piled-up millions and billions —who can measure it? The potent influence of money in bringing things to pass was thus set forth by Joseph Addison in matchless English, such as he was accustomed to use in the expression of his vigorous thoughts:

A man who is furnished with arguments from the mint will convince his antagonist much sooner than one who draws them from reason and philosophy. Gold is a wonderful clearer of the understanding; it dissipates every doubt and scruple in an instant, accommodates itself to the meanest capacities, silences the loud and clamorous, and brings over the most obstinate and inflexible. Philip of Macedon refuted with it all the wisdom of Athens, confounded their statesmen, struck their orators dumb, and at length argued them out of all their liberties.—Selected.

EXPERT TESTIMONY ON PROHIBITION

By Luther K. Leng.

Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University has twice appeared before the Senate Committee at Washington.

He made the point that the testimony of students, who were from 11 to 15 years old and living away from New Haven when the 18th Amendment went into effect in 1919 was of no value as to how present drinking habits at Yale compared with conditions under open saloons—because none of these young men had personally known the earlier conditions.

Professor Fisher has been an instructor at Yale for more than 35 years. He said to the Senate Committee:

"If I wanted to know or you wanted to know whether the average grade of students at Yale was higher or lower today than in 1919, no one would dream of putting it to the vote of the students, because the students were not there in 1919, any of them, and they are not in a condition to know. No one would think of putting it to a vote of the faculty in general without consulting the records. You would make a bee line for the records, where they exist, in the Dean's office; and that is exactly what I did in regard to prohibition when a month ago I undertook to find out the truth on this subject."

Thoughtful people generally will be inclined to accept Professor Fisher's statement that prohibition has given the country an economic saving amounting to [illegible] 000. We are at least interested in what was found out by his investigation of student drinking. He continues to the Senate Committee:

"I am just as anxious to find the exact facts, not to exaggerate them or to minimize them in any degree, as this Committee. And in that spirit I called the eight men who are best qualified to know because of their possession of the records as disciplinary officers of Yale, and their verdict, as I read it to you before, was practically unanimous that there had been a reduction."

Here is the statement of Professor Charles C. Clark, one of the eight disciplinary officers whom Professor Fisher consulted:

"I am not a prohibitionist and have never been. I will admit to you, however, that the effect of prohibition at Yale University has been good. I know whereof I speak, for I have been a member of the Committee on Discipline from a time dating back many years before prohibition.

"I know conditions intimately. I do not pretend that the students are prohibitionists or are not drinking, but the change has been simply revolutionary. In the old days our committee was constantly busy with cases involving intoxication and the disorders originating from it. Now we have practically no business of the kind at all to transact. Moreover, this is in spite of the fact that in the old days we rarely heard of our men about a case of mere intoxication that had not resulted in some kind of public disorder, whereas now intoxication of itself is regarded as calling for the severest penalty."

While the wets are seeking diligently to [illegible] and conditions, and reporting them [illegible], we need [illegible] the strongest light be turned on that the facts may be revealed. [illegible] do what he can to correct [illegible] while he waits in confidence for the increasing good effects of prohibition on conditions of individuals and families.

THE PROPOSED REFERENDUM OF THE WETS.

By Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary, World League Against Alcoholism.

The [illegible] of a referendum on national prohibition has met with much of ground on which to [illegible] usually or by precedent. There is no [illegible] constitutional [illegible], or any decision under which the federal constitution or any part thereof or any law passed by the Congress of the United States, can be made subject to a popular [illegible] on the contrary, the federal [illegible] expressly provides otherwise.

"The [illegible] and at the same time the most [illegible] put forth by the wets on the [illegible] is particularly [illegible] the Constitution of the United States in [illegible] a referendum on national prohibition. There is no machinery by which the national government could conduct a popular referendum. It does not [illegible]. It has no clerks [illegible] tion. It has no way of conducting [illegible]. Such a referendum could be taken in any state of the Union only at the enactment of that particular state and its own [illegible] such a vote. The Federal government could not compel any state to hold [illegible] nation [illegible] officers [illegible] is entitled [illegible] ors, but if any [illegible] Senate [illegible] would simply not be seated in the upper house. The Federal government could not compel the state to elect its senators in the governor of any state should fail to make provision for the filling of any vacancy in that state's representation in the U. S. Senate, the Federal government could not compel the governor to act.

"In many states, laws are subject to a popular referendum. No Federal law and no Federal constitutional provision can be subject to a popular referendum, unless the constitution of the United States and the American form of government are first radically changed. Local ordinances, state constitutions and state policies as expressed in local [illegible] legislation [illegible] properly be the [illegible] by popular [illegible] That is [illegible] however, of the Federal government. The very word Federal means a very different form of government from that provided for in the constitution of any state or in the charter of any municipality. Constitutional provisions and national policies of the Federal government must always be determined, not by the collective voice of the individual voters of the nation, but the collective voice of the individual states.

"If such a national referendum as proposed by the wets could legally be provided for, each state would nevertheless do as it wished as to the vote. If therefore half the states should vote on the question and the other half should refuse to vote what would such a referendum signify? Even if they all voted, the result could of necessity be nothing more than a straw ballot, without legal effect except as such action might indirectly affect Congressional action or might indirectly affect the attitude of the general public toward the law, the constitutional provisions involved, and toward prohibition enforcement and observance.

"The form of the referendum proposed in New York State has been cleverly worded by one of the best legal minds that has constantly opposed prohibition even to the point of opposing the right of a state to be protected in the enforcement of its own prohibitory law without having its own state prohibitory provisions nullified by liquor interests in other states under the protection of the cloak of inter-state commerce. It appears that this same wording is to be used in other states, some of which will undoubtly have the matter submitted under the initiative, while others will have the state referendum process and still others will use the method employed by the New York State legislature. The friends of national prohibition and of the Federal constitution should not be diverted from the main issue and should not be drawn into the sanctioning of such a scheme as that proposed in the New York referendum.

"In the first place it does not present a clear-cut issue to secure the attitude of the public on the liquor prohibition issue. It is indirect and insidious. It attempts to draw the attention of the public and to make its appeal on the basis of the reasonableness and inoffensive character of a certain method which is used to shield the monstrous and destructive object to be accomplished indirectly by such a method.

"In the second place, the question to be submitted provides for an expression on the policy of submitting state legislation for the provisions of the constitution of the United States not only tending to destroy the constitutional provisions having to do with prohibition but at the same time establishing a precedent of permitting each state legislature to nullify or override or repeal so far as that particular state is concerned, any provision of the Federal constitution at any time it chooses.

"Third, the very holding of such referendums which can have no direct legal effect and especially the sanctioning of the principle involved in such referendums, will unquestionably have the effect of encouraging great masses of the people to believe that this prohibition question is not really settled by the constitution of the United States: that it is in a condition where it can be changed by state referendums, that it may be overthrown by such processes, and that the whole question involved is a matter of general policy rather than a question of principle established in the fundamental law of the nation. Such a result cannot but create disrespect for the law and encourage the violations of the law.

"It would be just as reasonable to submit the vital question involved in the nineteenth amendment or seventeenth amendment as to submit in the manner proposed the question relating to the eighteenth amendment.

"There are many people who do not believe in the nineteenth amendment. Suppose they were to present a referendum in one state after another asking the votes of the people on the question as to whether the right of the women to vote as set forth in the nineteenth amendment should be subject to such interpretation in any state as that state legislature might determine from time to time. Would the women of the country likely welcome such a proposition, give their sanction to the plan and the principle involved, and help to get the people to vote on it, or would they advise the friends of woman suffrage in the United States to have absolutely nothing to do with the proposition and condemn the whole scheme?

"Suppose the opponents of the Federal income tax permitted under the sixteenth amendment to the Federal constitution should by one method or another get a referendum ballot in one or more states on the question as to whether the income tax amendment to the Federal constitution should be subject to interpretation by any state legislature so far as it might affect the federal income tax payers in that particular state. Would that be any reason why the people of such a state should consider that such a proposed referendum was proper and in harmony with the spirit of the constitution and therefore one to which they should give their earnest consideration and attention in order to determine a policy?

"It would be just as reasonable for a referendum to be taken on the question as to whether any state should be deprived of its representation in the United States Senate without its consent' or whether the guarantee of the United States Federal constitution of a republican form of government should be determined for each state by the interpretation of the legislature of that state.

"There are only two kinds of a referendum legally possible for any provision of the constitution of the United States. One involves the vote of delegates to state conventions called for the purpose of proposing or ratifying a federal amendment. The other involves the vote of the members of both houses of the legislature in each of the states on a federal constitutional amendment. There is only one kind of referendum proper under the constitution for any treaty with any foreign power, and that is in the election of the President of the United States and the United States Senators who are the only officials aside from the President, with any legal voice on such a question.

"There is only one legal and proper kind of referendum on any action, resolution, or law passed by the Congress of the United States, and that is in the election of the 435 Congressman and 96 U. S. Senators representing every state and every Congressional district. Congressmen are elected every two years and one-third of the members of the Senate is elected every two years. The prohibition question has been an issue in most Congressional elections for a quarter of a century. Most of the members of the Congress which submitted the eighteenth amendment had to face that issue in the campaign in which they were elected. The issue has been marked in almost every Congressional election in recent years and in most state and local elections since the adoption of the prohibition amendment. With all the efforts made by the liquor interests and the enemies of prohibition, each of the last five Congresses elected by the direct votes of the people has been drier than its predecessor. The present Congress has a greater dry majority than any Congress which ever sat in the Capitol at Washington. The prohibition amendment was ratified not by the necessary 36 states legislatures but by 46 out of the 48 the largest actual and the largest proportionate number of states that ever ratified any amendment to the Federal constitution.

"The collective vote of all the legislatures of the 48 states registered a majority for ratification of the eighteenth amendment of more than four to one. Thirty-three states were under state-wide prohibition before the national amendment went into effect. Forty-four states now have prohibition codes, committing the states to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. The enemies of prohibition fully understand that there is no hope of modification or repeal by any direct congressional method or by any effort to elect a sufficient number of wet Congressmen and United States Senators to secure such change. Their only hope is by an indirect method where the public will not fully understand all the issues involved. Hence the cleverly worded, cunningly devised, apparently harmless but insidious and vicious so-called referendum in the several states.

"The prohibition forces of the United States will not be led up this referendum blind alley any more than they were willing to be led up the blind alley of newspaper straw ballots. They will give their attention to the election of Congressmen, U. S. Senators, governors, and other executives who will insure the preservation and defense of the constitution of the United States and the maintenance of the prohibition law together with its adequate enforcement.

"There is no right or privilege which the Federal government could possibly give to any local unit of government which that state or which that local unit does not already have with regard to the local or the state phases of the liquor problem. What the enemies of prohibition are now attempting to do through the referendum process is not to get any right or privilege for any city or state which it does not now have so far as all proper local or state phases of the liquor question are concerned. What they want is to have a certain few states or a certain few wet cities to determine by indirect methods, not the proper city or state phases of the prohibition question but the national or federal phases of the prohibition question under the constitution of the United States.

IT IS VERY GRATIFYING.

The advance notices of the Children's Day Services, already held in different parts of the church, which have been published and are reaching me by letter, are very heartening, because they evidence increased interest in the Union Board and its great work, and extra efforts put forth to raise a larger offering than heretofore.

In this way, with the hearty cooperation of the other Sunday schools, the Board will be able to overcome its present financial difficulties, and it confidently expected that cooperation is being given and will be continued.

While what has been reported is very gratifying indeed, there are still a great number of our Sunday schools that have not ordered the supplies for holding a Children's Day Service, although they are sent to our Sunday schools absolutely free of cost.

That represents a double loss, to all such Sunday schools thus deprived of sharing with the other schools of our denomination the enjoyment of the best service that can be held, and losing the missionary information, and impetus born of the service and its objects, and the Union Board loses the financial help of which it stands in great need.

There is ample time to order the supplies, and arrange to hold a service, for you have only to mail me a card at Berwyn, Md., and prompt attention will be given your order. Let me hear from you at once, please.

Bear in mind that we are to award two beautiful Japanese banners again this year, one to the school making the largest offering, and the other to the school making the largest offering in proportion to membership.

To enable the committee to do this properly, please be sure to give the membership of your school when you send the offering to your annual conference treasurer.

And by all means write that "THIS IS THE CHILDREN'S DAY OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS" when sending the offering to your conference treasurer.

The Union Board is entitled to it, but may lose 75 percent of it if the above is not clearly stated. Send it at the earliest possible date after you have held the service. This is very important. The Union Board needs the money NOW, and it ought not to be kept, certainly not used or applied to anything else even temporarily.

We are pleased to report that to date, June 16th, over 900 orders for the Children's Day supplies have been received and filled, and there have been only a very few mistakes in mailing them to their destination.

But I appeal to you, brother superintendent, and pastor, to send in your order, if you have not done so, and help run the number far over 1000 orders. It ought to be done, it can be done by putting forth a little effort and thereby our great foreign missionary enterprise will be relieved of its present financial embarrassment, and be maintained efficiently to accomplish great good.

Remember the Union Board is not in charge of one department of our denomination, as are our other Boards in America but we have in each of three countries all departments of a denomination, and some we do not have in America, for the Union Board is developing a whole denomination in those three countries, and our other Boards only one department each.

We need your help, we confidently expect you will respond to our appeal, and look for your order soon for the supplies, and I am sure that you and your associates will be glad you held a Children's Day Service, for you will have done your duty, and provided your school with the means of creating missionary interest. So may it be.

Plan For Educational Campaign.

The meeting, held in Grace Church in the interest of the High Point College on May 11, directed a committee to put on an educational program, at an early date, and so conduct it as to reach every church in the Conference. Accordingly we have mapped out plans for such a campaign, and we are publishing complete plan herewith. And we are asking everyone who is thus appointed to fall in with the plan and help us to put it over. The failure of any one to respond will break the plan, and thus frustrate the purpose. We trust all will respond. But if because of sickness or distress you cannot fill the place you are asked to take then please secure some one to go in your place, and notify the chairman of the committee.

We are asking that, on the three Sundays designated, congregations will release their pastors for this important service. This is the most important work before us just now, so all of us must respond. Where we have been unable to fill all pulpits pastors will please arrange this as best they can.

—High Point College seems to be well represented at the N. C. C. W. summer school. On Monday evening at 8 o'clock this representation met for the purpose of organizing a High Point College Club. The following officers were chosen: Alice Faulkner, President; Mae Woollen, Vice President; Secretary and Treasurer, Callie Isley; Reporter, Clara Goolsby. There are sixteen members with the following honorary members: Gene Williams, Winifred McCanless, Annie Livengood and Laura Thompson, making a total of 20 members. This club is to meet on Monday night of each week at 7:30.

—The officers of one of the colored companies were having trouble getting the darkies to sign up for sufficient life insurance and detailed one of the negro non-coms to help. This non-com presented the proposition in this way:

"If you is insured Uncle Sam values you at $10,000.00. If you ain't, Uncle Sam don't stand to lose nothin' if you die. Now, I leaves it to you—which bunch of men is Uncle Sam goin' to send to the front line trenches?"

—The minister's wife, while calling on a member of the congregation, mentioned, with excusable pride, that her daughter had won the prize in a music recital.

Her listener at once showed her fellow-feeling.

"I can understand your pride," she said. "I well remember how pleased I was when our pig took the first prize at the agricultural show."

WHO WERE THE RICH MEN?

Who was the richest man in Greece when Homer was reciting his poetry? So asks Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of Chicago.

The bishop seeks to prove that man cannot provide for his immortality by means of money. Not unless he turns that money into a great service which shall endure.

Who was the richest man in the Roman Empire when St. Paul was preaching?

Who was the richest man in France when Joan of Arc led the troops at Orleans?

Who was the richest man in Italy when Savonarola was burned at the stake for his righteousness and his preaching?

Who was the richest man in England when Shakespeare was writing "Lear" and "Hamlet?"

Who was the richest man in the city of Washington when Abraham Lincoln entered that city as President of the United States?

I cannot remember. Do you?—John Carlyle, in the Chicago News.

—The Leslie Dana medal for the year's greatest achievement in the prevention of blindness has been awarded to Miss Louisa Lee Schuyler of New York City, eighty-eight years of age. Some years ago Miss Schuyler discovered for herself what was already well known to medical men—that a large number of the blind do not need to be blind. In that year, 1908, in the schools for the blind in the entire country, twenty-eight children in every hundred had gone blind from sore eyes in babyhood. That discovery prompted Miss Schuyler, then seventy years of age, to action, and as a result of her efforts a country-wide movement was started and the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness was established. Today the percentage of blindness due to sore eyes in infancy has been cut in half, only fourteen children in a hundred blind having lost their sight from that cause. For this reason the managing director of the National Committee pays Miss Schuyler high tribute, saying: "I think it is no exaggeration to say that there are in the United States today tens of thousands who would be handicapped by serious defective vision, if it were not for Miss Schuyler."

Jones had retired from business and had started farming. His former office-manager, who had been brought up on a farm and now much preferred city life, went out to see how Jones was getting on. "When you go out to feed the pigs," he said, "I want to go with you."

"This is not the day for feeding the pigs," replied Jones.

"What do you mean?" inquired the visitor in surprise. "Don't you feed them every day?"

"No, every other day," was the explanation; "how else could I get the layer of fat and the layer of lean that the wife wants in the bacon?"

POLLY GIRL'S NEW HATS.

One morning last summer the postman on Thirteenth Street came to the Merriman house with a big box addressed to "Polly Girl, care Mrs. Merriman." Polly was at the door, and she was so excited over the big box she almost forgot to ask her friend, the postman, about his health and his little girl. But the postman didn't mind, for he knew that big packages always made little girls get excited. And so he just smiled as Polly Girl ran hurriedly in with her big box.

"Gracious me," said Mother Merriman, "who can be sending you such a big box, Polly Girl?"

"I s'pect it is from Aunt May," said Polly Girl, as she untied the strings. Then she gave a little cry of delight as she lifted off the cover. In the box were two dear little hats—one of blue silk with little frills, and the other a little brown straw almost the color of Polly Girl's brown curls.

Polly Girl clapped her small hands with joy. These were her very first hats. Mother Merriman had always made pretty bonnets for her little girl, and a real store hat was something that Polly Girl had not expected.

"I guess Aunt May knew I had started to Sunday school and would like a sure-enough hat," she said joyfully. Then she tried them on, and turned round and round, asking mother how they looked, just as she had seen grown-up ladies do.

Mother said they were lovely, and she also thought Polly a lucky girl to have two hats at the same time.

Polly Girl thought so, too, and then she asked if she might go down the street and show them to the neighborhood grandmother. Mother said yes, and away went Polly Girl, one hat on her curly head, the other in one hand.

An hour later Polly Girl came back, her eyes shining and with only one hat. "Why Polly Girl, what have you done with your other hat?" asked her mother.

"Oh, mother, I gave it to Pinnie!" said Polly Girl. "You see, her papa has been sick and she didn't have any hat. I wanted her to go to Sunday school with me. I really did not need but one hat, so I just gave her the blue one, 'cause it looked just like her eyes, mother dear."

Mother Merriman gave Polly Girl a big hug. "The hats are very pretty, but not half so lovely as my little girl's unselfishness," she said.—Our Little Ones.

BLACKIE.

Once upon a time there was an old mother hen who had twelve baby chicks. They were all fluffy and yellow except one who was so black that he was called Blackie.

Every morning the little girl who lived in the big farmhouse came out to feed the chicks.

"Cluck, cluck, cluck," said the old mother hen, and "Peep, peep, peep!" cried the baby chicks, as if they were saying "Thank you" to the little girl for taking such good care of them.

"Peep, peep," said Blackie, "now that I have had my breakfast I am going to take a journey." And away he hopped from his mother and little brothers and sisters as fast as he could go.

By and by he came to a hole in the fence, and out he went. He found himself on the nice green lawn and very near a lovely big flower bed full of pretty red and yellow tulips.

"What a fine world this is!" thought Blackie. "I'm glad I ran away from the old chicken yard, for it was never so wonderful as this." With that he began scratching around the tulip bed to find something more to eat.

Just then a terrible noise sounded quite near him: "Bow, wow, wow!" It was the little girl's fat brown puppy that was jumping about on his funny big feet, his tongue hanging out in much excitement.

"What are you doing out of the hen yard?" he said. "Go right back, or I shall make you!"

"Peep, peep, peep!" cried frightened Blackie, and away he ran without looking at all to see where he was going.

Before he knew it he hopped right into the middle of a puddle of water. Little chicks do not like water at all, so poor Blackie was more frightened than ever. He fluttered his little wings, took a great hop, and up he jumped on to a smooth stone in the middle of the puddle.

"Peep, peep, peep! Mother, mother!" he cried. But the mother hen was far away in the hen yard and could not even hear him.

The old tabby cat was curled up in the sun on the steps of the farmhouse porch, not far away. The little girl had given her a good saucer of milk, and she was napping after her breakfast.

"Peep, peep, peep!" cried the baby chick from his stone in the puddle. "I want my mother!"

The old tabby cat heard him and came down to see if she could help. She put one paw into the water, but drew it out in a hurry and shook off the drops; then she sat down as if she were trying to think of some other way, for tabby cat did not like to wet her feet.

"Peep! peep! peep! I want my mother! I am afraid I am going to drown."

Bang! went the screen door, and down the porch steps ran the little girl. How she did laugh when she saw little Blackie and the trouble he was in!

"Never mind, Blackie, I'll take you back to your mother," she said, and, picking him up very carefully, she carried him back to the old mother hen.—Mary Collins, in Presbyterian Advance.

"IT STINGETH LIKE AN ADDER."

"No, boys, no whiskey for me," and Donald Murray pushed the wine-glass back upon the table. The four young men who sat at the table looked surprised. "You don't drink, Murray?" said Charley Howard. "I don't drink now," said Murray; "but I did drink in my younger days, and thereby hangs a tale."

"Let's have it," cried Dick Warr "Your stories are always interesting."

"But this is a true story," said yo Murray.

"That's why we want it," said Char Howard.

"Put up your cards, then," said Murr

"We will," said Dick Warren; and for with put the cards in his pocket.

It was a log hut in a lumber camp Wisconsin. The young men were rougl dressed, but were fine and intelligent loo ing. Evidently they were accustomed to fined society, notwithstanding their pre rough surroundings. Donald Murray lean back in his chair and said:

"Yes, boys, I drank when a young m and it was less than six months that my a petite for liquor lasted; but those six mont have left their impress upon my whole li You see, I lived in a little hamlet in sou western Pennsylvania. My father was a go man, a Christian and a strict, not to s stern, father to his children. At that time railroad passed through our district, and needed new ties, and a gang of young m were at work in the mountains cutting the I joined them, partly because I wished earn money, but mainly because I enjoy their society. They were rough fellows, a —they drank. They all drank, and I learn to drink with them—I, who had never ta ed liquor before in my life. Boys, do y know what it is to lead a double life? I As I told you, my father was a church me ber, and night and morning I kneeled wi my parents and sisters at the family alta and lifted my voice with theirs in the hyn of praise when my brain was scarcely fr from the fumes of liquor. My eldest siste Rachel, was a noble girl. Beautiful in for and feature, she was as good as an ang How I loved her! I idolized her.

"Well, boys, that spring a young g from Pittsburgh came to teach our distr school. She was an intimate friend of Rac el's and was just as good as Rachel. We b came acquainted and, to make a long sto short, we were to be married when her scho closed in September. This was in June. Ho I loved that girl! Marion Moore was m ideal of what a woman should be. She looke like a queen, with her tall, majestic figu and her black hair and eyes. Well, summ passed away and the close of Marion's scho was very near; only a few days, and we we to leave for our home in the west. But the was a traitor in the camp, and he disclose to Marion the secret that I drank. She kne this, but was just as cordial in her mann as ever; and believe me, boys, I did inter to stop drinking as soon as we were marrie The school was to close with an exhibitio and on the evening that it took place I wal ed with Marion to the schoolhouse. It w Friday evening, and we were to be marrie the following Monday. It was a lovely eve ing, and, as we walked along, my hea swelled with pride to think that the lovel creature by my side would soon be mine. Sh was very silent, and I made some casual r mark about the bright future before us whe he turned suddenly, fixing her blazing eyes upon my face, and then, boys, the lightning struck me.

"'Never speak to me again, Donald Murray!' she cried. 'I will never marry you! You drink! I will never marry a drunkard!' and she walked on towards the schoolhouse with the tread of a tragedy queen, leaving me standing in the road, transfixed with shame and amazement.

"Well, I slunk into the schoolhouse, crept into the corner, and watched the exercises like one in a dream. The act on the program was a solo, which Marion sang. It was a Scotch song: 'Good night, and joy be wi' you a.'" There she stood—Marion, my Marion no longer—dressed in black velvet, with scarlet geraniums in her bosom and in the clusters of her dark hair; and how her glorious voice pealed out into the darkness! Did you ever hear that song, boys? It is very sweet and plaintive."

Murray was silent a moment, and then, slowly and softly, he whistled the melody; and then, in a sweet tenor voice, he sang the first stanza of the song:

Good night, and joy be wi' and a';
Your harmless mirth has cheered my heart
May life's fell blasts out o'er ye blaw!
In sorrow may we never part!
My spirit lives, but strength is gone,
The mountain fires now blaze in vain;
Remember, sons, the deeds I've done,
And in your deeds I'll live again!

"When the exhibition was over, I escaped from the crowd as quickly as possible, and was rushing blindly along the street in the moonlight when I happened to remember that I had a pint bottle full of whiskey in my coat pocket. I instantly uncorked it and drank it all, and then flung the bottle from me into a meadow. I had scarcely done so when I felt a touch on my arm, and my sister Rachel said, 'Donald, father has sent me over to gran'pa's on an errand; won't you go with me? I am going on the railroad track.' I hesitated a moment and then went with her.

"We passed on swiftly down the moonlighted track, between the glistening rails. Well, boys, that whiskey got into my head in time and I was staggering along, when Rachel's voice, sharp with agony, sounded in my ear, 'Oh, Donald, Donald, you are drunk!' A moment later she seized my arm crying: 'Donald, the night express is coming; get off the track!' But I could not get off. On thundered the train, and when it was almost on us I fell down. Rachel dragged me off the track, and I rolled down the steep bank just as the train thundered by. But above the roar of the train there rose an awful sound, the scream of a woman's voice. It sobered me, and I got up and clambered up the bank, and there upon the ties lay my dear faithful sister, dead—killed by the cars!

"Well, boys the next morning after the funeral I stood by the gate in the lane, thinking sadly of what had transpired, when a quick step sounded behind me on the gravel. I looked around. It was Marion. She fixed her mournful, accusing eyes on my face. 'Do you know what you have done, Donald Murray?' she said. I did not reply. 'Rachel, your lovely, noble sister, died to save your worthless life!' she continued.

"She waited a moment, and then said: 'I am going home to-morrow, and probably never meet again.' She held out her hand; her fingers tightened for a moment over it, and I said: 'Marion, I know that you despise me. I can not tell what the future will bring. All is darkness to me now. I am going away; and, believe me, Marion, I shall yet be a man that can help the world.' 'Will you, Donald?' she said, and her eyes were full of tears. 'God help you!' and passed quickly down the lane. I never saw her again. She died five years ago."

Murray was silent for a few moments, and then, in a strangely altered voice he said. "Boys, I pass over the few days that followed. I had to tell Rachel and realize that Marion would not marry me, and the reason why, and that I was going west. They did not oppose my going. Father said, 'Let the boy go; it may be the means of saving him.'

"Well, boys, I sat in the bedroom the night before leaving home and if there was never but one broken-hearted fellow in this world, I was that one. I had lost everything. Marion and Rachel, sister, everything! I sat there in the darkness, for there was no moon, and then it was 12 o'clock—a strange thing happened. I felt something—a strong power it was—rise within me. A sudden desire to break away from bad habits, and to be a man took possession of me. I got up, groped my way to the bureau to the table, got hold of my Bible, laid my left hand upon it, lifted my right hand to heaven, and said, just loud enough for God and the angels to hear, 'I will not drink from this time on!' stooped and kissed the book. Then I undressed and went to bed and slept soundly until morning. In my subsequent life you know what I was. But from that day to this day I have kept that vow. My daughters, Rachel and Marion, can tell you that I never drink."

A silence like death was in the room. The four young men sat with pale faces and eyes bright with excitement. Finally Charley Howard broke the spell. He sprang to his feet, crying, "Boys, let's all take that oath!" and he lifted his right hand to heaven. Dick Warren rose, but the other two hesitated. "Come!" cried Charley Howard; "stand up! let's be men!" Then they rose slowly, and all four stood with right hands raised to heaven.

"What was the oath you repeated?" said Charley Howard to Murray. "I forswear drink from this time on!" said Murray, in a deep, solemn voice, and slowly and reverently the four young men repeated in chorus. "I forswear drink from this time on!" adding a fervent "So help me, God!" and sat down.

All was silent save the soughing of the wind in the pines about the little cabin; and as Donald Murray's careful eyes in that silent room one could almost imagine that the angels leaned over the battlements of heaven and whispered, "All is well!"—Christian Cynosure.

VILLAGES HAVE MORE MINISTERS PER CAPITA THAN THE CITIES.

In the villages of the United States, there are more ministers and professional men of any other class according to a report just issued by the Institute of Social and Religious Research, New York City.

Given access to previously unpublished census data for 177 agricultural villages selected to be as representative as possible for the entire United States, Dr. C. Luther Fry made an interpretative study of this material as a part complete in itself, of the Institute's comprehensive survey of American agricultural villages.

"Taking up the functions performed by villages in the field of organized religion," he says, in his report entitled AMERICAN VILLAGERS, "the census facts show that there are 776 clergymen living in the 177 villages, or an average of more than four to each village. The variations from the average are marked—one small far-western village has no ministers while a large southern center has fifteen.

"The number of ministers living in villages varies from region to region and also with size of the villages concerned. The number of clergymen for every ten villages averages thirty-five in the Far West, thirty-eight in the Middle Atlantic, forty-five in the Middle West and forty-four in the South.

"Large villages naturally have more ministers than small places. Only nineteen of the sixty-nine small villages have more than three resident clergymen each, while all but three of the thirty-seven large villages have more than this number.

"In relation to the total population, the proportionate number of ministers steadily decreases with the increasing size of the village.....On the average, the number of clergymen in villages is three or four to each thousand men, women and children. In the small villages of each region this proportion is decidedly higher than in the large ones, with medium-size villages falling in between. On the whole the relative number of clergymen living in the villages of each region is roughly twice as large as in cities.

"The very high proportion of ministers living in villages is explained, at least, in part, by the fact that village ministers serve not only village populations but those of the open country. On this point, it is interesting to note that the Institute, through its field investigations, secured information about the number of members of village churches that live in the open country.

"These data were obtained for 609 of the 648 white Protestant churches in the 140 villages surveyed, and for fifty-seven Protestant Negro churches in the South. They show that 27,297 of the 76,515 members of the white Protestant churches in villages, 36 per cent live in the open country.

"The fifty-two Negro churches have 1,318 open-country members in a total membership of 4,008. In other words, one-third of the church members that belong to village churches come from the open country. Even if one corrects for the open-country members that belong to village churches, the relative number of ministers in villages is still disproportionately high compared with the relative number in cities.

"The South, which has proportionately the largest number of ministers living in villages, has the lowest proportion—one-quarter—of open-country people as members of village churches; while the Far West, which has, on the whole, the smallest number of ministers, has the highest proportion—three-eighths—of its members living in the open country. In other words, the number of village ministers in proportion to the opportunities they serve is comparatively high in the South and low in the West."

West End, Greensboro.—In the absence of our pastor, who has been away for two Sundays speaking in the interest of the High Point College campaign, Rev. T. A. Sikes, D., editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, preached a most helpful and inspiring sermon Sunday morning. In the evening the pastor delivered a splendid sermon from the subject, "A New Name."

A number of our Christian Endeavorers attended the State Christian Endeavor Convention held in High Point last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Osborne and daughter, Miss Margaret, attended Home Coming service at Mount Zion Church, Pinnacle Charge, last Sunday. This is Mrs. Osborne's old home church, and they visited with relatives while there.

Mrs. Belle Edwards, one of our faithful members, has gone to make her home with her sister in Norfolk, Virginia. She was accompanied by her nieces, Misses Hazel, Mabel and Stella Bull, who will visit in Norfolk for a few weeks.

One of the best meetings the Foust Bible Class has ever enjoyed was held on the lawn of the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Edwards on the Winston-Salem Road Thursday night. A large number of members and visitors attended. In celebration of Mr. Edwards' birthday his friends presented to him a number of gifts. This class is planning a camping trip to the mountains the 5th of July.

Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Waynick invited the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and their husbands to their lovely new home on Northbridge Street for the June meeting. Mrs. Lynch, a member of the Methodist Protestant Church in Charlotte, was a very welcome visitor, and in a few well chosen words expressed her pleasure in being there. A very interesting program was carried out and during the social hour Mrs. Sam Bosher and Rev. E. Lester Ballard delighted the many visitors with several solos.

Mrs. L. E. Cagle was hostess to the Woman's Home Missionary Society Monday afternoon at her home on Highland Avenue. The attendance and splendid program was proof of the good work this society is doing under the leadership of Mrs. J. K. Osborne.

Reporter.

Bellemont Church, Mt. Hermon Circuit.—We are glad to report that our Sunday school is still progressing. Mr. Wayne Curtis is our superintendent and is always at his post of duty. The attendance is very good, but let's endeavor to make it still better.

We held memorial services the 4th Sunday in May. Quite a large number was present. Rev. W. F. Ashburn preached the sermon and it was good. After the sermon, all marched to the cemetery carrying many pretty flowers with which to decorate the graves. Not a grave was left without a flower upon it.

A Memorial Association has been organized with Mr. Roy Sharpe Pres. and Miss Carrie Nicholson Sec.

A committee was appointed to devise a plan by which to raise funds and purchase a few acres of land lying in front of our church, for the purpose of building a good road from the highway into the church and the extension of the cemetery as needed. committee appointed were Mr. W. H. an, Mr. J. H. Hawks, and Mr. Roy rpe.

Rev. H. L. Isley preached for us the 5th nday at eleven o'clock. He gave us a fine mon, which every one seemed to enjoy so ch. We were glad to have him with us, and e he will come again.

Rev. W. F. Ashburn had to be away to fill appointment at another church.

t has not been decided yet, when we will d our Children's Day services.

Prayer meetings are still held weekly and are very well attended.

Our special meeting will embrace the 4th nday in September. Pray for us that we y have a great revival.

Mrs. Noah Williams.

West Lexington, S. Davidson Charge.—Af- a silence of a few weeks we will break the ence with a report of our work here at est Lexington. Our Sunday school and urch work has been moving along allright ce our last report. The Sunday school at- ndance has held up splendidly during the rm weather until Sunday when the cool. ny weather hit us, and the thermometer of e Sunday school dropped about one hun- ed "degrees." There were 49 present in nday school last Sunday, which was about 0 less than the ordinary attendance.

Rev. George L. Reynolds, pastor of Pleasant Grove church, was present for the regular service and delivered a message in the interest of the educational campaign now on in our conference. He was accompanied by a layman whose name this "scribe" did not learn. No night service was held on account of the rainy weather.

Our revival began on the first Sunday night and closed on Wednesday night following the second Sunday in the month. Rev. J. I. Trollinger, pastor of the First Church, Thomasville, was with us for every service after the first service, and did some of the best preaching that has ever been heard in the West Lexington church, according to some of the elder members. His sermons were full of gospel truth, and they were delivered in a most forceful and convincing manner. One discouraging feature of the services was the small number of unsaved people who attended the services. At one of the services Bro. Trollinger asked for the uplifted hand of all Christians, and every person raised their hand. There were only a few unsaved persons at the different services. Six persons professed faith in Christ and accepted Him as their personal savior during the meeting, and a number of the church members professed to be revived. Two persons gave their names for church membership at the last service. While the visible results of the revival were not as great as we had expected, we still believe the influence of the gospel seed sown by Brother Trollinger will have a lasting effect upon the people who heard them. We were glad to have had Miss Berta Crutchfield of the Orange Charge, with us during the entire meeting. She assisted in the services by playing the organ very effectively. Rev. N. G. Bethea, of State Street church, attended several services and led the singing in a most splendid manner. Mr. Waters, a musician, also assisted very greatly in the music with his bell effect instrument.

The preachers and organist, namely Trollinger, Crutchfield and Miss Crutchfield, were entertained in the homes of members of the church during the revival meeting, being given dinner and supper at a different place each day. They were thus entertained in the following homes: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Koonts Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Easter, Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Way, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Kindley, Mrs N. F. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Yates, Mr and Mrs. C. L. Hedrick, (in the country) Rev. and Mrs. N. G. Bethea, of State Street Church entertained them for supper one night and Mr. Albert H. Evans, also of State Street church, gave them breakfast a number of mornings. This preacher appreciates the good dinner he enjoyed with the evangelistic party on Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Yates.

On the second Sunday in this month it was my pleasure to try to preach twice. In the morning we were at Jamestown church filling Brother Crutchfield's appointment while he went to Thomasville to preach in Brother Trollinger's place. In the evening we went to the First Church, Thomasville, to fill Brother Trollinger's appointment while

THE FIRST CHILDREN'S DAY.

Mildred Olive Somers.

The hot Syrian sun was beating down on the market-place. In a little patch of shade near the village well, two boys were resting. Some women, balancing their brimming water-jars on their heads, made their way slowly across the sun-baked clay of the market-place.

The smaller lad leaned forward eagerly. "Didst hear what they said? 'He maketh the blind to see.'"

"Aye, I heard. Some say He is an impostor."

"Dost thou think so?"

"He is no impostor. Last night by this very well He healeth a man with a shrunken arm. With my own eyes I saw Him."

"You saw Him?"

"Yea, Samuel. 'Tis said He maketh the lame to walk."

"The lame to walk!"

A brown hand clutched the larger boy's shoulder. "Levi! Levi! Tell me, where is He now?"

"He spent the night at the house of Peter the Carpenter. 'Tis said that He was a carpenter, over in Nazareth."

Samuel leaped to his feet. His sandals flew across the market-place. Levi sped after him.

"Samuel," he shouted, "whither goest thou?"

"Dorcas," panted Samuel.

"Dost think"—

Samuel ran on. "Hasten. We may be too late."

Along the hot, dusty road they sped and up the hill to a humble cottage where Esther the mother of Samuel was patiently grinding corn in a rude hand-mill.

Samuel rushed into the house and as quickly rushed out bearing in his arms little Dorcas, his four-year-old sister, the baby who never had walked. With a word to the busy mother, the three started down the hill. The child was heavy, but hope gave strength to Samuel's slender arms and in due time they arrived at the home of Peter the Carpenter.

"Is He here, the Nazarene?"

"Early this morning He and His followers left us. What wouldst thou with the Nazarene?" Then his glance fell on the child with the withered foot. "Ah, thou hast heard of His power to heal." He shook his head.

"He is no impostor," burst out Levi. "He healed a man with a shrunken arm. With my own eyes I saw Him."

"Yea, lad. The words of the Nazarene are rich in wisdom and marvelous are the miracles He has wrought. Day after day, the people throng about Him, begging Him to heal their diseases until He own strength is well-nigh spent. But never yet have I heard that He healed a child. Hast thou a mother?"

Samuel nodded. His eyes were full of tears.

"Take the child home to her, lad. Forget the Nazarene. Ere now He hath arrived in Amathus."

Resolutely, Samuel took the child on his back and started down the white, hot road.

"Whither now, Samuel?" asked Levi.

And Samuel answered, "To find the Nazarene."

The way was long. The merciless sun beat down. Little Dorcas whimpered. Once they stopped to rest beside a brook, then Levi took the child and on they trudged. At every house they asked about the Nazarene—receiving always the same answer, "He hath passed this way." One kind woman gave them all the milk they could drink, and a packet of figs to carry with them.

The day was well spent when they arrived in Amathus. Little Dorcas was sleeping, her dark curls falling over her brother's shoulder. The boy's arms ached with her weight. His feet burned in his sandals.

Levi bore the remainder of the cherished figs.

Suddenly, far ahead, they saw a wide-spreading tree and under it a group of people.

"'Tis He!" Levi shouted. "Hasten, Samuel, 'tis the Nazarene."

Almost stumbling in their eagerness, they pressed forward to the edge of the crowd. Now they could see the Nazarene Himself, a stately figure clad in purple white, and about His head seemed to gather all the sunshine of that sunny afternoon.

Samuel shook little Dorcas until her brown eyes opened. His heart was beating so fast it almost choked him as he pushed through the crowd toward the majestic figure.

Then rough hands pushed him back and impatient voices muttered, "Be gone and. The Master is weary."

The crowd parted for Levi and Samuel took to the road, for they were so tired. The way had been long and little Dorcas began to cry, and Samuel saw tears welled up in her brother's eyes.

Then a voice spoke sweeter than the tinkle of sheep bells across the Jordan Valley "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

Now the crowd parted, the three children were thrust forward to the feet of the Stranger. The golden head and the drowsy brown eyes of the little Dorcas looked into the kind, kindly eyes of the Man of Nazareth. He lifted her to His knee and with the utmost gentleness His fingers touched the baby's withered foot. His other hand rested in tender benediction on the tousled dusty head of the kneeling Samuel. And the tired boy forgot his weariness, forgot the heat and the long way—for again the sweet voice spoke:

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

That evening, just as the shadows fell across the market-place, up the hill went Samuel and little Dorcas, shouting, running, leaping!—to the mother who waited with outstretched arms.—Zion's Herald.

OLD DAYS AND NEW.

A West Virginia editor tells the story of a town [illegible] that may be duplicated in many throughout the United States today. This paper relates:

"Under the jurisdiction of the college" means it is explained, from the time a student takes possession of her room in September until the college closes in June with the exception of the Christmas and Easter vacations, and at all times when at her own home; overnight absences or absences for a longer time when not under the care of a college chaperon; during the day when visiting at the home of a friend out of town, or when in company of her parents out of town.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Woods.

Miss Mildred B. Woods, familiarly known "Aunt Millie," was the oldest daughter Wilson and Princess Ann Woods. She was rn and reared near Red Mountain in ange County. The date of her birth is Ju- 9, 1834. Her departure from this life was the 26 of April, 1926. Her age is 81 years, ne months and 17 days.

In her early womanhood she removed with r parents to Saxapahaw, in Alamance unty, and remained there for thirty years. out the year 1897 she went to Graham to e, and the remainder of her life was spent and near that place. At the time of her ath, and for several years prior to her ath, her home was with her brother, Mr. . D. Woods on the Graham-Burlington ad.

"Aunt Millie" lived a quiet, unpretent- is, industrious life. She held a very long cord for textile mill service—probably ger than any other person in Alamance unty. Practically her entire life was spent textile industry in this and in Orange unty. She was faithful in service, and un- lfish and friendly in disposition, and these alities won for her the confidence of her ployers and the esteem of her associates. erybody seemed to love "Aunt Millie."

Early in life she became a christian, and r several years prior to her death she held r membership at the Graham M. P. church. ne was loyal to Christ and faithful to her urch. Her last illness lasted for more than year and during this period she was bed- st most of the time, but the patience and ristian fortitude that had characterized r long life was unfailing to the last.

She was visited by the writer a number of nes during her sickness and she gave as- rance during it all of her confidence and pe in Christ. We have no doubt that Aunt Millie" is at rest.

The funeral service was held at the home her brother, Mr. W. D. Woods, and was nducted by the writer, owing to the illness her pastor, Rev. D. R. Williams. Interment as in the Graham cemetery. Under the flow- s that marked her grave her body was gen- ly laid to rest to await the morning of the surrection.

Besides her brother, Mr. W. D. Woods, she survived by one sister, Mrs. M. J. Hughes Randleman. For these and all the other rrowing relatives and friends we extend ristian sympathy. May her God be their od, and her heaven their heaven.

Mrs. Glenn Shaw Holt.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has en fit to remove from our midst Mrs. Glenn haw Holt,

Therefore be it resolved:

First, That we bow to his Divine will, who oeth all things well.

Second, We record with pride the splendid cord she made during her stay among us. She was a devoted church member, wife, and mother, and always a friend in need.

Third, That through this loss we are brought to realize more fully the great distress of the members of her family, and to them we extend our heartfelt sympathy trusting the Master will dispell their grief, with the light of faith, and that we shall meet again in that Eternal Land where there is no more parting.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies, a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication, and a copy be sent to the family.

Beavans.

Mrs. Walter Beavans, age seventy six years, passed into life eternal June 14, 1926. His going was not unexpected, for he had been a patient sufferer several months and desired to go and be at rest. After telling those dear to him to "serve the Lord with mind, body, soul and strength" he bade them good-bye and soon fell asleep.

Mr. Beavans was born near Enfield and spent his life in the same house where he was born. He was a successful farmer and a highly esteemed leader in all progressive movements in his community and county.

He was a much loved member and officer of Whitakers Chapel Methodist Protestant church and many times represented his charge in the anual conferences. He was devoted to his family, loyal to his church, faithful to his God and a lover of his fellowman. A man of true culture, broad sympathy and cheerful disposition.

The deceased leaves a widow, Mrs. Addi Powell Beavans, one daughter, Mrs. I. C. Whitaker, one grand daughter, Miss Virginia Whitaker, two sisters, Mrs. W. D. Bustin and Mrs. C. S. Whitaker.

The funeral was conducted in the home by the writer, his pastor, and the body was laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery at Whitaker's Chapel to await the day of resurrection.

"How blest the righteous when he dies!
When sinks a weary soul to rest,
How mildly beams the closing eyes,
How gently heaves the expiring breast!
So fades a summer cloud away:
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er:
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore.
Life's labor done as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies,
While heaven and earth combine to say!
'How blest the righteous when he dies.'"

—The North Carolina Democratic executive committee, by a vote of 48 to 10 went on record as favoring abolishment of the two-thirds and unit rules in selecting the presidential candidate at the national convention. The Tennessee Democratic state committee had previously voted 12 to 9 for the same purpose.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JULY 4.

Israel Enslaved in Egypt.

Lesson Text: Exodust 1:14.

Golden Text: Ps. 94:14.

The Central Truth: The enslaving of the Israelites to a tyrannical ruler is a type of the bondage by consent of the sinner to Satan, the archdemon of hell.

Scriptural Points.

1. The rapid increase of the children of Israel in Egypt was a sure manifestation of divine favor. It awakened apprehension and jealousy in the minds of the Egyptian rulers.

2. "A new King,....which knew not Joseph." This is thought to be Rameses II. For several hundred years Joseph's influence was powerful and brought many favors to the Israelites. But this new king cared nothing for the great benefits that Joseph conferred upon the nation. His jealousy lest the Israelites might rebel and get out of the land became so acute that he devised measures to prevent this possible danger.

3. "Let us deal wisely with them." This proposed wisdom was not the wisdom of kindness that might have won Israel's loyalty and friendship for all time. It was the wisdom of tyrannical force, of abject subjugations, of slavish helplessness. It was the old shrewd way of dealing with subject peoples.

4. It seems that the measure of freedom that they had enjoyed for three centuries was now taken from them. They were reduced to the level of bond slaves. Hard, cruel taskmasters were set over them. Heavy burdens of labor were placed upon them. Everything was done to crush the spirit and retard the increase of the people of God.

5. But these afflictions of hard bondage had the opposite effect of what was intended. Instead of lowering the birthrate, this method increased it. "The more they afflicted them the more they multiplied."

6. "And they were grieved because of the children of Israel." They became exasperated and even angry in the disappointment and failure of their plans.

7. "They made their lives bitter with hard bondage." This monarch was like Rehoboam who proposed this tyrannical treatment of his subjects: "My father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father chastized you with whips, I will chastize you with scorpions." This sort of treatment, with the attempted destruction of male children must have lasted quite a hundred years For Moses was born during this regime, and he was eighty years old when he undertook, under God, the deliverance of his people.

Practical Points.

1. The "sweat-shop" is a modern method of bitter bondage. Men and women are compelled by covetous and unscrupulous employers to toil just for enough to keep soul and body together. Such employers fully as bad as the oppressor of the Israelites.

2. Child labor is another form of modern oppression. Children are required to work in factories, their growth is stunted, and they become largely incapacitated for the larger responsibilities of manhood and womanhood.

3. The drug habit enslaves and ruins body and soul. It is a worse slavery than that which Israelites had to endure. It is more devitalizing and fatal.

4. Corrupt politics is responsible for many heavy burdens. Dishonest politicians make themselves rich at the expense of the taxpayers. Unjust taxation is highway robbery. A protective tariff law serves to impoverish the productive laborer and enrich the favored manufacturer.

5. The devil is the tyrant in chief who fosters all tyranny and oppression. He is the power behind the throne of wickedness in all the worlds. He is the real ruler of the kingdoms of this world. Whatever good government we have is due to influence of Christian principles and in spite of the devices of the deceptive powers of darkness.

6. Satan is the arch-deceiver of our race. He promises "the pleasures of sin for a season." These are baits to lure lost souls into eternal perdition. He not infrequently appears as an angel of light to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. And when he gets his victims securely in his grasp, he throws off his angelic mask and becomes a lion of utter destruction.

7. Sin, with its attendant corruption and habit, is the worst form of slavery. "He that committeth sin is the bond-slave of sin." To serve sin is to invite destruction and torment for evermore.

8. Jesus Christ, by virtue of His atonement for sin, is our Deliverer or Savior from sin and its dreadful bondage. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

9. Every one is endowed with moral freedom, the privilege of choice. The gospel calls upon every one to reject sin and death and choose righteousness and eternal life. Be wise unto salvation, and make the choice. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6:23.

THE RULING PASSION.

"We cannot have two passions," said Hunt, the eminent artist. "No man can paint and love money." For substantiation of Hunt's sweeping statement one need but call the roll of earth's immortal artists. The moment a brush—or, for that matter, a pen or a violin bow or a voice—becomes mercenary, it falls like Lucifer from heaven. Commercialism blights every great gift it touches. It is black frost to the soul itself. Nobody can drive the team of two ruling passions. "I sing to God," said Jenny Lind of her great talent. That was her passion. I cannot imagine her as selling her gift. And any discriminating audience would recognize the difference. Without sacrilege no one can sell any part of himself. Time, strength, devotion, ministry, love—to sell such things is merely a new version of the world-old tragedy of slavery. Imagine Jesus making a fixed charge for His kindness or forgiveness! The best that He had, all that He had to offer—even His life itself—was a gift. "Wherefore God hath given Him a name that is above every name." He is the model. The nearer we approach to the model, the diviner our contribution to the world.—George Clarke Peck.

WHAT THE SHEPHERD DID.

Whatever Christ sets out to do he does completely. He is an "uttermost" Saviour. The story is told of a Christian father who told his little boy of a lost lamb; how it had found a hole in the fence and had crawled through, glad to get away, skipping and playing in the sunshine, until it wandered so far that it could not find its way back. Then a wolf got on its track, chased it, but finally the Good Shepherd rescued it and carried it safely back to the fold. The little fellow listened intently until the lamb, wounded and bleeding, was safely in the fold, when he exclaimed, "Say, papa, did He nail up the hole in the fence?" That illustration is often used to show the importance of setting up safeguards to protect children and grown people from certain forms of sin. But it is superficial to use the illustration in that way. Christ, the Good Shepherd, did indeed "nail up the hole in the fence," but the nails went through his own hands and feet. All human attempts to "nail up the hole" are worthless. Christ interposed with his own body, and by his death and resurrection he made it possible for little folks and grown folks, "whosoever will," to get within the eternal fold of safety.—Selected.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF SATAN?

Haven't you been missing him of late? Haven't you noticed that he is not now spoken of as frequently as he once was? And when he is mentioned, haven't you detected a tone of lightness in the voice of the speaker, much as if he were speaking of Santa Claus?

Why this change in the thought and speech of people regarding the arch enemy of mankind?

We presume the most common explanation is this: That people have ceased to take Satan seriously because they do not wish to believe in him; they do not like unpleasant thoughts, and the thought of Satan is decidedly unpleasant. Polite society has decreed that Satan shall be unmentionable, and to enforce its decree it has declared his nonexistence. To account for the former belief in him, it has invented the hypothesis that Satan was simply a creation of the Hebrew mind. It seems not to have paused to consider that Satan might possibly be a revelation to the Hebrew mind. It suited its purpose better to regard Satan as a pure fiction, and so he was listed as such along with Santa Claus and other noted names of fiction.

That Jesus spoke of Satan as a reality does not prevent polite society from ruling Satan out of existence, though it is a puzzling thing that Jesus who came to declare the truth should have allowed himself to declare error when he came to speak on so important a subject as that of a personal devil. There is plenty of evidence that Satan is and that he is working vast and terrible evil in the world, but men have cried out, Away with such an unpleasant thought: and for this reason we rarely hear of Satan today.

Then there is another cause pointed out by a recent writer. He credits Calvinism with the achievement of exorcising the devil from the mind of the world. Yes, he says Calvinism has gotten rid of the Devil by putting God in Satan's place! This is rather severe on Calvinism but we are not sure that there is not more than a grain of truth in it.

A PREACHER SEEKS A SMALLER CHARGE.

Rev. Tertius Van Dyke, son of Dr. Henry Van Dyke, has resigned the pastorate of Park Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, to accept a little village pastorate in Connecticut. This is surprising, but it is approved by others.

In explaining his action, Mr. Van Dyke thus speaks of the people of New York:

"People here have an utter disregard for religion. I am not now referring to the people who are in the church. I refer to the general situation. New York's whole mode of life, and our civilization in general is jazzy, cheap and vulgar. The whole tone of life here is unspeakably vulgar.

"Religion is placed on a competitive basis with such worldly things as sports, theaters, cards and social engagements of all kinds. People have no time for church, forgetting that religion is the real basis of life. They seem to think that the church is a place for entertainment and social diversion rather than a place of quiet worship. I regret to say that the dent religion makes on New York is pretty small.

"If I would put on a red vest and announce that I would give a trapeze performance in church my church would be crowded. They would flock to the church to witness a circus. People who never could be drawn to church by the urge of religion and a sincere desire to worship would flock to such a performance in large numbers. New Yorkers are obsessed with a desire for sensations and thrills."

Mr. Van Dyke may find a more congenial atmosphere in the Connecticut village, but there is a loud call for somebody to preach to New Yorkers. It may be that Mr. Van Dyke was not adapted to the work in New York, but the reasons he gives do not justify leaving New Yorkers without the Gospel. Evidently they need it and need it badly.

THROWING STONES FROM A GLASS HOUSE.

Dr. S. Parks Cadman recently made a speech in which he proposed a return to "ritual and symbolism" in a "reconstruction of Protestantism." For this he has been severely taken to task by The Fellowship Forum.

We cannot look with any favor upon Dr. Cadman's proposal that we seek deepened spirituality through ritualism and symbolism, but we are rather surprised that rebuke should come from such a source. Is not The Fellowship Forum the organ of a fraternal organization that vies with the church of Rome in the use of ritual and symbolism? If we are mistaken on this point, we should like to be set right.

WHOSOEVER.

My heart leaps as I see that word "whosoever." Had it not fastened itself upon my attention, I doubt if my poor, discouraged, sin-wrecked heart would have had the courage to bring its burden to the foot of the cross. Oh, the blessed redemption of Jesus. Is nailed a place for me, and it will open for you, my brother, into the peace of God.—Ex.

THE CHURCH, WHICH IS HIS BODY.

It is a deeply solemn thought, and one quick with inspiration and hope, that the Spirit of the Living Christ seeks reincarnation in the fellowship of those who believe in Him. In vital reality He would be embodied in the corporate life of our own day. His Spirit would be the breath and motive of all our movements, "the very pulse of the machine." The scriptural metaphor is no remote figure of speech dimly hinting at the wonderful possibilities of the children of men. It is literally and scrupulously true. The Word is even now seeking to become flesh. The Divine Spirit is seeking and claiming human forms in which to manifest His truth and grace. And this mystic embodiment is to begin with His Church. The Church is to be to the living Christ what the human form of Jesus was two thousand years ago. The Church is to live Christ, to express Christ, to give Christ's Spirit visibility in human life and service. The Church is to be His body, and in the church the world is to realize the presence of the Lord and to feel the power of His virtue and grace. J. H. Jowett, in "Life in the Heights."

LETTER FROM INDIA.

Dear Dr. McCulloch:

In the last letter I stated that I would tell something of the difficulties in becoming a Christian in this land. There are many complex problems which must be solved when the Hindu or Mohammedan wishes to change his religion. But the only one I shall mention here is the caste system. The party desiring to become a Christian hesitates to make any move which will separate him from all that is near and dear in this world. The relatives dislike to have a member leave the family and be disgraced. This is especially true of the higher caste people as the Christians are considered a very low caste. However, among the very lowest caste they are considered higher when they become Christians. In the case we shall consider now the caste is good and the fight is hard.

I think I could not explain some of the difficulties better than giving a recent convert. I know his condition personally and can speak first hand about the experience.

About eight months ago a young man by the name of Daulet Patil came to Dhulia from his village, about fourteen miles away. While in town he made enquiries about some people whom he knew years ago. He was told that these people had become Christian and lived about four miles from Dhulia. As he wanted to see them again he went by the settlement on his way home. But there was another man with him from his village and he was not very much interested in the farm people. It was near meal time when they called but as they were of different castes they could not eat together nor could the women of our people prepare them food. So the preacher gave them some flour and they prepared their own meal. But the other man who came with Daulet would not eat, so when they returned to their village he told the people that Daulet ate with the Christians and that they were low caste. This displeased his people very much but as he liked the people he again visited them and this time I understand ate with them instead of cooking it himself. And he also became very much interested in Christ, so much so that he came with the people to a Sunday service. When he went home from this visit the people decided that he had gone far enough so if he was not punished he would disgrace the family which is one of the best in town. His father was the Police Patil, which means that he was the biggest man in the town and was the headman of his village. His father died several years ago and his father's brother became Patil. As is often the custom all these people lived in the same house and had all things in common. So to await proper punishment they put him in a room and locked the door. They had told him that they were going to cut off his nose when his mother and a relative (a lawyer) came. But one of his friends came to the back door and he asked him to let him out. He broke the lock and in the night Daulet stole away with only the clothes he wore. He found a cart loaded with cotton coming to Dhulia so he lay down on top the cart and made the trip to Dhulia. He planned to go on farther but when he arrived in Dhulia he was too ill with fever to go on. So he came to the mission to stay until he recovered. We have a rule that no one can come to the mission and live to become a Christian. But as he was ill we could not say that he should go elsewhere. So he stayed with some of our people and ate with the school boys.

As he had already made his decision to become a Christian he soon asked for a Bible and had the people tell him about our religion. His fever did not leave him all at once but would come back ever so often. But when he was able to sit up he was reading his Bible. He read from morning till night and asked the masters about all he did not understand. Soon he had finished the whole of the Bible. Yet he did not ask to be baptised, which is quite unusual as they usually ask to be baptised before they know much about the teachings of our religion.

After finishing his Bible and had gotten rid of his fever he began to take a keen interest in the farm work on the compound. So I saw that he was a very valuable man. He has never done work himself but he knew all about farming in the locality in which we live. Soon instead of wanting him to go we were glad to have him stay.

On Easter morning we had an early morning service and the Lord's Supper. He had never witnessed the Holy Communion before but he wanted to come to the table when the invitation was given. But one of the big boys told him that he should not go. So after the service he came to me and asked why he should not take the communion with the rest I explained and he soon saw the reason and immediately asked to be baptised. That afternoon we called the farm people in to Dhulia to witness his baptism and after the service we gave the farm people and him the communion together.

I have told the story at length because I consider this young man as one of the most promising men we have baptised since the beginning of the mission. He was married but three years ago his wife died. We are now planning to put him in charge of our poultry and allow him to continue the study of his Bible.

Here are some of the things he has or is still suffering for the cause of Christ.—He did not suffer much physically as he stayed in the room only a few hours but he has lost his caste and become lower in the eyes of all high caste people. To his own people he is defiled and is worse than dead. He has forsaken home, mother, good name, lands and all one could have in this world without religion. His hands showed that he had never worked as they always had servants to do all the work. But he now has hard hands like the rest of our farm hands. His home was not a place of wealth but according to Indian standards he had a plenty. Now he has nothing more than the clothes on his back and unless his people change he will never get anything from his people. Since coming he has not received one cent for his work and we have only given him some clothes. His life is in danger all the while now as his people may come at any time and do him harm. He is so afraid that he has not gone into the city of Dhulia once since coming to the mission. In reality he has left all for Christ, and seems to be happy in his trials.

Mrs. Minnis and I are now on our vacation, about fifteen hundred miles from Bombay, in the Himalayas. It seems good indeed to be here where it is cool after four years of heat. We see lots of snow here and have snowballed a little. We are living in a house-boat even if we are more than a thousand miles from the sea. It is a new but very pleasant experience to live on the water for two months yet not feel sea-sick. Even though this is a house on a boat yet we have all the conveniences of a home including electric lights. We travel at wish and see while we travel and see all there is to be seen as the boat is pulled by men from the bank or pushed by means of long poles. We can travel one hundred miles on the river and many more on the many lakes here.

We have seen so many new and strange things that we hesitate to begin telling of the trip. We came through Agra and Delhi, two large cities full of interesting sights such as are not seen any where else in the world. At Agra is the Taj Mahal, a lovely building built almost entirely of marble. It is the only object of any importance in the whole land built in honor of a woman. It was built by a king to his wife, in which she was buried. He too was buried by her side, in the most beautiful building in the world. It took seventeen years to build it by using twenty thousand workmen daily. The cost in dollars would go into the millions. Much of the stone used in the building was brought hundreds of miles before the time of trains.

The king who built this wonderful building was a Mohammedan and to be popular with all his people he married three wives. One a Hindu, one a Mohammedan, and the third a Christian. It was the Mohammedan wife who was buried in the Taj Mahal. The Hindu wife was buried in a Hindu temple. Mrs. Minnis anl I made a special trip to see the grave of his Christian wife. We found a great building but when we came to her grave we found that it was only a cement or plaster slab. The splendid grounds in which she is buried is now the property of the Church of England.

Here in Kashmir we find one thing which interests us very much as it is unlike anything we have ever seen before. There is a large lake near the city of Sprinager, the Capitol of this district. On this lake are what is called floating gardens. They are actually floating on the water ike a boat, and to keep them on the right farm they have to be staked out like a cow. They are made by throwing grass, and leaves and so on in the water and putting earth on that. They are not many feet wide but may be hundreds of feet in length and with long poles they are staked to the bottom of the lake. The people take the vegetable growth from the bottom of the lake and make small round balls in which they plant seed and when the time comes ey put these hills of beans or cucumbers melons on the floating gardens.

As this is several hundred miles north of ulia it puts us about on the same latitude North Carolina. We have enjoyed seeing ain the vegetables, fruits, and flowers of e temperate zone. Yet we must keep on our k hats as the sun is not so kind as in The d North State.

Here we find the people, their language, d the country as much different as one orarly find in visiting a different country. e are glad to find that English is rapidly coming the tongue of the whole land. Until u are here you cannot know the difficulties having so many different languages. For ample:—When I send a letter to Dhulia I ust write in Marathi, but how will the peo- here read it. Yet if I write it in English ey at Dhulia will not be able to read it. in the address we write it both in Mara- and in English.

THE CONTRAST.

While some "modernists" were "pulling a stunt" the other night on the Woodland age of Duke University, as reported in the ily press, contradicting the plain statents of the Bible, both in the Old and New estaments, in reference to Jehovah's "tryg" Abraham, in telling him to offer Isaac. s only son, as a burnt sacrifice, scores of ymen, wholly untainted with "modernism," e having sweeping revivals of the old type, sulting in the conversion of scores and hunreds of sinners. These revivals have been ing on at Cedar Falls, Asheboro, Randlan, and other places. We've been hearing ese men—and some women—for more than o weeks—just plain, common-sense men om practically all walks of life. They tell at God has done and is doing for them and eir families. Some of them World War vearans. Men of business, manufacturers, lesmen, plumbers, barbers, meat-market men, day-laborers &c., all "telling the wonderful works of God." They use scripture reading, prayer, exhortation, and personal appeal. They know God. And have never learned to doubt, quibble, and question God's word. Some are eloquent sometimes, in their earnest, unaffected simplicity. One, a Frenchman by birth, made one of the most eloquent, touching talks in its heart-felt, earnest, unaffected simplicity to which we have ever listened. We've never heard it excelled by D. D.s nor LL. D.s. They know God. They believe the Bible and believe in prayer. And while the worldly wise are quibbling over the Bible, denying its supernatural, Divine inspiration, trying to prove how this can't be, and that can't be, and the other can't be, these men are believing the Bible in the good old orthodox fashion, and are instrumental in the salvation of scores and hundreds of sinners. Just such foolish, silly, infidel (this is the correct term) stunts as that dramatized at Duke the other night, is enough to make the angels weep. And this to entertain and edify (?) the young students of a summer school! It seems that "truth is fallen in the street"—Bible truth, and Satan's lies have taken its place, in many instances. "Wo unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness. ....Wo unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight". Is. 5:20, 21. God will have his word proclaimed; and if the theological seminaries, colleges, and universities subvert the rising generation of preachers, who knows but that God will raise up a generation of laymen to preach the truth? It's no longer a secret that the most of our higher institutions of learning are already far afield in matters of religious teaching. We know this is stoutly denied, but the proof of such denial is wholly wanting. We've read much pious generalizations on the importance of "religion" from Presidents and Professors. But it's all generally non-committal and equivocal. "Religion" is a generic term, and can mean much, little, or practically nothing. The Hindu has his "religion," and so does the Mohammedan, the Zoroastrian, the Mormon, the Hottentot, and on through the category. So when these "higher ups" talk about "religion," and at the same time take issue with the plain teachings of the Bible, teaching philosophies, and hypotheses, absolutely contrary to the Bible, as established and unquestionable truth, you may take it that all this pious generalization is for "effect" simply, like the shrewd, wily politicians. This may seem severe, but if it be not true, let them come out in the open, throw off the mask, and be specific in their statements.

We've never known a person out and out for prohibition that "straddled the fence;" and we've never known a person that believed the Bible in the good old orthodox way, as the great mass of Jews and Christians has believed it from the beginning, that was afraid, or ashamed, to let it be known. They are never equivocal, non-comittal—never deal in double-entendre—never "straddle the fence." He that believes is not ashamed to let it be known.

The old adage is, "A workman is known by his chips." And Jesus said, "The tree is known by his fruit." Apply this to "modernism" and evangelical orthodoxy, and a fool can see that orthodoxy bears the fruit—saves sinners—while "modernism" may be a beautiful tree that blooms but never bears.

Again, let us say, while Duke was pulling off its modernistic stunt, in drama style, denying the plain, unequivocal statements of both the Old and New Testaments in regard to Abraham's offering Isaac, that it was to "try", or prove, Abraham. Not a "revolt," or rebellion, against a "blood-thirsty Hebrew god," as these rejecters of revelation say; the laymen referred to in this article, after working all day, travel 20, 25, and 30 miles, holding services until 10 and 11 o'clock and this many, if not every night in the week, and that "without money and without price." Can "modernism" show such consecration devotion, and sacrifice?" Can "modernism" show scores and hundreds of sinners converted? Can "modernism" show family altars? Drunkards and gamblers saved? Wretched, warring homes made pleasant and enjoyable? Modernism believes in the evolution of man from a brute ancestry, denying the Fall of man and the fearful fact of Sin. Orthodoxy believes in the Bible account of man's creation in the image of God, his subsequent Fall, and in the absolute need of a Divine, supernatural recreation, or transformation, into the image of God through the omnipotent power of the Holy Spirit. When scores and hundreds of hardened sinners rise from an altar of prayer, with happy, shining faces, and "tell to other sinners round, what a dear Savior they have found," Modernism with all its pomp and strut and polish and preciseness and brag of wisdom (?) and scholarship (?) is mute, unless it be to deride and sneer and denounce and deny, like the blaspheming Jews in the presence of Christ's miracles. It's all above and beyond their field. They have no adequate explanation. It does not fit their theory. They say these things are not needed, and if needed they cannot be, while they are both needed and taking place all the same, in spite of all their wisdom, (?) and skepticism. "The world by wisdom knows not God," now, as in the days of Paul, and before Paul. "The hail will sweep away the refuges of lies, and the waters will overflow the hiding places," when Jesus comes.

While not pertinent to the question under consideration, we'll just throw in for good measure, that the last fool thing that we've heard from the pulpit, was, that Christ has already come, that we are living in the Millemium, and that the devil is chained. Now a person outside of an insane asylum can make such statements seriously, and with vehemence, is one of the unfathomable mysteries of the human mind. It shows to what extremes men are driven to defend a false position. If the devil is chained, how will it be when he is "loosed for a little season?"

A MOMENTOUS DAY DAY IN THE LIFE OF WESLEY.

Rev. G. Stanley Helps.

On Wednesday, May 24, 1738, John Wesley was standing on the threshold of a new life. In the previous February he had returned from his mission to Georgia, which proved so disastrously barren of outward results in the land of his labors. The results in his own personal life, however, were of inestimable value to himself and the world.

Wesley set out for America in the hope of finding there what Oxford and the Holy Club had failed to yield him—a clear religious experience. He wrote on Oct. 10, 1735, just before embarking for Georgia:

My chief motive is the hope of saving my own soul. I hope to learn the true sense of the gospel of Christ by preaching it to the heathen.

In his Journal, when on his way back from America, he sums up what he had actually gained under American skies:

I went to America to convert the Indians; but O! who shall convert me?....It is now two years and almost four months since I left my native country, in order to teach the Georgian Indians the nature of Christianity: but what have I learned myself in the meantime? Why, what I the least of all suspected; that I who went to America to convert others was never myself converted to God.

In the John Wesley of Georgia we see a bigoted ritualist and sacramentarian. In the John Wesley of 1738 we see a humble, disappointed, chastened young man, saddened by the bitter disappointment of failure, and eagerly looking to discover the secret of a spiritual power which would make him invincible The stage is set for one of the most dramatic transformation scenes of modern history.

All through that memorable day in London May 24, 1738, Wesley appeared to be listening for a voice out of the unseen world. He seemed to catch everywhere prophetic echoes of some coming message. Whispers and omens abounded. Rising at five as his custom was, and opening his New Testament, his eyes fell on the words, "There are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that we should be partakers of the divine nature." Later on, just before leaving his room, he again opened the book, and there gleamed on him from the open page the sentence that seemed a personal message, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." He attended morning prayer in St. Paul's Cathedral, and the anthem translated into stormy music the yearning cry of his own heart, "Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord. Lord, hear my voice: let Thine ears consider well the voice of my complaint." In answer there stole into his troubled heart the beginnings of a new peace and trust as he remembered the words, "O Israel, trust in the Lord, for with the Lord there is mercy, and with Him is plenteous redemption, and He shall redeem Israel from all his sins."

In the evening he went to the Moravian Society in Aldergate Street, where Luther's preface of the Epistle to the Romans was being read. Across two centuries the great German spoke to the great Englishman. What followed can best be told in John Wesley's own words:

About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation, and an assurance was given me that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death. I then testified openly to all there, what I now first felt in my heart.

Charles Wesley was not present in that little room in Aldersgate at the supreme moment of his brother's life. He was lying at home sick, and was engaged in prayer. "Towards ten," he writes, "my brother was brought in triumph by a troop of our friends and declared, 'I believe!' We sang a hymn with great joy and parted with prayer." The hymn was Charles Wesley's glowing account of his own conversion, published a few months later, beginning:

Where shall my wandering soul begin,
How shall I all to heaven aspire?
A slave redeemed from death and sin,
A brand plucked from eternal fire.
How shall I equal triumphs raise,
Or sing my great Deliverer's praise?

Thus the Methodist Revival began, and spread like wild-fire through the land. It crossed the seas, and conserved and amplified by John Wesley's genius for organization and inspired by Charles Wesley's hymns of glowing experience, red-hot from the great revival, the Methodist Church emerged.—Zion's Herald.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

These lines are being penned in Ligonier, Pa., just before starting on our return trip to Greensboro, after a vacation of three weeks in the hills of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. They have been pleasant and restful days, though we have been unable to get entirely away from the problems of the conference at home. Our daily prayers has been that God, our Father, would guide in the development and in the shaping of all plans for every phase of our conference work, and that He would bless and direct each pastor on each one of the charges.

Our vacation will soon be over; for we expect to reach home on June 30th, and when this reaches our readers we will be back amidst the work.

The Summer Conference.

The Summer Conference for pastors, workers, and young people will soon be here, and we are hoping that all pastors will attend.

The program is a good one. The information and the inspiration will be worth much to any pastor. Then, too, we need this week of Christian fellowship.

We are also expecting to meet many of our workers and many of our young people at the college that week. This program is also a very fine one, and a great treat is in store for all who go. Of course all who take the course will be expected to work, but the program will not be as strenuous as in other years.

Appointments.

July 3rd, and 4th, Saxapahaw, S. S. Convention.

July 10th and 11th, Pensacola, District Rally.

July 18th, Not definitely fixed.

July 19th to 26th, Summer Conference, High Point College. I should like to meet you there.

Faithfully Yours, A. G. Dixon.

A Challenge to all the Districts of the North Carolina Annual Conference.

We realize the importance of financing our church. We realize also that this can be done much easier by getting our people interested in Tithing. At the Tenth District Rally held at Stallings Methodist Protestant Church, we decided to issue a challenge to the other districts in the Annual Conference to enroll more tithers in proportion to membership than any other district. We sincerely hope that our people throughout the state will cooperate with us in this campaign. The same Bible that teaches us to pray, to keep the sabbath holy, and to do many other things which we have been practicing for years also teaches us that a tenth of our income belongs to God. Please see the third chapter of Malachi.

If you are willing to accept this challenge get in communication with D. A. McLaurin, 252 N. Kerr St., Concord, N. C.

H. F. Surratt, Chm.
D. A. McLaurin, Sec'y,
Tenth District.

West Thomasville Circuit.—In every way we seem to be making as much progress as usual. Our second quarterly conference has been held and G. A. Berrier and J. L. Brinkley were elected as nominees for delegates to the Annual Conference.

We just recently held our revival at West End. Rev. Edward Suits was the pulpit help. The visible results were not as great as we would like to have had, yet, we are sure that much good was done. Brother Suits preached in his usual forceful manner and I am sure that no one could listen without being greatly benefited. On the fourth Sunday in July our special meeting will begin at Canaan. Rev. W. M. Pike will assist me there. We have but few people in this community out of the church, and, we feel, away from Christ.

The building enterprise at Spring Hill is on the stand-still at this time. We have a quantity of material on the ground at present but have done no construction work yet. We expect to start the building as soon as the busy season is over and then finish it this coming Fall and Winter. Please pray for this great undertaking. It is a hard climb!

Since our last report we have been pounded a number of times. One or two of them were very severe. We are thankful for the many nice and useful things received; more so for the spirit that prompted the giving. These people have been very kind to my family and me since coming here two and a half years ago. West Thomasville is a weak seattered circuit but a better people can scarcely be found. W. M. Loy, Pastor.

High Point.—The Mission Study Class held its monthly meeting Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Christian Endeavor room. There were 11 members present. The Chapter in the Study Book, "Adventures in Brotherhood," was presented in a very interesting manner by Mrs. John Walker, Jr. The Question Box, conducted by Mrs. Pickens, was answered by Mrs. L. J. Diffee, Mrs. J. H. Pritchard, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, and Mrs. H. A. Garrett. The Current Topics were given by Mrs. S. D. Shelton.

The Junior Mission Circle held its monthly meeting last Saturday afternoon with 11 members present. Mrs. R. M. Andrews is the leader for this group of boys and girls.

The Board of Stewards will meet Tuesday evening.

Dr. Brown will be absent the greater part of the week in Philadelphia, where he has gone to attend the National Convention of Civitan Clubs. The delegates will be taken on a trip to the Sesqui-Centennial Exposition while in the city.

Miss Mary Young, Dean of Women of High Point College, is attending Summer School at N. C. C. W., Greensboro. Miss Vera Idol of the English Department will leave shortly for Columbia College, N. Y.

Mrs. W. P. Pickett and her daughter, Mrs John H. Walker, Jr., went to Mt. Airy last week to attend the mariage of her niece. Miss Esther Eads to Mr. J. H. Click of Elkin on Wednesday morning in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Walker sang, "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." The bride is the youngest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. J. Eads, the latter being a sister of Mrs. W. P. Pickett.

Mr and Mrs. Ben Moore and Miss Elizabeth Reitzel, who have been spending several months at Avon Park, Florida, have returned here for the summer.

Much sympathy is expressed for Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr., in the loss of their infant son.

Mrs. Permelia Crawford and her son, Mr. Lynn Trout, went to Burlington last Wednesday to attend the wedding of Miss Hennie Malone and Dr. Brannock.

Mrs. J. Richard Reitzel has returned home from a visit to relatives in Durham.

Miss Johnsie Oaks is enjoying a delightful trip to California. She and four other young ladies won the tour in a contest promoted by the Merchants' Association of High Point. They left here Friday, June 18th, and arrived in Los Angeles on Thursday. The party will be absent 21 days, and will visit many points of interest in the far West.

Little Misses Mary Lindsay Lowe of Lexington, Isabel Richardson of Winston-Salem and Margaret Louise White of Greensboro have been guests of Mrs. C. L. Whitaker at her home near the College.

Miss Arnette Pickens has returned from a week's stay at Camp Otakne at Miller's Mill, the Y. W. C. A. summer camp. The Freshmen-Sophomore Girl Reserves went last week, and the Elm St. girls are there this week.

Miss Gertrude Teague will leave in a few days for a visit to friends in Lexington, Kentucky.

Liberty, Siler City Charge.—May we not forget that July 4th is an appointed day for prayer, over our entire homeland and community. "What a privilege it is to carry everything to God in prayer." We who have prayed every day for years and years and meditated on God's goodness and love and mercy toward us, would not exchange this privilege for all the gold this world could give.

We praise God for the many souls saved during our recent revival. May these new converts lean on His strong arm and there find strength and guidance in all the affairs of life.

Miss Marie Ward and little Elizabeth Pickett are still very ill. We hope they may be restored to health and be with us again in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work.

We are planning for Children's Day. The committee appointed are: Mesdames Dr. F. A. Shepard, S. M. Smith, and C. P. Smith and Miss Bertine Shepard.

The Philathea class elected officers Sunday: Mrs. R. W. Ward, President; Mrs. Newton Isley, Vice President; Mrs. Clarence Highfill, Secretary, with Miss Bertine Shepard Teacher.

In the death of Evelyn Curtis we have lost one of our most faithful workers in Christian Endeavor and Sunday school work. She was always ready and anxious to do her part. We will miss her so much.

The last work she did was to prepare a Christian Endeavor program and was leader in the meeting that Sunday evening. O Father, reveal unto the bereaved ones the tenderness and humanness of Thy sympathy, that Thou dost pity them like as a father pitieth his children.

Our blind eyes cannot discern the purpose of Thy providence. "What Thou doest we know not now, but we will know hereafter."

Bertine Shepard, Reporter.

Clarks Chapel, Weaverville Charge.— Our pastor was with us last Sunday. He preached an inspiring sermon on the subject: Saving Religion. Three new members were also received in the church.

Our Sunday school has increased wonderfully. The Christian Endeavor Society is also progressing splendidly.

The main purpose of our mid-week prayer meetings is to pray for the lost souls who surround us. The Community Grove revival begins the eleventh of July, and we are expecting great results.

We ask the prayers of those who are interested that the coming revival be successful, and that we ourselves may live on higher planes, in order that we may do great work for the Lord. Reporter.

—A wise man may learn of a fool.

Asheville.—Sunday was a great day with us. The morning service was well attended and the offering was good.

There was a delightful rain in the afternoon and evening.

At 8 P. M. Dr. Julian Pennington of Birmingham, Ala., lectured on "The Place in Life that God has for everyone."

It was a most inspiring and illuminating address. The church was well filled despite the rain. There were strangers from many States. The opening prayer was offered by Rev. Stuart McClellan, pastor of Old Calvary Episcopal church at Fletcher, N. C.

This Wednesday night our pastor, Rev. C. W. Bates, will talk on "The Bursting Blessing on Benevolence." We are expecting to give him a "full house" as a welcome back from his Educational trip to South Carolina.

His subject at prayer meeting last Wednesday night was one of the very best of his many good talks and sermons. Reporter.

Dr. Harris has now paid this note personally, thus adding $1,000 to his contribution to the college, and placing the Church under obligations to him for his interest and liberality.

MISSOURI'S FIRST YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

Under the fine leadership of Mrs. J. W. Rhodes and Mrs. A. D. Hazel, president and secretary, respectively, of the Missouri Conference Board of Young People's Work, the young people of the Missouri Conference held a splendid and enthusiastic Young People's Conference in the Springfield Church, Saturday and Sunday, June 12-13.

This was the first meeting of the kind ever held in the Missouri Annual Conference district, and the young people did themselves proud with an attendance of one hundred and eighty-nine registered delegates, one hundred and twenty of whom were from out of town. Since this was the first effort of the kind, this attendance was beyond even the hopes of the leaders. The young people were delighted with the meetings and voted unanimously for a standard five-day Young People's Summer Conference to be held in July of next year.

It was encouraging to note the interest and cooperation of the pastors in the young people's work. Without exception, every pastor in attendance was agreed that the conference was distinctly worth-while and voted to cooperate in putting over a standard summer conference next year.

The delegates were entertained in the homes of Springfield and everyone was outspoken in praise of the hospitality of the Springfield workers. A banquet was served on the lawn of the church on Saturday evening, and more than two hundred persons enjoyed an old-fashioned dinner on the ground on Sunday.

The convention opened Saturday afternoon with a worship service conducted by the president of the Board of Young People's Work. Following this service, a number of splendid talks on Sunday school work were made by leading young people of the churches represented. At the Saturday night session, reports were made by delegates from the various Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies. These reports showed not only a lively interest, but a bright outlook for future advancement and growth. Rev. L. A. Smith, president of the Missouri Annual Conference, brought the message on Saturday night.

Sunday afternoon was given over to a study of Christian Endeavor problems with a number of interesting talks by local workers. Following these talks, Rev. Lawrence Little led in an open discussion on Christian Endeavor methods and works.

Devotional messages were brought in the several sessions by leading pastors of the conference.

It was the privilege of the Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work to lead conferences on practical plans and methods, to preach the conference sermon on Sunday morning, and to lead the life decision service on Sunday night.

Although the Missouri Conference is small in membership and financial strength and one of our weaker districts, the writer feels that with the enthusiastic and capable leadership of Mrs. Rhodes and her associates, the young people's work is entering a widening field of development and service. Let us pray to that end.

Come on, Missouri young folks, SHOW US the stuff of which you are made!

Lawrence Little.
Secretary of Board of Young People's Work.

PLEASE REMEMBER.

While the number of orders for the Children's Day Service from the Sunday schools is very gratifying, it, nevertheless, remains a fact that a great many schools have as yet not asked for the supplies for holding a service, and we are most anxious to have them secure the supplies which are sent free to our own Sunday schools.

It would be a most interesting occasion for any school which has not held a service for some time, or never before, to make early preparation to hold one. It will awaken much interest in the school among the scholars, it will create interest among the church members, it will bring the local church and its school into prominence in the community, it will bring the church in line with the program of the denomination as ordered by the General Conference, and it would share in the development of our foreign missionary enterprise by the offering which would be made at the service.

Surely these considerations and others involved ought to impel every pastor and Sunday school superintendent to begin at once to hold a service by sending a card to me at Berwyn, Md., stating how many of the music pamphlets, collection envelopes and recitation sheets are needed, and prompt action will follow.

As previously stated there is no set day for holding the Children's Day service, as local conditions largely govern the schools in the selection of a day. It is the time for flowers, and other features, and as our denomination extends over more than twenty of the states of our country, from the northern part of our land to Florida and the other Southern states, and flowers over that great extent of territory, appear at different periods of year so our Schools hold the Service from May on to the late summer.

There is, therefore, ample time for your school to arrange to hold a service, and we urge that you send me your order without delay for the free supplies, and put forth your best efforts to secure the largest possible offering.

You have in this Service the opportunity to raise at least one-fourth of your General Conference Budget, and it was never more needed than at this time, and we earnestly appeal for your unstinted cooperation.

Another reason for raising at least 25 per cent of your Budget through the Children's Day Service is the fact that we are to celebrate the One Hundredth Anniversary of our denomination's life and service to mankind in 1928, and one prominent feature decided by the General Conference was that our churches would lay on the altar each year of this quadrenium the budget in full as an expression of gratitude to God for our goodly heritage, and in attestation of our purpose to carry forward the great principles espoused and the work inaugurated by the fo ers of our church who through sacrifice toils wrought and bequeathed to us and coming generations what we possess rightly prize.

Remember, please, that the two Japan banners are to be distributed this year on same conditions as last year, and in or that this may be done correctly be sure give the membership of your school wh sending the offering to your annual conf ence treasurer. Then be sure to state plai "IT IS THE CHILDREN'S DAY OFFE ING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS." If t is not done the Union Board may not get of it, only 25 percent of what was raised the offering for Foreign Missions would th come to the Union Board. Do not neglect do this, please.

The Union Board now needs every doll that is given for its great work of buildi up whole denomination in each of three cou tries.

Fred C. Klein.

FOURTEEN PASTORS.

A few days ago fourteen pastors repr senting (supposedly) some of the most soun ly evangelical churches of a certain gre city were together. They were asked how m ny of them (or their churches) were conduc ing open air services during the summe AND ONLY TWO HANDS WENT UP! A yet all were professed followers of the gre open air Preacher of Galilee! TWO follo ing His example—TWELVE apparently i different! Most of them preach to a me handful of people on the inside, while on t outside the surging throngs pass ceaseless by, apparently unmindful of any obligatio to God or of their own spiritual welfare. An who cares very much?

Would Jesus care? Would He wait con placently inside some little church and e pect the people to come in? If God had wai ed until the world asked for Christ, wou He not be waiting still? If Jesus had waite until the multitudes came to Him, would the ever have come? HE WENT TO THEM!

The open air season is not yet over. Man weeks remain. What an opportunity for ev ry evangelical church in America to FIL these remaining weeks with such a campaig of thoroughly sound open-air evangelism— lifting up Christ as the "Lamb of God tha taketh away the sin of the world"—as woul draw thousands upon thousands to receiv Him as Savior and Lord!

The fields are ripe everywhere. The hou is at hand for a mighty movement of th Spirit of God. If God's people—whether pas tors or laymen—do not act, the hour of grac ious visitation may pass forever, and multi tudes be lost. There are those who are doin their utmost in their respective communitie and cities. Are YOU doing YOUR utmost i YOUR community or city? For SOON "th night cometh when NO man can work."

Pray for the speedy evangelization of ev ry community in America, and for world wide evangelization! Pray that you yoursel may be revived, also.

PRAY FOR CHURCH-WIDE REVIVAL

DID YOU EVER THINK ABOUT IT?

There is no harm in asking questions. Besides questions are the only means of finding out certain things that many minds long to know. And then when we speak of questions we are reminded that there are a few important questions in the minds of the people today.

There has been, I think, too much already said on the question of Evolution and the Origin of Man. So much has been said that I no longer care to read the articles that are appearing from time to time in some of our papers. I do not believe that there has been enough said concerning the conduct of man after he has evolved, or has been created, as the case might be. I believe that we are struggling under misplaced emphasis. The emphasis should be placed on the conduct rather than on the origin of man. One way to increase the generation of agnostics is to continue to discuss these "theories" of man's origin. As for me, I unhesitatingly take the story of man's creation as given in the Book of Genesis, and regardless of who believes, or disbelieves, I am going to continue to believe it. I want to emphasize the fact, that THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION CONFRONTING US IS THE CONDUCT RATHER THAN THE ORIGIN OF MAN.

The trend of modern society seems to me to be downward. Now as a Methodist Protestant, and one of the weakest, possibly, I would like to know just how my church stands on some of the questions concerning our modern society. I do not believe that all are going to the devil, but it seems to me that a great portion are thus bound, hence I am writing this article.

Some one will doubtless call these questions foolish ones, but nevertheless they are very important ones, and ones that it seems our churches have been trying to avoid. Now the first question in my mind is, Where does the Methodist Protestant Church stand on the question of Motion Pictures? What is the general opinion of our ministers?

Now, I find that the ministers are woefully divided on this question. They seem to be afraid to speak out in meeting. Not only are the ministers,—and preachers—divided, but our laymen, and lay-women are just as badly, if not more divided. Now for instance some time ago a preacher said he did not think there was "MUCH" harm in the moving picture. Another preacher came along within a few days, and said he believed that no church member or preacher should attend the movies. Now, where does the Church stand on the question? Does the Methodist Protestant church say it is right or wrong? Why, a few days ago, some one said there are churches in North Carolina, which give a picture show every Sunday night. What do the leaders of our church think about these questions?

Then, another question just as important is the question of the bathing pool. Lots of folks I know need a bath allright, but does the Methodist Protestant Church of which I am a member, and to which I contribute all I give to the cause of Christ, say that it is allright, and so far as she is concerned there is no wrong committed, in thought or deed, when the opposite sexes mix and mingle in these pools, with little better than no clothing on their bodies? I wish the church leaders would speak out in meeting on these questions.

The third question arising in my feeble mind is, does our church sanction the card party, and social dance? I learned some months ago, that there were churches that used this method of amusement when there was a church social. I wonder just where the church stands on these questions.

We all know that some of our preachers preach against these things, some more than others, and I think all preach against the cards and dance, but all DO NOT preach against the movies and the bathing pool. Now, what can I, or any other Methodist Protestant say when we are asked, "How does your church stand on the question of Motion Pictures and the Bathing Pool?"

Now, if there are any of our brethren or "sistern" who want to write, and if you can use a pen with much dexterity, here is your chance.

These are vital questions. More vital than evolution, politics or prohibition. What is your answer?

Very sincerely, Earnest N. Quirer.

WHY MUSSOLINI QUIT TOBACCO.

Will H. Brown.

Milton Brouner, who went to Italy to study the personality of Mussolini, the dictator —the "man of iron," as he has been called —says in a newspaper article, published in May, 1926, concerning Mussolini:

"The diet of the man of iron consists mainly of food that seems more suitable for a young child. Rice, chicken, and eggs from the basis of his means, with an occasional salad."

Continuing, the writer says that while Mussolini formerly enjoyed wine as much as any Italian, he now drinks only milk and water, believing that alcoholic drinks are injurious to his health, and adds:

"He even placed a ban upon TOBACCO recently. Formerly he was often seen with a cigarette between his lips, but he has decided that smoking has a bad effect upon his throat and lungs."

It took the great Italian some time to reach this conclusion, but when he reached it he had the courage to act in accordance with his convictions. Tobacco knows no favorites. Whether taken into the system of king, emperor, dictator, or just common people, nicotine goes to work to undermine and destroy.

By the way, a fortunate fire occurred in Pola, Italy, in the early part of 1926. A warehouse containing tobacco valued at $1,000,000 was destroyed. Far better was it for the Italians, or any one else, that the tobacco be burned in this way than strained through the nostrils and lungs of human creatures. Bruno Lessing, well known author, says: "Smoking would be stupid enough if one's smokes were given him, but to pay for them is idiotic." Mr. Lessing himself smokes, but is honest enough to say that he "always feels like a fool," when he does smoke.

MILITARY TRAINING.

Compulsory military training in schools and colleges is deplored as foreign to the ideals of the educational system, by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches in an appeal made public today asking church people throughout the country to study the whole question of militarism in education.

Special dissatisfaction is expressed by the Federal Council's Committee over the extension of the program of military training, of an elaborate and technical character, even into the public high schools.

Believing the matter should be judged with a knowledge of the facts the Administrative Committee has authorized the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council to bring out a pamphlet on "Shall We Have Military Training in Our Schools and Colleges?" This document, which is under way, will present the arguments which are adduced both for and against the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. The arguments in favor of military training include a statement by Major-General Charles P. Summerall, commander of the New York Area of the U. S. Army.

The action of the Administrative Committee in regard to military training in schools and colleges is as follows:

"The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America makes the following recommendations in regard to military training in schools and colleges:

"That systematic and technical military training for youth of high school age is to be deplored as foreign to the aims and ideals of our educational system.

"That civilian educational institutions should not make military training a required subject.

"That churches and educational leaders give careful study of the whole question of R. O. T. C. in schools and colleges."

In a statement interpreting the resolution, the Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, said:

"What the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches is objecting to is not the simple form of military drill, such as was found in certain schools before the war, but the highly technical and systematic training, including combat drill, such as is provided in units of Reserve Officers' Training Corps, designed to fit men for military service. The Federal Council does not regard such military programs as appropriate for adolescent boys."

A LOVE STORY OF NEW KOREA.

Rev. John V. Lacy.

In the heart of Korea lies the famous city of Seoul. Some years ago, among the families that lived in the western section of that city were those of Mr. Kim (which means Gold) and the rich Mr. Song. There was a great sadness in the family of Mr. Kim. For there were no children, not even a daughter, and how could Kim be worshiped when he died if he had no children? He loved his wife very much, but what sin had she committed that she should be a woman of shame before the whole world because she had no children?

If Mr. Kim, a poor but kind man, was unhappy, how much more so was the poor wife. Why should she be cursed so? In her sorrow she went outside Westgate and turned to the north for about a mile, until she came to the white Buddha. Here she kneeled and prayed—prayed and offered gifts. For the white Buddha could give the blessing of children, and if he were particularly pleased he would even give sons. She went home very much comforted, for she had done her part.

A little while later it became known to Mr. and Mrs. Kim that a child was to be born to them. "Oh," thought Mrs. Kim, "if it should only be a son, and he should become so great that he might even marry a daughter of the rich Mr. Song!" How happy she and her husband were! Mr. Kim was so full of joy that when he walked through the streets it was whispered that a relative had left him land worth many bags of rice.

Now, not far from this humble home where such happiness reigned, lived the rich and powerful Mr. Song. At least he himself was quite sure of his enviable position, and thereby persuaded many of his acquaintances that it was true. Did he not have sons and daughters? Did he not have a ten-room house, and every room with a tile roof? He did not work but sat quietly at home waiting for the fall to come, when his tenants would bring in half the rice they raised. And then he would think how wonderfully blessed he was—how, because of his sinless life, all this had come. Why even at the present time there was soon to be another child in the home. Was not this another special sign of divine favor? "It would be nice to have a son," he thought, "but then, why worry? I have sons. If it is a girl, she will marry a rich man and then I shall be so much better off."

Mr. Song's family thought of him as a great man, but not quite so great as he considered himself. For they knew he was easily irritated, and he had even committed the worst sin of all—he had become angry. Some of the family relatives who came to live with him rather than work for themselves, even intimated that if it were not for his money he would indeed be a very ordinary man. But when he walked abroad he held his head very high, and his hands were proudly placed behind him.

Each of the two homes just described was made glad by the gift of a fine child. Mr. Kim, the childless, had a son, and Mr. Song, the rich, had a daughter.

Mr. Kim was very poor, yet he saved his few pennies and sent his son to school. For even though they ate but twice a day, Kim Pearl must have an education. So every day with a few other boys, eight in all, he went to a neighboring home to study the Chinese characters. He went early in the morning, soon after sun was up, and stayed all day, almost until sunset, always studying, that he might become a great man. Among other things he read the stories of great men and their prowess, but no other stories appealed to him like those about winning a beautiful wife. "If I could marry a beautiful maiden," he thought, "I could die happy."

Many times while going to and from school, he looked at the fine house of Mr. Song and wondered how any one could be so rich. One day he caught a glimpse of a beautiful girl, and his heart jumped and sang within him. Who was she? Daughter of Mr. Song? Or a servant? Surely not a servant. Surely a wonderful daughter. Not only did he see her, but this mystery girl saw him, and dropping her eyes—a modest girl dare not look into the face of a man—she ran back into the women's quarters. But after that Kim Pearl no longer looked at the fine house, he looked longing for another glimpse of a fine—yes, superfine—face. Now he changed his thought of the past, and made it definite. "If I could marry her, I could die happy."

After much inquiry he learned through a servant of Mr. Song's that her name was Song Ewha, or Song the Pear Flower. By dint of much talking and small gifts to the servant, the best he could offer, Kim Pearl persuaded the servant to carry to the one on whom his heart was set, poems written in the best style and on the finest paper, which he earned by the simple process of working nights at the store of a friend. After much effort he even managed to gain Pear Flower's consent to meet him at her door. When a visitor came to the Song home and all were in the Sarang Pang or Guest-Room, she went to the little gate and talked to him. How they were both stirred. And although whispered words were few because of fear, each knew in these brief moments that they would never be fully happy until they could spend their lives together.

Now, as Kim Pearl grew up and finished school his meetings with Pear Flower became more frequent and daring. Thus it happened that Mr. Song, returning home earlier than expected one evening, saw—and understood.

Most fathers thereupon would have made a great fuss and let all the neighbors know about the terrible happenings, but not so Song. He said nothing, and this made Pear Flower all the more fearful, for she knew some punishment must come. Father Song proceeded quietly to make arrangements for an engagement and marriage of his daughter according to his liking; for only he, he knew, could he forestall the foolishness that he had observed.

A few days before the engagement presents were to be sent, Pear Flower heard the dreadful news. What was she to do? What was she to do? She sent her friend the servant to her lover. Kim Pearl came to see her at once. He insisted that, although poor, he would soon be rich and that when her father saw there was no help for it, he would forgive them. She must come and marry him that very night.

And so it was arranged, and so it happened that Kim Pearl and Pear Flower were married. How happy they were! Kim thought, "Oh, I have attained my goal! I have married the beautiful maid. Even though I die, it will be but the price to pay for this happiness." And all would have been well but for the fact that, little by little, they realized that Pear Flower's father, Song the rich, would never forgive them. How they loved each other, but still, what could be done to remove this stain? How could they always bear this shame?

One day Kim Pearl believed he had a solution. He said: "I will shame them. I will divorce you and then when they see their shame they will forgive, and we can marry again." Pear Flower, who was so happy, did not want anything like this to happen to separate them, even for a little while, but Pearl insisted and at last, hesitating, she agreed. How little did either of them realize the awful consequences that were to follow!

The next day Kim Pearl wrote the terrible paper and handed it to Pear Flower. She wept and departed. They both prayed that the venture might be successful, and that Father Song would forgive. In abject fear Pear Flower returned home and handed the paper to her father. He read it, remained in silent thought for the space of five minutes—and then Pear Flower knew that such a proud man could never be shamed. At last the father spoke. "It is good," he said. "You now receive your reward for disobediences, but I will forgive you and you shall live as if you had never seen that swine, badly named the Gold Pearl."

His daughter bowed her head and withdrew. What was to be done? What was to be done? She sent the terrible news to her lover. What could he do?

Then it was that pride entered into the heart of Kim Pearl—it seemed as if the fates were having their revenge for his previous happiness. "What a foolish idea I have always had," he thought, "that the love of a beautiful maiden is the only thing in the world! I will show even Pear Flower herself that I do not care." And within a month he had married a very common girl, just to prove his boast.

For a little while he deceived the world and himself—but only for a very short time. He could not forget. He could not eat. He always remembered the graces, the lovely face and figure of his Pear Flower. He could not work, he became listless, and one night he came home wishing to die. He thought to himself, "Oh, love is a pain, a sword, it is sharpest of the sharp. Since I have wrongly loved and tasted bliss, let me die and release me from this agony."

A doctor was called, a foreign missionary doctor, who said that Kim Pearl had typhoid fever, and told his friends that because of his weakened body he could not live.

When Pear Flower heard of his condition she stopped for nothing but hurried to his. And there by his side she stayed, until a few days later he went away, to be with his father's spirit. But in passing he whispered to her, "For your love—I am willing to die."

Let us be up and doing for the Master's work requires haste.

Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, Reporter.

By my recent election as Record Agent for the Branch to succeed Mrs. A. G. Dixon, I was surprised to find so many of our good North Carolina subscribers in arrears. I do not understand how Mrs. Amos can afford to continue publishing the Record, if all states are as far behind as ours, but out of the kindness of her great heart she is publishing this splendid magazine at a financial loss, trying to interest more people in the great cause of Missions, and with faith in our women to pay when convenient.

Friends, let's don't break this faith. Let's show our appreciation of Mrs. Amos' kindness by examining at once the label on our Record and rushing our renewals to the local Record Agent. We just cannot be without the Record and be active members, for where there is no knowledge there is no interest, and when the individual members are not sufficiently informed to be interested the society dies. Are you sure your label does not register "1925?" A great many of them do, and they should be "1927" or "1928." The responsibility rests on you.

I will be glad to furnish any Auxiliary Agent a list of the subscribers and dates of expiration in her Auxiliary. Please write for them, and see what you can do toward getting each member to meet her obligation. My address is High Point College, High Point, N. C.

—A lady called at the Spartanburg post office stamp window the other day and said: "Oh, please, sir, let me have a quarter's worth of stamps." The clerk responded: "Yes, ma'am, what denomination?" She replied quickly: "Why, er-er, Baptist, and by the way, have you heard our new pastor? Oh, he's so fine, and has such a pious face. So glad you asked me. I've always felt that post office employees had no interest in churches."—The Congregationalist.

Speaking about degrees, a chimney-sweep who was complainant in a case in Edinburgh gave his name as Jamie Gregory, LL. D.

"Where on earth did you get that distinction?" asked the attorney.

"It was a fellow frae an American university," answered Jamie. "I sweepit his chimney three times. 'I canna pay ye cash, Jamie Gregory,' he says, 'but I'll mak' ye LL. D. and we will call it quits.' And he did, sir."—The Watchman-Examiner.

ALICE'S GIFTS.

"I wish I could give something," said Alice, "but I can't. I haven't as much as the other girls have. If I had as much as Mary Hunt, I'm sure I would give a lot more than she does."

Her teacher looked at her with a twinkle in her eye. Miss Arnold's gray eyes were very expressive.

"If you had as much money to spend as Mary Hunt, you would not give as much, I think, for you do not give of what you have yourself."

Alice flushed. "I haven't it to give," she insisted. "I wish I had, and I don't know what you mean."

"Mary Hunt has spending money," said Miss Arnold. "But she has no mother, and you have one of the best in the world. Mary has no brothers or sisters, and you have Mary is not very strong, and you have splendid health. I really think you have more to give than she has."

"But I can't give my mother away!" cried Alice, her own eyes twinkling at the absurd idea. "I can't give Bob and Letty and Jack and the baby away. I can't give my health away, can I?"

"Yes," said Miss Arnold seriously enough, "in a sense you can. These possessions of yours are real and extremely valuable. Money cannot buy anything like them. Because you possess them, you ought to give something back to the world. Your health, for instance. You can cheer up a sick person by being with her and reading to her and bringing the atmosphere of health into her day. Isn't there anybody who would like this gift from you now and then?"

"Mrs. James, who lives round the corner, is poor, and she is sick a great deal, and the children need looking after," said Alice thoughtfully. "If I did that, would it really be a gift?"

"Of course it would. The gift of yourself is the greatest gift that you can offer. It is more than money. But it must be always given humbly, and not in a patronizing way. Your mother will tell you how to go about it. She is a wonderful giver, always doing something for somebody."

"Why, so she is!" exclaimed Alice. "Mother gives lots and lots of time and thoughts to all sorts of people. I guess I've been foolish not to think of such things before. Mother never says anything about her giving."

"That's what I mean. She does it humbly. If she spoke of it, it would be spoiled. I heard some one say of her the other day that she was the most generous-hearted woman in town and didn't know it."

"Because she's like that, I ought to be more like her. Is that what you meant by calling her one of my possessions?"

"You're getting the idea, Alice," said her teacher, smiling. "Jack and Bob and Letty, and the baby, too, bring a lot into your life that makes it richer and that you can share somehow with some one now and then."

"I'm going to begin right away; just watch me!" cried Alice. And Miss Arnold has had a lot of pleasure in seeing Alice keep her word.—By Emily P. Bissell, in Young People.

JENNIE'S GARDEN.

Jennie Reed whistled a popular tune as she trudged up the steep stairs to the two rooms in which she lived with her aunt. They were very poor, and Mrs. Martin had to go out to do washing to make money for her little niece and herself to live on. But the little girl was good company and brought happiness home with her every evening as if she just breathed it into the air. Rain or shine Jennie could always cheer up her auntie, whatever happened.

After their supper of crackers and milk, auntie felt sleepy, for it was a warm spring night, with a steady drip-drip of rain splashing against the fire escape outside the window. It was not long before she was asleep in her rocking-chair.

Jennie washed up their few dishes very quietly, and sat down by the window. It was not a pleasant view outside. Rows of tenement roofs, chimney pots, and littered fire escapes, muddy and streaked with rain, stretched away in every direction.

"If only there were just one pretty thing to look at," thought Jennie, unhappily, as the tears blurred her eyes.

But the next morning was sunny and warm, with streaks of gold light stealing even across the fire escape into their tenement rooms, and Jennie felt happy again. It was Saturday, and on Saturdays she always went with her aunt.

She whistled another happy tune as she scrambled into her clothes, and all the way down the stairs beside auntie. They reached the big house, where auntie was to work, bright and early, so that she could get all the sunshine for drying. The laundry, a big airy room, was spick and span, for auntie scrubbed it the day before. But on the window sill stood a flower pot with the drooping remains of what had been a lovely plant. Auntie had been told to throw it away.

Throw it away! Jennie just could not throw away anything that had the promise of beauty. She examined it closely, and found a little green leaf clinging stubbornly to the stem.

When Jennie climbed the stairs that night she whistled more merrily than ever, and hugged the flower pot in her arms. Every morning she put her little garden, as she called it, on the fire escape in the sun, and watered it carefully.

At last there came a bud, and then a flower, and it seemed to the neighbors who could see it from the window all around, that there never had been such a lovely blossom as that in Jennie's garden. Everyone wanted to know where she got it. Did she buy it. Did someone give it to her?

And then Jennie began to wonder if she had done wrong. Of course, Mrs. Graydon had told her aunt to throw it away, but Jennie had taken it home, sure that she could make the flowers come out again. Maybe if Mrs. Graydon had known that her plant could be made pretty again, she would have wanted to keep it.

The next Saturday a tearful little girl told her story to Mrs. Grayson, and said she honestly hadn't meant to do anything wrong.

"Why, of course, it's all right," said Mrs. Graydon, smiling, "and if you really made the blossom again, you are a fine little gardner and the flowers are yours to keep as long as you can make them bloom."—Christian Science Monitor.

SLOW POKE.

Louise was eleven years old and the youngest of five sisters and maybe you think she was spoiled! Not much! Her four older sisters had all made up their minds from the beginning that Louise was not to be spoiled. All the same, the sisters complained about her.

"Mama," said Patty, the eldest sister, "it is awful the way you let Louise impose on you! Why don't you just tell her you won't take her down town?"

"Well, I certainly will next time," sighed the mother. "I've promised her now, so I'll have to take her. My! I dread it! Just getting the child ready wears me out."

"She's old enough to get herself ready!" said Julia, another big sister. "If she was my child I'd never lift a finger to get her ready to go anywhere. She'd get ready herself or be left behind!"

Tilly, another sister, nodded approvingly and said, sternly:

"She ought to have a good lesson!"

"When I was eleven," said Betty, another sister, "I never thought of getting people to put on my rubbers or even comb my hair."

Louise was listening to these remarks as she sat on the edge of the hall chair. There was a slight pout on her face, but it was the kind of pout that makes you feel that it's put there to hide a smile.

"I can't find my gloves!" she drawled in a whiney voice. "Mama, where's my gloves? I can't find them. Mama, Mama, have you seen my gloves?"

Her mother looked at her eldest daughter in a despairing way, as if to say: "Just listen to that! I'm so worn out!"

So Patty angrily began searching for the gloves, while Louise slowly tried to put on her rubbers.

"I can't get these rubbers on," she whined. "They're too tight for these shoes. Mama, my rubbers won't go over these shoes. They're too tight. Mama, Mama, I can't get on my rubbers."

"Oh, dear!" sighed her mother. "We ought to be on the way now. It's getting so late and I have such a big list of things to get."

She dropped down before Louise and began to put on the rubbers, but Julia brushed her aside.

"Let me do it, poor darling," she said. "Oh, you nasty little slow poke!" she cried turning to her sister. "I'd like to spank you!"

Louise pouted her funny little pout.

"Don't be so cross!" she drawled. "P'ease don't honey! Pitty p'ease!"

The sisters groaned.

"Baby talk at your age!" cried Tilly. "O big fat old thing like you!"

"Everybody's mean to me!" sighed Louise. "Mama, I feel like crying and I haven't any hanky!"

"Oh, dear!" cried Mother, "we'll never get off!"

"Here's a clean handkerchief," said Betty. "Take it, you old dumb thing."

After awhile Mother and Louise got off. Louise hanging on to her mother's arm and asking questions in a high squeaky voice as if she were a baby just learning to talk. It wasn't because Louise was feeble-minded that she acted like this. She was bright in school and won honors, but as soon as she came home she would begin to act like a baby. The more her sisters scolded, the worse she became.

Every night, her mother had to go with her up to help her to bed, and coax and scold to get her ready. Every morning the whole family had to get her off to school. She would dawdle and poke and whine in the most provoking way, and nothing anybody said or did seemed to have any effect on her.

One night they let her stay up and they all went off to bed, leaving her downstairs. She didn't care. She sat up till midnight and then went to bed in her clothes, crawling in with her mother, shoes and all. She said she liked to sit up and sleep in her clothes and she wanted to do it every night.

One morning they wouldn't help her, but let her be late for school. Her teacher sent back a note that day, saying that Louise had told her that she could not find any clean underwear and that was why she had been late. She also said that Louise was her best pupil, but that day she had not been able to recite because she had cried all day on account of being late, and please not to let it happen again.

Patty was sixteen and in high school, so she knew an awful lot. One day she told her sisters what was the matter with Louise.

"She needs to be psycho-analyzed," she said.

"What's that?" asked Betty, hopefully.

"Why, you go to somebody who knows how, and he asks you questions and finds out why you are acting the way you are, or feeling the way you do. Then when he finds out why, he tells you and that cures you, see?"

"I know why," snapped Tilly. "Louise is spoiled."

But Patty thought not. There was a psychology teacher at the High School who kindly consented to psycho-analyze Louise. Patty was to bring her around after school one day.

The sisters were all so interested that they all came, but Louise did not know that she was to be analyzed. She thought her sisters were being very nice to her and giving her a treat, because they promised to take her to the movies after she met Mr. Bonnell, who was interested in her.

My! The sisters were awfully ashamed of Louise. Mr. Bonnell brought out her worst side. He talked in a sugary sympathetic voice and she giggled and [illegible] babyish than ever. He looked wh[illegible] began to brag about her sh[illegible] and badness. She thought she was just too cute for anything, and her sisters were mad clear through.

After awhile, Mr. Bonnell wrote something on a piece of paper and handed it to Patty. Then the sisters went out, Louise along with them to the movies.

Patty, of course, took the first chance to read the note Mr. Bonnell had handed her. She read:

"I think Louise needs responsibility. If she had a younger brother or sister she would be cured."

The note was passed around among the sisters and Louise got very suspicious, but she did not let on.

When they got home, the girls crowded in to the sewing room where their mother was working. They gave their mother the note.

"It's providential!" said Patty. "I saw in the paper this morning that there was a lovely orphan baby girl of one year old that needs to be adopted."

"But we can't have any more children!" cried the mother. "We can't afford it. Besides think of the work!"

"This will be Louise's responsibility!" said Patty.

Dad, who was so busy making a living that he did not notice what went on in the house, was then told all about Louise and her ways and the cure Mr. Bonnell suggested. He liked babies and said he would go and look at the lovely orphan baby girl.

So it happened one night after school when Louise lagged slowly upstairs whining; "Mama! Mama! Where's my doll, pussy-cat!" that she heard a sound coming from her room. She thought it must be her cat and she went into her room.

Well, she was too surprised to move! There in her room was the old crib which had once been hers, and standing in the crib was a darling little girl with a pink ribbon in her hair and the cutest blue eyes ever seen.

"Oh!" cried Louise, clasping her hands.

"Your little sister Susy," explained her Mother, coming in. "How do you like her?"

"She's darling!" cried Louise, putting her arms around the dear little thing. "I love her!"

"Well, I don't know as I can keep her," said her mother. "I have so much to do!"

"Oh, please!" cried Louise. "I'll take care of her. I will really and you needn't wait on me any more. I won't be the baby, you see!"

Well, Louise was cured, in fact, she got to be the smartest and helpfulest one of the bunch. But even then her sisters weren't satisfied.

"Mother," complained Patty, "Louise just monopolizes that baby, she won't let us play with her at all. I can't stand"

"Mother," said Tilly, "Louise is getting grown-up and self-important. I think you ought to speak to her about it!"

But their Mother only smiled and said:

"Maybe you girls need to be psycho-analyzed. Better go and see Mr. Bonnell, but tell him six little girls are about all we can comfortably raise."—Selected.

HEROIC WOMEN.

The beauty about this Game of Life is that it never arranged so that it is unbeatable.

Take the girl without money and without influence; she might easily regard herself as unable to hold the pace.

But, because she has not so regarded herself, she has again and again held the pace and set a faster one.

Years ago in a log cabin bare as poverty and forty miles from a postoffice, lived a little English immigrant girl. But, because she recognized the value of an education, she secured it from scant instruction and much reading of borrowed books.

She got a position as a Michigan country school teacher, walking eight miles a day to and from her work and drawing pay of four dollars a week. Then on her savings she bought a ticket to Boston and paid her way through a school of theology by teaching and preaching.

She became the famous Dr. Anna Howard Shaw.

Daisy Simpson, a young woman who had been down and out, got a job with the San Francisco police and made herself, according to her chief, "the best shadower the city ever knew."

Mrs. Sarah Scharlin was twenty-four years old when she came, a Russian immigrant, to New York and opened a little snuff shop. When she died last February, she was known as the "East Side's richest woman" and was beloved for her kindness and benefactions.

Mrs. Agnes Dunn was described during her life time as "one of the keenest and ablest women detectives in America." She was a long time in charge of the 1,200 women employes of the H. J. Heinz Company of Pittsburgh, hiring and firing them as she thought necessary.

She began work at fifty cents a day when she was thirteen, to help support her brothers and sisters.

So the story goes of these heroic girls who, with nothing but their courage and ability, played the Game to a winning finish.

They made good because they grasped the vital truth that a handicap is merely an invitation to climb higher.

Anybody with that outlook goes on to victory.—Selected.

HIS LAMPS.

"Ye are the light of the world."

Annie Johnson Flint.

His lamps are we,
To shine where He shall say;
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor for the light of day;
But for dark places of the earth,
And for the murky twilight gray,
Where shame and wrong and crime have birth
And where the lamp of faith grows dim,
And souls are groping after Him.
And as sometimes a flame we see,
Clear shining, through the night
So dark we cannot see the lamp—
But only see the light,
So may we shine, His love the flame,
That men may glorify His name.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

West Lexington, S. Davidson Charge.—Ninety-three present in Sunday school last Sunday was a very good record for a rainy day. The offering was $4.42, which may be considered a good average per person in attendance, when the fact that our school is composed largely of children.

Pastor Crutchfield preached Sunday morning and Sunday night. The text of the morning sermon was Hosea 7:9, and the theme of the discourse was, "The Unconscious Flight of Time." At the evening service the text was Numbers 10:29, and the subject discussed was, "A Kind Invitation." The attendance at both services was below the average, due to the rain.

Prayer services in the homes of the people have been started in the community of the church. They are held on Tuesday night. These services are conducted by the pastor, at the request of the people. The mid-week prayer service at the church is held as usual on Thursday night.

Pastor Crutchfield will go to Forsythe county next Sunday to assist Rev. C. H. Whitaker in a revival meeting at one of the Churches on West Forsyth Charge. In his absence the appointments at Mt. Carmel, Yadkin College and West Lexington churches will be met by the writer. We understand that a Children's Day program will be rendered at Mt. Carmel church next Sunday morning at the regular hour for service. The afternoon appointments will be at Yadkin College at three o'clock. The third and final service for the day will be at West Lexington at 7:45 o'clock at night.

Two new member were received at the night service at West Lexington last Sunday, Mrs. Minnie Walser and Mrs. Margaret Wilson, who joined on profession of faith. We are glad to have these young women unite with us, and others will probably join with us at a later date. C. B. Way, Rep.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—We missed our regular service here last night (4th Sunday), as Mr. Spencer had been sent elsewhere in the educational campaign and the man who was to have spoken here failed to come. It was a strenuous day for Mr. Spencer. He had to go over into the next county for service that morning, come back here in the afternoon to conduct a funeral service, then go back to the same church, Whitakers', to preach that night.

Last second Sunday we were afraid there would be no preaching here as Mr. Spencer had gone off to Randolph Co. to see his dying father and attend the funeral. But a congregation gathered as usual, and just in time, faithful and loyal, Mr. Spencer arrived on the scene, having driven from Burlington that morning. I am told that he preached a good sermon, too, even under these adverse circumstances.

Mr. Spencer is a good man and inspires confidence by his upright life and his sincerity earnestness.

The 4th Sunday night in May Rev. E. R. Nelson, of our neighboring Baptist church preached for us, at Mr. Spencer's request, and gave us a splendid sermon. Mr. Nelson and his wife (a sister of Rev. N. M. Harrison) are always present at our monthly night services, and are most welcome visitors.

Mrs. Roberts, of Asheville, Mr. Spencer's daughter, has recently been on a visit to her father and mother here.

Mrs. Spencer has been quite sick for several days, but seems better at this writing. Reporter.

Fountain Place Church.—Our Children's Day exercise held on the Sunday night, June 6th, the program was of a high order and was rendered before the largest congregation this church has ever had. The offering was $24.31 for Foreign Missions. The following week our new seats were put in and they are so nice and comfortable, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the auditorium. The cost was more than $800.00 and by time this is in print they will have been paid for in full.

June the 14th our Daily Vacation Bible School was opened with an enrollment of eighty pupils, but since it has almost doubled and by the time it is out which will be the 2nd, of July, it will have reached an enrollment of one hundred fifty to sixty. The school is making a fine impression on the community judging from the fine things that it is provoking people to say about it. The closing exercises will be held Sunday night, July 4th, at 8 o'clock.

July 4th to the 11th, will be Anniversary Week with different ones of our leading preachers as speakers. Sunday morning the 4th the pastor will speak, Sunday night Closing Exercises of the Daily Vacation Bible School. Monday night Rev. J. D. Williams, Tuesday night Rev. Geo. R. Brown. Wednesday night Rev. T. M. Johnson, Thursday night Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Friday night Rev. P. E. Lindley. The president of the conference, Rev. A. G. Dixon, has been invited to speak morning and evening Sunday, July 11th.

All of our brethren and friends that are in reach are cordially invited to attend these services.

Our congregations are growing, both morning and evening, and our Sunday school is outdoing itself. It is having a steady growth. new pupils are in evidence in every session. Only two Sundays since May 1st that we failed to have new pupils, that was two rainy days. Last Sunday notwithstanding the rain we had a banner day, several new pupils.

G. H. Hendry, Pastor.

Dublin's Mocksville Charge.—We are glad to report that our Sunday school is moving along nicely. We were glad to have with us yesterday Rev. R. S. Troxler and family; Brother Troxler brought us a forceful sermon about concentrated life.

Our children's day was postponed from the third Sunday in June to second Sunday in July, on account of the down-pour of rain which refreshed the earth during the day. Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, came through the rain and preached to a very small congregation; he fills his regular appointments rain or shine. The revival meeting will begin on Monday night after the first Sunday in July and continue over the second Sunday. Pray for us to have a great revival. Reporter.

Henderson.—At the regular monthly business meeting of the teachers and officers of the Sunday school it was decided to buy some new song books for the Sunday school.

Sunday evening was the time for the Children's Day services. They had a splendid program of songs, duets and recitations, which was thoroughly enjoyed by a packed house.

The Senior Philathea Class held their semi-annual election at their business meeting. Those elected were: President, Mrs. Howard Thorne; 1st Vice President, Mrs. T. J. Evans; 2nd Vice President, Mrs. R. D. Starkey; Secretary, Mrs. T. J. Edwards; assistant Sec., Mrs. P. E. Renn; Treasurer, Miss Lucy Taylor; Teacher, Mrs. C. L. Finch; Assistant Teacher, Mr. S. R. Harris; 2nd assistant, Mrs. Emily Harris; Reporter, Mrs. R. A. Hunter.

There will be a District Rally of the Missionary Societies at Rehoboth Church Thursday. We hope everyone that can, will go. Speakers from High Point and Greensboro will be there. Reporter.

Bethel, Alamance Circuit.—The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies held their June meeting with Mrs. A. L. and Miss Marcia Foust.

The meeting was opened by the president with scripture reading followed with a prayer offered by Mrs. A. L. Foust. Following the business meeting a very interesting and helpful discussion was held on the topic, "Temptation and Victory." The same topic will be given for discussion at the next meeting which will be held the second Sunday in July with Mrs. Rev. G. W. Holmes.

At a previous meeting the officers for the year were elected as follow: Mrs. Lon McPherson, President; Mrs. Lonnie Stafford, First Vice President; Miss Marcia Foust, Second Vice President; Mrs. R. W. Lindley, Secretary; Mrs. G. W. Holmes, Treasurer; Miss Bessie Holmes, Cor. Sec'y; and Mrs. J. M. Foust, Record Agent. Officers in the Home Society were: Mrs. W. A. Foust, President; Mr. R. W. Rehobeth, Granville Ct.—Rev. Paul Kennett conducted services at Rehoboth Church Sunday morning. Notwithstanding the small congregation he made a splendid talk on Christian Education. Christian Stewardship was to have been Mr. Garrett's subject, but he failed to arrive and in his stead Mr. Kennett made a few well chosen remarks on the subject of tithing.

The District Missionary Rally will be held at Rehoboth Church Thursday, July 1st. A good attendance is expected from every church and auxiliary in this district. Everyone will bring lunch which will be served on the church grounds.

We are planning to have our children's day exercise next Sunday night at eight o'clock.

Boggs.

Franklin T. Boggs was born May 20, 1878. He departed this life June 2, 1926.

Uncle Frank had been in failing health for the past few months, but was never confined to his bed. He was taken worse all at once and was rushed to Durham Hospital, but he never recovered. No one thought the end was so near, but death came after a brief illness and was quite a shock to his many friends and relatives.

All that loving hands could do could not stay the icy clasp of death.

Uncle Frank professed faith in Christ about 17 years ago, and joined Efland M. P. Church. He remained a member there until death called him home.

He leaves to mourn their loss one brother. Mr. C. L. Boggs, of Efland, and two sisters. Mrs. H. D. Brown of Efland, Mrs. T. R. Squires, near Mebane.

On account of his pastor, Mr. Williams being away, Rev. T. M. Johnson of Mebane M. P. Church conducted the funeral service on Thursday evening at 4 o'clock, paying a beautiful tribute of respect to the deceased. Then the remains were laid to rest in the Efland church cemetery.

May God comfort all the bereaved ones.
Dear Uncle Frank, thou has left us.
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us.
He can all our sorrows heal.
Friends may think we'll soon forget thee.
And our wounded hearts be healed.
But they little know the sorrow
That's within our hearts concealed.

His Niece, Annie Squires.

In Memory of Jordan H. Spencer.

The death angel visited our flock on Friday afternoon, June 11, and took from us one of our most consecrated and loyal members of Fair Grove Church. On Saturday at 2 o'clock, P. M., the funeral service was held in his home church, by his pastor, assisted by Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk of the Children's Home. Mr. Spencer was in his seventy-ninth year when the end came. He had been sick for many months. For many years he had been a most consistent member of the church. It was the privilege of the writer to visit him several times during his illness. He at all times manifested a deep concern for the church and the Kingdom service.

Rev. Mr. Lowdermilk spoke of many things in the life of Bro. Spencer which told of his worth to the church and community. He reminded us of how Bro. Spencer's voice had been heard in song, prayer, and testimony at Old Flag Springs and New Hope churches, as well as the one to which he belonged when the end came.

Bro. Spencer leaves to mourn their loss a widow, three sons and three daughters and three sisters.

Tomie Spencer, High Point, N. C., Rev. Charlie L. Spencer, Enfield, N. C., Mr. Lee Spencer, Gibsonville, N. C., Mrs. O. D. Lawrence, Seagrove, N. C., Mrs. Martin McNeal, High Point, N. C., Miss Pearl Spencer, High Point, N. C. Sisters: Mrs. Edmond Tucker, Seagrove, N. C., Mrs. Louzine Lewallen, Asheboro, N. C., Mrs. Henry Beane Asheboro, N. C. And a host of relatives and friends.

A good husband is gone, a good father is gone, a good brother is gone, a good friend is gone, a good church member is gone, and we mourn, but not as they who have no hope, for we believe that he is now with Him who said, If I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself. D. I. Garner.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—We were very glad to have with us yesterday Rev. M. P. Chambliss and Mr. Kittrell. Both of them made splendid talks or rather sermons, for that is what they were.

Mr. Kittrell spoke on "Tithing," discussing "why we should tithe and the importance of Tithing." Mr. Chambliss preached on the object of "Training of the young people." It was a wonderful sermon and we all enjoyed it.

Mr. Chambliss asked how many in the congregation had ever heard of the High Point College and nearly everybody raised their hands so he said it wasn't any use for him to talk about the college very much, for we all knew something about it. So he just preached a good sermon.

We all enjoyed having Mr. Chambliss and Mr. Kittrell with us and we hope they will come again.

Our revival begins the fourth Sunday in August. I do not know who will assist Mr. Spencer in our meeting. Pray for us that we may have a good revival, for it is greatly needed in this community.

THE GRAY GOAT.

Silvia Grant paused in her walk to school at sight of two figures in gray. Their backs were turned to her, but she recognized something very familiar about them. Where had she seen that gray stuff with the white striped border before?

"Oh," she cried suddenly. "I know."

The two in front of her must be Dick and Doris McKay! The gray coats they wore must be—she hastened her steps, caught up with the two children and began walking with them.

"How do you like our new coats?" inquired Dick, boldly.

"I think they are beautiful!" replied Silvia. "Did your mother make them? She must be awfully clever!"

Doris put her little hand in Silvia's arm.

"Mother is awfully very clever," she said.

"You know what she made these coats out of, don't you?" asked Dick.

"Oh, yes," replied Silvia, "but I won't tell anybody."

"Tell if you like," said Dick. "We don't care. True pride isn't pride about clothes. We are proud of our mother and our work at school and being clean and truthful. We do not care if our overcoats are made out of an old gray blanket!"

"He does care a little," thought Silvia to herself, and her kind little heart ached for her friend, who was trying so hard to have the right sort of pride. She knew that the McKays were having hard times now on account of a serious accident to the father. She knew her own mother had given Mrs. McKay the gray blanket. She tried hard to think of something very comforting to say, but sometimes, you know, just saying nothing helps, too.

"Our old coats were too thin and shabby to wear any more," explained Doris. "Do you think we look all right in these?"

"Honey," said Silvia, "nobody in the world who hadn't seen the gray blanket and known you had it, would ever suspect what they were made out of."

"Well, I'm not ashamed," said Dick. "I'll tell them about it, if they ask."

"It's nobody's business," said Silvia hastily, because she knew how some of the kids loved to tease. "I don't believe in telling all your private affairs."

"Neither do I," said Doris. "Promise you won't tell, Dick!"

He would not promise but trudged soberly along.

As it happened, most of the children at school had gray woolen blankets on their beds very like the one from which Dick's and Doris' coats were made, but Dick's honesty kept them from kidding very much. There wasn't much fun teasing a fellow who didn't seem to mind!

At recess the McKays put on their gray coats and ran out with the others. It was a cold day even if it was spring but they were glad to get out for a breath of fresh air.

"I wish I had your nice warm coat," said Silvia to Doris. "I am chilly in this little sweater."

Doris offered to lend her coat, but of course Silvia would not take it.

The custom in that school was for all the children to line up after recess and march into the school-house and to their proper rooms. So when the bell rang there was a scramble to get into line. Left, right, left, right, they marked time, so they could keep step.

Because it had turned cold, the janitor had lit a large gas stove in the hall, and as the children entered the building most of them said: "Um-m-m!" How nice and cozy!" Silvia was chilly, and she said: "This feels good to me!" And stepping out of line for a second, sprang in front of the gas stove to get a little more of its genial warmth.

As usual, Silvia was wearing a pretty dress, ruffled and starched. As she flirted her skirt before the stove, a gust from the open door blew on the flames, and the next instant there was a shrill scream.

"Oh, help! I'm on fire!"

One of the little darting tongues of flame had licked the skirt of the little girl and at once shot up all over her. There was a screaming among the children, some rushing up the stairs, some dashing outside again, and some just yelling. A boy sprang to Silvia almost in an instant. He was pulling off his gray overcoat, and before any of the frightened teachers could reach the little girl, he had wrapped the coat tightly around her.

She held her breath and did not struggle, because her mother had often told her that if her clothes caught on fire, she must not run, and she must try not to breathe the flames.

When the teachers came the flames were out and Dick was still hugging his coat around the girl.

"Oh, I'm burnt!" sobbed Silvia. "My legs! Oh, oh!"

They hustled her across the street to a doctor's office, and there found out that she was not badly burned. It was bad enough though, and the school was closed for the rest of the day. Sadly the children went home to spread the awful news. Dick shivered all the way because in the excitement nobody had thought to return his gray coat.

"You did right," said his mother. "I am very proud of you, but you will have to wear your old overcoat now. Never mind! the warm weather will soon be here and you can run and keep warm. Thank God that you have strong lively legs."

But Dick did not have to wear his old coat long. The next day when the children were all in line in the hall, Mr. Hamilton, the Principal, came and stood before them on the stairs.

"Whose coat is this?" he asked, holding up a singed and burned gray coat.

"Mine," said Dick, and he was not a bit ashamed.

"Come here, boy," said Mr. Hamilton.

When Dick was standing beside him on the step, Mr. Hamilton said:

"We are going to ask you to let us keep this coat. We want to talk to the children about fires and how to put them out and save life. Do you know you probably saved little Silvia's life?" We want to put this coat in a glass case with a card telling how you put out the fire which threatened Silvia's life. We will put it where the children can come and see it in my office. And in case you should need it, here is something we will give you instead."

One of the teachers handed him a package, which Mr. Hamilton unwrapped and held out to Dick. It was a lovely new overcoat, such a coat as the boy had never owned in his life. He tried it on; it fit and still was big enough to allow him to grow some before the next winter.

"Thank you, sir," said Dick, his eyes shining.

"Now, children," cried Mr. Hamilton, "since we have a Hero in our school, let's give him three cheers! Real hearty ones, mind! Ready! One! Two! Three! Hurrah! Hurray! Hurray for Dick! Who's all right?"

The school answered in one great voice:

"DICK MCKAY!!!"—Selected.

THE CLEANSED ARE THE CLEAN.

"Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have a right to the Tree of Life," has the clear ring of the New Testament music about it, and is in full accord with the whole type of doctrine that runs through this book. If men are clean, it is because they are cleansed. If we are clean it is because we have been made so. The first beatitude that Jesus Christ spoke from the mountain was, "Blessed are the poor in spirit." The last beatitude that He speaks from heaven is, "Blessed are they that wash their robes." And the act commended in the last is but the outcome of the spirit extolled in the first. For they who are poor in spirit are such as know themselves to be sinful men; and those who know themselves to be sinful men are they who will cleanse their robes in the blood of Jesus Christ.—Alexander Maclaren.

—Rev. O. B. Williams, who has successfully piloted Community church for the past year and a half, resigned as pastor at a board meeting on last Tuesday night. Mr. Williams stated at the meeting that he expected to act upon the advice of his physician and retire from the active ministry for the next few months and try to regain his health.

Mr. Williams accepted the pastorate of Community church upon the action of the North Carolina Methodist Protestant conference in the fall of 1924. He came to Community church in its infancy and during his administration a strong organization has been effected, and much progress has been made in the various phases of church work. —Community Pulse.

MARRIED.

Curry-Perryman.

It will be of interest to the many friends of Rev. George L. Curry to know that he was married on the 24th of June to Miss Ida Mae Perryman. Miss Perryman is the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Perryman, Welcome, N. C. For several years she has been a teacher of high rank in the public schools of Davison county, and from her earliest years she has been a member of Mt. Olive Methodist Episcopal church where she has made a most splendid record in christian service.

The marriage was solemnized at the home of the bride in the presence of the immediate members of the family, the bride's pastor, Rev. Mr. Honeycut, and the writer officiating. The hearty congratulations and good wishes of a host of friends will attend this splendid couple as they travel life's pathway together.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JULY 11.

The Childhood and Education of Moses.

Lesson Text: Ex. 2:1-10; Acts 7:22.

Golden Text: Prov. 22:6.

The Central Truth: The baby that slept and wept among the flags of the Nile was the greatest potentiality for good except the One that graced the manger of Bethleham.

Scriptural Points.

1. A jealous and wicked king engaged in a futile warfare with the great Giver of Life. Heavy burdens of toil, imposed by cruel taskmasters, failed to reduce the birth rate of the chosen people. The fear of God fell upon the midwives and they refused to obey the king's mandate to kill the boy-babies. Next all the people were commanded to drown all the male offspring of the Israelites. To hide these children from the Egyptian soldiery and others, who would be only too anxious to carry out the king's decree, was the only way of safety.

2. Under this regime of ruthless cruelty Moses was born. And he was well-born. Pious parents smiled into the eyes that were destined to see visions of God, of world wide law and order, and of Messianic redemption. He was "a goodly child," a beautiful form, with a mind and soul capable of large development.

3. The narrow precincts of the home could not conceal him any longer. Like many another doubtless this child of promise was placed in an ark of bulrushes. And this improvised little boat was placed among the flags that fringed the banks of the Nile.

This was carrying out the letter but not the purpose of the cruel edict. A loving sister was put on guard to see that no harm came to the little one.

4. One day the king's own daughter, with her attendants, took a stroll along the river front, seeking a suitable place to bathe. They saw the ark at a distance. Her maid was sent to fetch it. Her royal fingers lifted the covering. Her royal eyes met eyes that wept. Her royal sympathies were awakened. Right then and there she took the baby to her own heart and adopted him as her own child.

5. Miriam, the loyal sister, and wise beyond her years, proposed to run and get a nurse for the child. Pharaoh's daughter gladly agreed. Swift feet soon brought the child's mother, the best nurse God ever made for babies.

6. Never was a royal commandment more cheerfully received or more faithfully obeyed: "Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages." Thrice happy mother! Her baby is now safe from harm, restored to her loving embrace, and she is to be paid also in coin for paying a debt of love.

7. Years swept on. The boy is put in school by the mother of adoption. He is an apt pupil. The age of manhood finds him a university graduate. "And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians."

8. From college walls he goes to become a man of affairs. He chose the military career. He became famous at forty. He "was mighty in words and in deeds."

Practical Points.

1. The most promising crop in all the world is the crop of babies. The most valuable harvest is the harvest of character. And the most splendid reward of toil is children trained for righteousness, usefulness, and glorious destiny. Many a proud and faithful parent has been enabled to exclaim: "Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me." Isa. 8:18.

2. Faith in God and much earnest prayer are indispensable in the training of children. Nothing short of these will save them from the fatal snares of the world. "By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw that he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment." Heb. 11:23.

3. The safest and best hiding-place for children, little and large, is beneath the wings of infinite Love, to which the precious ones may be dedicated by adoring parents.

4. The faith of the parents awakens faith in the children. The life and instruction of the parents determine the wise choices of their offspring. "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." Heb. 11:24, 25.

5. Providence exercises special supervision over every human being. "Casting all thy care upon him; for he careth for you." 1 Pet. 5:7.

6. The care of the heavenly Father extends also to the entire lower creation. "He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry." Ps. 147:9.

"Are not fine sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows." Luke 12: 6, 7.

—Fortitude is a great help in distress.

MARRIED.

Cheatham-Parham.

Graham, June 15, Miss Gladys Louise Parham became the bride of Thomas George Cheatham in a simple ceremony performed in the parsonage of the Methodist Protestant church at 10 o'clock. Mrs. Cheatham is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Parham of Henderson, N. C. Mr. Cheatham is the son of George E. Cheatham of Oxford, N. C.

After the ceremony they motored to Asheville and other points in Western North Carolina. After their return they will be at home in Oxford where Mr. Cheatham is in the wholesale business. Rev. D. R. Williams.

Powell-Rich.

A wedding that was beautiful in its simplicity occurred Thursday evening at the Graham Methodist Protestant church when Miss Eunice Claire Rich became the bride of Rev. Howard Peterson Powell of Spray.

The church was artistically decorated with white and pink holly-hocks and [illegible] blossoms with a tracery of green against a background of white. The altar was flanked with candles.

The wedding march from Lohengrin was used as a processional and the Mendelssohn's as a recessional.

The vows were spoken before the Rev. William J. Gordon of Spray, assisted by Rev. D. R. Williams, pastor of the bride. Messrs. Wallace Grubbs of Winston-Salem, Gordon Smith of Spray, Robert and Frank Rich, brothers of the bride, acted as ushers. As the ushers took their places at the altar, the two junior bridesmaids, Ruth Forlines of Durham and Anne Erwin Holt of Burlington, entered. The bride had her only sister, Miss Ethel Rich, as maid of honor. She was followed by the tiny ring bearer, Martha Lane Forlines of Durham, who carried the ring in the heart of a lily.

The bride entered on the arm of her brother, Alvis M. Rich, of Burlington, who gave her in marriage.

They were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Rev. Robert Jerome of Goldsboro. During the ceremony "To a Wild Rose," by MacDowell, was softly played.

The bride is the elder daughter of Mrs. Lettie McCoy Rich and the late W. A. Rich. She was graduated with high honors from Elon College and for two years an efficient teacher in the Burlington city schools. For the past two years she has been engaged in private teaching. Mrs. Powell is a talented reader and deeply interested in the work of the church, having served as teacher and superintendent of the junior department for several years.

Rev. Mr. Powell is the youngest son of Mr. Luke Powell and the late Mrs. Powell, of Clinton. He was educated at Duke university and Asbury college, Kentucky. At present he is pastor of the Spray Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is considered among the leading young ministers of the denomination.

The many beautiful and valuable gifts attested the popularity of this couple.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE, JULY 19-26, HIGH POINT COLLEGE, HIGH POINT, N. C.

The greatest need of the Methodist Protestant Church in the North Carolina Conference is a better trained and wider visioned leadership. We must have Sunday School teachers, Christian Endeavor leaders, and other workers who have trained themselves under God's guidance, for the larger tasks of the Kingdom. In our ever expanding program, we must have men and women who are "Workmen approved unto God, that needeth not to be ashamed."

One of the ways we are attempting to meet that need is through the Young People's Summer Conference. For the last four or five years, we have gathered together from every section of our Conference, the select young people who have visions of the possibilities of their lives in Christian service, and who are willing to devote a week of their time to a better and more adequate preparation, for an intensive study of the church and her problems. These young people have gone back to their respective churches better equipped for their tasks and with a greater vision of the place of the church in the work of the Master.

Our Conference this year will open with a Monday night session, Monday, July 19th. Delegates will arrive in time for supper at the college on Monday evening. After supper is served a Vesper service will be held on the campus, with a message from Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., former president of our Young People's Board. At the 8:00 o'clock service Rev. N. G. Bethea and Rev. E. Lester Ballard will give an illustrated lecture of their trip to the Holy Land.

The Conference will close with a graduation service and presentation of certificates on Monday morning, July 26th.

PATRICK HENRY: SOME PERSONAL TRAITS.

Patrick Henry's eloquence has so overshadowed everything else about his personality that his character is not so well known as it should be. That his character does not suffer in comparison with his far-famed eloquence should be a matter of pride to all Americans. Indeed, his eloquence was due, in a large measure, to his loftly character, and this fact has been mentioned by many of his contemporaries. George Morgan, in his "The True Patrick Henry," quotes David S. G. Cabell's tribute, as follows: "History does not record any example of a greater natural orator. He was not an orator as a result of a long and elaborate course of preparation. The loftiness of his nature, his strong emotions, his possession in himself of everything noble and true more than supplied the rhetorician's art."

George Mason, writing of Henry in 1774, spoke to the same effect: "He is by far the most powerful speaker I ever heard. Every word he says not only engages but commands the attention: and your passions are no longer your own when he addresses them. But his eloquence is the smallest part of his merit. He is in my opinion the first man on this continent, as well in abilities as public virtues," etc.

John Adams paid him this tribute: "From personal acquaintance, perhaps I might say a friendship, with Mr. Henry of more than thirty years, and from all that I have heard or read of him, I have always considered him a gentleman of deep reflection, keen sagacity, clear foresight, daring enterprise, inflexible intrepidity, and untainted integrity, with an ardent zeal for the liberties, the honor, and the felicity of his country and his species."

His kind and benevolent disposition is shown in a letter to his daughter: "Unite liberality with a just frugality; always reserve something for the hand of charity; and never let your door be closed to the voice of suffering humanity. Your servants especially will have the strongest claim upon your charity; let them be well fed, well clothed, nursed in sickness, and let them never be unjustly treated." "It is a tradition among the Henry negroes," says his biographer, "that their grandparents were treated just as Patick Henry here admonishes his daughter to treat them."

Morgan says: "Henry himself sometimes played school-master. This we learn from William Wirt Henry, who had from his Aunt Sarah an interesting detail respecting Patrick Henry's family customs. It was his habit, said she, to seat himself in his dining-room every morning, directly after rising, and read his Bible, and as his children would pass him for the first time, he would raise his eyes from his book and greet them with a 'good morrow.' And this he would never neglect. Henry's fondness for the Bible grew with his years. 'This book,' said he to a neighbor, 'is worth all the books that ever were printed, and it has been my misfortune that I never found time to read it with the proper attention and feeling till lately. I trust in the mercy of Heaven that it is not yet too late.' "

Colonel Samuel Meredith, in his sketch of Patrick Henry, says: "One thing is remarkable in Mr. Henry, and this information comes from his sister, Mrs. Meredith, a very pious woman, that he was never known in his life to utter the name of God except on a necessary or proper occasion. He was through life a warm friend of the Christian religion. He was an Episcopalian, but very friendly to all other sects, particularly the Presbyterian. His father was an Episcopalian, his mother a Presbyterian. He was so well pleased with Soame Jennys' Internal View of Religion that, meeting with a copy of it when he was Governor, or shortly after, he had several hundred copies printed and distributed at his own expense. Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion was his favorite author on the subject of religion."

The lofty moral tone of Henry's life is shown in a letter dated January, 1799, when referring to trouble with France, he wrote:

"Her conduct has made it the interest of the great family of mankind to wish the downfall of her present government, because its existence is incompatible with that of all others within its reach. And whilst I see the dangers that threaten ours from her intrigues and her arms, I am not so much alarmed as at the apprehension of her destroying the great pillars of all government and of social life; I mean, virtue, morality, and religion. This is the armor, my friend, and this alone, that renders us invincible. These are the tactics we should study. If we lose these, we are conquered, fallen indeed. In vain may France show and vaunt her diplomatic skill and brave troops; so long as our manners and principles remain sound, there is no danger. ....I am too old and infirm ever again to undertake public concerns. I live much retired, amidst a multiplicity of blessings from that Gracious Ruler of all things to whom I owe unceasing acknowledgments for His unmerited goodness to me; and if I was permitted to add to this catalogue one other blessing, it would be that my countrymen should learn wisdom and virtue, and in this their day know the things that pertain to their peace."

Morgan says: "Henry died well—in the full faith. 'Oh, how wretched should I be at this moment,' he said, 'if I had not made my peace with God!' "

"All other remedies having failed, Dr. Cabell proceeded to administer a dose of liquid mercury. Taking the vial in his hand, and looking at it a moment, the dying man said:

"'I suppose, doctor, this is your last resort?'

"The doctor replied: 'I am sorry to say Governor, that it is.'

"Then he said: 'Excuse me, doctor, for a few minutes;' and drawing over his eyes a silken cap which he usually wore, and still holding the vial in his hand, he prayed, in clear words, a simple, childlike prayer for his family, for his country, and for his own soul, then in the presence of death. Afterwards, in perfect calmness, he swallowed the medicine.

"Meanwhile, Dr. Cabell, who greatly loved him, went out upon the lawn, and in his grief threw himself down upon the earth under one of the trees, weeping bitterly. Soon when he had sufficiently mastered himself the doctor came back to his patient, who he found calmly watching the congealing of the blood under his finger-nails, and speaking words of love and peace to his family, who were weeping around his chair. Among other things, he told them he was thankful for the goodness of God which, having blessed him all his life, was then permitting him to die without any pain. Finally, fixing his eyes with much tenderness on his dear friend, Dr. Cabell, with whom he had formerly held many arguments respecting the Christian religion, he asked the doctor to observe how great a reality and benefit that religion was to a man about to die. And after Patrick Henry had spoken to his beloved physician those few words in praise of something which, having never failed him in all his life before, did not then fail him in his very last need of it, he continued to breathe very softly for some moments; after which they who were looking upon him saw that his life had departed."

H. H. Smith.

SIN AND ITS BLIGHTING EFFECT ON THE SOUL.

All the activity that man has engaged in mental or physical, from the dawn of creation till the present day, can be classified under two heads,—right and wrong, or right and unrighteous. There is a solution to every problem in life. We succeed or fail as we use right or wrong methods. Who can deny that life is a problem, or that some men succeed and some fail in its proper solution? No man ever failed while doing the right. No man ever made the greatest possible success who did the wrong.

Then, broadly speaking, we would say that every mistake and every misdeed of every nature, whether ignorantly, unintentionally or intentionally done, is sin. It is sin because it throws us out of harmony with the powers that propel us upward. If the activity is not right it is unrighteous, and according to St. John, if it is unrighteous it is sin. He says in his first epistle, "All unrighteousness is sin."

However, John says, "There is a sin not unto death," also, "There is a sin unto death." Here John seems to infer that God does not hold us accountable for all our unrighteousness. Namely,—mistakes and unintentional blunders, while we are brought to account for purposeful transgressions. While some of our mistakes and blunders may not bar the gates of Heaven to us, yet it is true that no mistake was ever made that did not unfavorably affect man. The unfavorable result of the activity brands it as a mistake. This leads us to another thought.

Namely,—Why is it a sin to engage in certain conduct? Is it because God said, "Thou shalt not!" Or did God say "Thou shalt not" because it was wrong?

There is in every person a spark of the Divine, and at the same time he is tainted with the spirit of the evil one! Therefore, having this dual nature we are possessors of noble impulses and high aspirations. Evil being resent, we have, also, base impulses and car al desires.

"For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of he flesh reap corruption; but he that sowth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap fe everlasting." To use different language: f we obey our better nature it will keep us n harmony with the univer e and lead us t higher and nobler life of usefulness, and at he same time bring us into the likeness and avor of God. While if we fail to resist the ownward pull of moral gravity we shall be lienated from God, mar the divine likeness nd be reduced to the level of the beast. "To e carnally minded is death."

Ralston classifies the precepts of God as noral and positive. He says that in the noral we are able to see the propriety of His ommand, while in the positive we are not. While we may not see the propriety of some f God's injunctions, it is very doubtful if God ever made any particular line of conduct bligatory on the part of man except as He aw it would keep him out of the quagmire f degradation and lead him to a higher and etter life.

Now we are able to answer the question sked in a preceding paragraph. It is sinful o engage in all forbidden conduct because t is detrimental to the best interest of soety. Man might never have discovered it, ut certain lines of behavior would have een hurtful had God not revealed Himself o the world. To lie, steal, commit adultery, ovet, etc., would have thwarted the upward rend of man had they not been forbidden. A knowledge of this fact, to my mind, is vhat prompted God to give us our great and vonderful code of laws, that we might not e subjected to the 'trial and error method' f learning, which is a very expensive one.

Whenever man comes to a realization of he above fact, that his future destiny, in a arge measure, is the product of his own conluct, it will greatly stimulate the impulse to lo the right. "A man is not punished for his sins, but by them." Every sinful act leaves ts stamp upon the individual, and gradually he best of men can be transformed into demons of darkness.'

A truth that makes the above more terrible is the fact that, in a sense, sins are nevr forgiven. The soul in regeneration is leansed from all guilt, and restored to the favor of God. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us." However, it is hardly probable that the ideals are as lofty or the impulses as noble as they would have been had sin not worked its blighting effect on the soul. While pure, the soul will be dwarfed and its capacity for the greatest enjoyment of the bliss of that 'perfect day' is in question. It is an established fact, and one to be regretted that our capacity for service and spiritual revelation is limited, in this world in that our spiritual, mental and physical beings are proportionally reduced or affected. Further, these powers are not restored. God freely forgives the act of transgression, but the effect of the misdeed is stamped upon the soul for all eternity. The cancer is cured but the scar forever remains.

W. M. Loy.

A REMEDY, NOT EXTENUATION REQUIRED.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(We trust every reader of the Herald will read the following article by Bishop Candler carefully and thoughtfully. It will bear a second reading. Instead of extenuating and apologizing for the fault and sins of both old and young, they should be freely and honestly admitted, and an adequate remedy applied. Some of the foaming, effervescent addresses that we hear on "young people" give us the "fidgets." They are fallacies from beginning to end.

They sound as if young people had never had any attention given them until recently This we know to be false. We've happened to be acquainted with "young people" for more than 60 years, and know whereof we speak.

We heard an address at a Sunday School Convention a few years ago, in which the speaker, (a woman) apologized for, and tried to defend, all the "flappers," and immodesty in dress, and general lawlessnes of the age. I don't want any such Sunday School "bosses" to have access to my children. I would prefer the tutorage of a Hardshell Baptist, i. e., no Sunday school at all. But read the following article and digest it well

J. F. Dos'er.)

There is a disposition upon the part of a certain type of men to defend the youth of today against any charge of unusual disorderliness.

Perhaps such efforts to explain, or extenuate, the wrongdoing of the young are inspired by the conviction that they are quite necessary.

If such apologies for youthful delinquency must be made, they should face the facts of record without any attempt to blink or blur them. General observations to the effect that the young people are no worse, or not so bad as their parents, are worthless.

If one is no better than his father, he has fallen below what he ought to have been. So Elijah, the prophet, believed, and he "requested for himself that he might die, saying, Now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers." (I Kings, xix:4.)

When the parents of the youth of today were young the same eulogies were passed upon them as now are being pronounced upon their offspring. Pleasing talkers said they were the best generation the world ever saw; but now the same sort of defenders of the youth of today charge the youth of yesterday, who are now parents, with being bad and almost wholly responsible for the wrongdoing of the rising generation.

But what are the facts?

"The Annals of the American Academy of Political Science" devotes its May issue to the discussion of crime. Its figures are more reliable than the guesses of declamatory optimists, and they are far from being cheering. They show an alarming increase of crime in the land.

In the year 1900 there were 2.1 homicides for every 100,000 people in the country, as compared with 7 for every 100,000 in 1915, and 8.5 for every 100,000 in 1924. The nation was never so bloody.

In the year 1924 crooks stole $170,000,000 by fraudulent bankruptcy, and bankers lost $200,000,000 by forgery that year.

Unlawful race track gambling now amount to $500,000,000 annually.

And the young are responsible for an alarming part of these and other shameful vices and crimes.

The proportion of young people committed for crime shows a marked increase. During the first six months of 1923, 51.6 percent of all commitments for criminal offenses in the United States were of persons from 18 to 34 years old, and the figures for 1924 and 1925 are even higher.

Forty-nine percent of the commitments to the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kans., were violators of the drug law, and those drug prisoners averaged 23 years of age.

The lamentable fact is that there has been a dreadful breakdown of the morals of both old and young people in the United States. This is indubitably the present condition of the country, however we may account for it.

Education, or what is called education, was never so general and crime was never so prevalent. Evidently increase of knowledge is not a remedy for arresting wrong-doing.

Increase of the wealth of the nation, with the consequent acceleration of the tendencies to luxury and self-indulgence, doubtless has much to do with the matter; but the American people will not be poorer than they are now. On the contrary, their riches will certainly increase unless some unprecedented disaster overtakes them. The decrease of their earthly goods by no possibility can be expected to reform their lives; for they will not allow any decrease in their possessions, even if poverty could purge away their impurity.

Parental instruction and parental authority are manifestly impaired. The American home has suffered great deterioration in recent years. But if the youth are bad and the parents are worse, who is to restore its lost powers?

President Angell, of Yale university, in a recent address, tries to take a reassuring and cheerful view of the situation; but he hardly succeeds in attaining his evident purpose.

Among other things, he says of present-day conditions, in the colleges: "To be blase, to have at one's tongue's end all the catch phrases of the nihilistic and blashphemous writers of the day is accounted good form and, as an evidence of up-to-dateness, is regarded as almost as essential as the wearing of the correct cut of clothes, the proper shape of hat, the accepted collar and tie, which, taken together, are the obvious marks of the socially sophisticated."

President Angell does not paint the picture too darkly. It has been no more than a few short months since there were a series of revolts, or mutinies, among the students of a very considerable number of colleges and universities in the northwestern states, and of some in the middle west. And now the newspapers report a riot of 2,000 students at Princeton, one of the most sober-minded and steady-moving institutions of learning in America.

President Angell does not deny that following the World war there has been grave damage to religious faith among college students, accompanied by a reprehensibly "rebellious attitude," of mind; but he seeks to relieve the forbidding aspects of the case by comparing the conditions of today with those of the period which followed immediately the Revolutionary war. He says the "intellectuals" of that time assumed and affirmed that "never again would educated men give credence to the tenets of any revealed religion, and least of all to those of Christianity." But he goes on to say, "Despite this fact, the next century saw some of the most profound revivals of religious interest, affecting the entire life of the college and leading great numbers of its students into the ministry and the mission field."

In these statements President Angell speaks accurately concerning the conditions prevalent in the whole country, and in Yale College particularly, just before "the Great Revival of 1800."

Dr. Timothy Dwight, a grandson of Jonathan Edwards, who was the most conspicuous leader of "the Great Awakening," which began in his church at Northampton, December 1734, and prevailed at length throughout all the Colonies, came to the presidency of Yale in 1795, when it was honeycombed with clubs of atheists among the students. Dr. Lyman Beecher, who was matriculated in the institution about that time is authority for the statements that "it was in a most ungodly state" and that "most of the class before me were infidels, and called each other 'Voltaire,' 'Rousseau,' 'D'Alemburt,' etc."

Similar conditions prevailed in other colleges of the country. Bishop Meade, speaking of that time, declared, "I can truly say that then, and for some years after, in every educated young man in Virginia whom I met I expected to find a sceptic, if not an avowed unbeliever." Of the College of William and Mary, which was founded in religious motives to serve the Christian cause, the venerable Bishop said it was "the hot-bed of French politics and religion."

The Presbyterian General Assembly in a deliverance made in 1798 said:

"Formidable innovations and convulsions in Europe threaten the destruction to morals and religion. Scenes of devastation and bloodshed, unexampled in the history of modern nations, have convulsed the world, and our country is threatened with similar calamities. We perceive with pain and fearful apprehension a general dereliction of religious principles and practice among our fellow-citizens, a visible and prevailing impiety and contempt for the laws and institutions of religion, and an abounding infidelity, which in many instances tends to atheism itself. The profligacy and the corruption of the public morals have advanced with a progress proportionate to our declension in religion. Profaneness, pride, luxury, injustice, intemperance, lewdness and every species of debauchery and loose indulgence greatly abound."

What grave remedy for those dreadful conditions? They were purged away by "the Great Revival of 1800."

The colleges of the country were especially favored by that heavenly visitation; and most notably Yale college, which was revolutionized in 1802 by a revival during which it is recorded that it seemed as if "the whole mass of students would press into the kingdom" and "nearly all the converts entered the ministry."

But that gracious result did not come from President Dwight's telling the students that they were better than their fathers, and that they would presently outgrow their infidelity and abandon their immoralities. From the moment when he came to the presidency he waged incessant warfare against the scepticism of the hour and the evils to which it gave birth, until at last, according to Lyman Beecher, then a student there, "all infidelity skulked and hid its head."

The country now needs more men like Dr. Timothy Dwight, who during his presidency of Yale conducted in the institution "thirteen special revivals, or one every two years, besides several other seasons of more than usual religious interest." From those revivals more than two hundred young men entered the Christian ministry, and during that revival period Yale influenced more powerfully and benignly the life of the republic than it did before or has ever done since.

We need now in all our colleges revivals such as prevailed there then. There has been in our institutions of learning quite enough pettifogging about "higher criticism." "evolution," and the like.

Colleges and universities are centers of influence, for good or for evil; and their authorities should never lose their sense of responsibility for the welfare of the people.

The nation needs again a revival or religion throughout the national domain, and our educational institutions can do much to prevent or promote such a wide-spread work of salvation. Let them have done with shallow reforms of a mere superficial sociology, and call their students and all the people to repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The people have had enough cutaneous treatments by reformers—sociological "skin doctors." What they need is the constitutional remedy of regeneration.

Our nation—and the whole world—needs a rescue, and not a reform. It needs religion, not mechanical reconstruction.

Least of all does it need any palliation of the sins of youth or extenuation of the sins of older people. It needs to have all classes purified from sin.

If Earnest N. Quirer will read 1924 Discipline page 46, and 1925 N. C. Annual Conference Journal page 78, perhaps some light on questions asked in last week's Herald will be obtained. B. M. Williams.

REVIVAL MEETING AT CAROLINA.

A series of revival services began at the Methodist Protestant church at Carolina last Sunday night and the services so far during the week have been well attended. Rev. Clarris Isley, the pastor, is being assisted in the services by Rev. H. L. Isley, the pastor of the Saxapahaw charge. Rev. Mr. Isley is a very able preacher and has been delivering some strong and forceful semons each evening.

At the service last night Rev. C. B. Way, of Lexington, was the preacher, and made an earnest plea in a message on the theme, "God's Love." The altar call was made at the conclusion of the sermon and four young men responded and were happily converted.

Mr. Wayne Curtis, of Bellmont, is directing the singing for the services. The pastor announces that the series of meetings will continue all this week and a part of next week.—Burlington Daily Times.

WINONA ASSEMBLY SEASON OPENS.

The thirty-second season of Winona Assembly and Bible Conference Winona Lake, Ind., opened most auspiciously on Sunday, June 27, with a record breaking attendance of more than 5000. The weather was perfect, the park never more beautiful, and the great crowd of people never more enthusiastic over the future of this great religious center of the West.

At 3:00 P. M. a great service was held in the Sunday Tabernacle, when the "Student League of Many Nations," students of the Bible Training School, directed by Dr. J. A. Davis, gave the program. Representatives of twenty-one Nations in their native costumes thrilled the great audience with their songs and stories given in their own languages as well as in our own.

Hundreds declared that they had never heard or seen the Gospel proclaimed with greater power. All who passed out of the Tabernacle were impressed as never before, that the Gospel still has the power to save.

STILL ON THE WAY.

We are still receiving orders for the Children's Day Supplies, because for various reasons some Sunday schools have been delayed, and others on account of local conditions have preferred a later date.

The schools can hold the service when it suits them, provided the date does not trespass upon the time sat aside for the Rally Day Service of the Board of Education.

If your school has not yet ordered the free supplies for a Children's Day Service, please send me a card as soon as possible at Berwyn, Md.

We are very anxious to fill more than 1000 orders this year, but we need more than have come to date to do that, and your order will help.

Again I urge that the offering be sent to your annual conference treasurer without delay, for the Union Board greatly needs the money.

All Children's Day offerings count on the budget but you must not fail to state to the conference treasurer THIS IS THE CHILDREN'S DAY OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS. If you fail to state that the Union Board stands to get only 25 percent of your offering, and 75 percent of it will go to the other Boards and institutions, whereas the Union Board is entitled to all of it, and will get it if you state the above in your letter.

A number have sent for the large illustrated posters which have the pictures of all our missionaries in the three fields, and of native workers, buildings, etc. There are more on hand, and we will be glad to send them to any of our schools without any charge, so long as the supply lasts. They give a fine impression of our workers and the work, and we are anxious to distribute them as far as possible.

The description of an evangelistic tour over our India district last fall and winter by Rev. Paul M. Cassen, his wife and native helpers, when the travelling over the extensive territory was by ox cart at the rate of 2¾ miles per hour, and 527 miles were covered, and a cart with two ponies would have saved 100 hours for preaching, was read by his father, Rev. S. F. Cassen of Towson, Md., to a group of friends, and led to one proposing that they send him a Ford for next Christmas.

Each of the party took out a Christmas Savings card at the Towson bank, but that the car might be used on the evangelistic tours which are to start as usual in November, the amount required was underwritten by them.

The kind interposition of a friend secured a gift of $50, and an evening's offering at the Md. Branch meeting of the W. F. M. S. made up the amount.

The check is well on its way to India, and the car will be secured there in ample time to be used as stated above.

The car is a gift to the evangelistic department of the mission work at Dhulia, and the Union Board will pay for its operation on the tours and other activities.

This practical expression of interest by our friends is greatly appreciated by the Union Board, for they have provided a long-felt need, a great time saver, and by it much more preaching will be done, and other kinds of service can now be rendered by our devoted missionaries.

There are other needs which could be met by similar efforts and gifts, but which the Union Board cannot supply for lack of funds, and we hope this splendid gift may be followed by others. Fred C. Klein.

"How can you tell a Christian from a non-Christian?" was the question asked by Bishop Herbert Welch in his recent baccalaureate sermon at Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J. Then followed his own answer: "By the extent to which his life is a life of love."

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Saturday evening and Sunday, July 3rd and 4th, found me at Saxapahaw in a District Sunday School Convention. This Convention was well attended, and was splendidly directed by Mr. E. W. Mann, who is also the Superintendent of the Union Sunday school at Saxapahaw. The program was well planned and well carried out.

Rev. J. A. Burgess and Rev. H. L. Isley were cooperating in this convention. Rev. G. W. Holmes was also present in the Sunday sessions. We had the pleasure of meeting and greeting several of the High Point College students in these meetings.

Graham.

On Sunday evening we had the pleasure of visiting awhile with Rev. and Mrs. D. R. Williams, and then of preaching for Brother Williams at 8:00 o'clock. We were anxious to know just how Brother Williams is getting along, so while we had already visited Graham once this year, we planned to stop more to see him than anything else, and then agreed to preach because it would help him.

Brother Williams is not well yet; but he is wonderfully improved and we are hoping he is on the road to permanent recovery. He has passed through what many of us, who are not so strong as he, could never have stood. Let us continue to pray that this faithful servant of the Master may be given strength to carry on the work he loves so much to do.

His congregation has been exceedingly kind to him and Mrs. Williams. Last Sunday morning they voted to release Bro. Williams from any Sunday evening services for the month of July.

The Budgets.

We are now passing through the Summer months when so many churches let up on their payments to the annual conference and the General Conference Budgets. Our annual conference treasurer has not sufficient funds in hands to meet current expenses. It may be that in some cases church treasurers have in hands funds that might be sent in. Please help out all you can by paying up as fast as possible on the budgets.

Summer Conference.

July 19-26 will soon be here. We trust that all pastors and many laymen and many young people are planning to attend this important gathering at the High Point College. A splendid program awaits you there.

Appointments.

C July 10 and 11—Pensacola, District Rally
July 17 and 18—Weaverville.
July 18—at night, Asheville.
July 19-26—Summer Conference, High Point College. I should like to meet you there.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

Fair Grove, Why Not Ct.—We held our Children's Day service at night, July 4th. The children did well. Miss Ruth Vuncannon of the Children's Home was visiting her uncles, L. A. and J. E. King, and helped to train them. Many thanks.

Our pastor did not preach for us Sunday afternoon as he was on the program for the County Sunday School Convention at a near by church.

Bro. Garner is teaching a vacation Bible School for the children three afternoons in the week both here and at Sea Grove. The children seem to be liking it fine.

Our special meeting will be held the 1st Sunday in August as usual. This church and community suffered a great loss in the death of Uncle Jordan Spencer, but he was ready and willing to go to his Heavenly home.

LIFE'S JOURNEY.

"Now, whither, my little sister,"
Said a woman old and gray,
"Go your helpless feet a roaming,
On the world's unsheltered way?"

"You, with your face of flowers,
And the youth bright in your eyes,
'Tis a weary way, my sister,
To tarry at home were wise."

"I must go, ho! good grey woman,"
Hath the little sister said,
"Out into the world of toilers,
That I may find me bread."

"Ah, child," said the old grey woman,
"There evil awaiteth thee."
"But nay," said the little sister,
"If my eyes no evil see!"

"And evil, with words beguiling,
Will whisper in thine ear."
"But nay," said the little sister,
"If my ears no evil hear."

"And, oh! but the world is ruthless.
There are few to pity thee,"
"But nay," said the little sister,
"My Father is close to me."

Out into the world she wandered
With her face like flowers sweet,
Earning her bread of toiling
In the marts of the busy street.

And evil, bedecked with roses,
Lured with the hues of sense,
She passed them all unseeing,
With her eyes of innocence.

And the tongues of evil, whispered,
Full many a guileful word;
But ears that are sealed to sinning,
Have never the whispers heard.

In no snares of evil spreading
Have her busy feet e'er trod,
For ever the little sister
Holds fast to the hand of God.

SERMON MOVES TO SONG.

Prof. Lindsey, music teacher and composer, of Henderson, member of the Presbyterian church, heard Rev. R. A. Hunter preach a sermon that so inspired him that he went home and composed a song which he has dedicated to Brother Hunter. Mr. Lindsey sang the song for the first time before the public at our church in Henderson last Sunday morning in the presence of a congregation that filled the church.

PROTECTION FROM POISON OF FALSE DOCTRINE.

What would we think of town commissioners who would connect up their water systems with poisonous springs? We are confident that such officers would promptly lose their jobs. What are we to think of teachers and agencies which open the way for the stream of error to permeate the church? Surely it is fair to say such teachers and agencies should be removed.

What would we think of a father who, because of his desire to maintain a large manufactory, would not protect his children against the poisonous fumes that come from that factory? It would be fair at least to say that he was unworthy of fatherhood, and he should be compelled to save the life of his children, or they should be removed from him. What shall we say of a church so carried away with the idea of a big organic union that it is ready to allow its people to be spiritually poisoned in order to accomplish it? Surely such a church would receive condemnation from him who stood in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks.

The church must do something to save her people from the poison of false doctrine, and that something is imperative and immediate. —The Presbyterian.

SLAVERY STILL EXISTS. WHAT SHOULD WE DO ABOUT IT?

—Slavery exists in 19 distinct areas in different parts of the world and forced labor in many other sections, according to a statement to the State Department made public today by the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches.

Even in regions controlled by the United States, the churchmen report, are found certain forms of peonage closely akin to forced labor. The statements made by the church officials, they say, are based on reports made to them by travelers and investigators and substantiated by the recent investigations of the League of Nations. By action of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, the churches are urging the Government to cooperate with other nations in drafting and then putting into operation a general convention providing for the complete abolition of slavery and all forms of forced labor akin to slavery. The churchmen refer specially to the International Conference on Slavery and Forced Labor called for September.

"The evil of slavery and forced labor has been recognized during recent centuries as having international implications and effects," says the appeal presented to the State Department. "It is now generally admitted that these evils can be completely overthrown and abolished only by the united and determined expression of the moral judgment of the world, and by the persistent, cooperative activities of the more progressive nations."

Reasons for cooperation by the United States as given by church officials are:

1. "Because slavery is an entrenched moral and economic evil having world-wide implications and effects.

2. "Because the United States through its history has developed and is committed to ideals and principles of significance for the entire human race in regard to the intrinsic and inalienable rights of man as man in respect to liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Failure of the United States therefore to participate actively in this world movement would belie the high ideals, principles and purpose of the people of the United States.

3. "Because the world has become such a compact economic unity that the United States inevitably purchases the products of areas still practicing slavery and forced labor and is therefore inevitably bound up with the system.

4. "Because this evil cannot be completely abolished without the concerted moral agreement and united practical activity of all the leading nations.

5. "Because the refusal of the United States to have a share in this humane movement would be a serious blow to the ideals and efforts of other nations along these lines.

6. "Because the Negroes of the United States are taking increasing and insistent interest in the achievement of justice and fair treatment for their own people in Africa.

7. "Because the United States is deeply and directly concerned from the economic standpoint in having fair labor conditions prevail in the production of these great, staple necessities of modern life, such as cotton, rubber, sugar, cocoa, etc, in regard to which African production will increasingly come into competition with American production."

NEXT WORLD SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Will be held in Los Angeles, California, July 12-18, 1928. Full information may be had by writing the office of the World Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

READING HISTORY FOR FUN.

There has been a steady increase in the last two decades of the proportion of history reading to novel reading. As people become better educated, and better read, they develop a taste for facts rather than for fiction. At least, they are no longer willing to feed intellectually on fiction alone.

The great popularity of romances, and of fiction in general, lies in the fact that they are entertaining. The artistic writer can develop such keenness of interest in his created characters and give such delight with his style, where wit, humor, love, pathos, sarcasm and all the human emotions are made to interplay dazzlingly like sheet lightning, that we are charmed, spellbound, mesmerized. But since truth is stranger than fiction the same delightful effects and results may be obtained from history treated in a masterly way.

We know that is true because we have just read such a history. We refer to the new book, already very popular, of Claude G. Bowers—"Jefferson and Hamilton."

Mr. Bowers has made a story of the titanic conflict between these two giants of statesmanship that is more absorbing than any modern romance we have made the acquaintance of. It is tinglingly interesting. And at the same time it is treated in a scholarly fashion with an impressive display of footnote references to original accounts that have been thoroughly digested and skillfully worked in to make a smooth story. The book is more instructive than most histories for the reason that it is history interestingly narrated.

Starting out with the meeting in New York of the first congress under the constitution we are made to see intimately the principal actors in the drama of evolving a new government and applying it to a new nation. What a time they had moving forward without the precedents and formulas so dear and so necesarry to governing bodies! Should they address the new president on his arrival as "Excellency," "Elective Highness," "Highness," or just plain "Mr. Washington?" They almost came to blows over these big little questions.

There was John Adams, fond of pomp and ceremony, presiding over the senate. There was Washington, rather tired and bored but devoting himself loyally to his heavy tasks while longing for beautiful Mt. Vernon far away. There was Mrs. Washington presiding over the executive mansion, a red brick house on Cherry street, where the "court chamberlain," Col. Humphrey, reveled so much in etiquette and show as to drive the president to "cuss."

The little town of New York felt that it had become one of the world's great capitals, like Paris and London, so a fast social pace was set. Those who had the entree of the "court" felt that they had to live in expensive homes, wear fine clothes, engage in a constant round of costly social functions and keep up with the latest styles from England. Poor Gen. Knox, secretary of war, almost made a bankrupt of himself trying to keep up with the procession.

Nobody approved more and enjoyed more the butterfly life of the "court" than the young, handsome and popular secretary of the treasury, Alexander Hamilton. But he gave most of his time to work. He had a giant's task, and he handled it like a giant. But his ambition was even greater than his genius and ability. He considered himself "premier," and he did not hesitate to undertake to direct the whole government. In time the secretary of state, plain Mr. Jefferson, got a little resentful. Finally he opposed, and the two former friends divided, each leading a following. The two parties simply grew up —the Federalists with Hamilton as their head, and the Republicans, or Democrats, with Jefferson leading them.

When the capital moved to the larger city of Philadelphia, the partisan war became bitter. "There were giants in those days," but they were not very polite. The battles were carried on not only in congress and the newspapers but also in the drawing rooms, law courts and even in the pulpits. Mrs. Bingham, wealthy and gracious hostess, was the social queen, and such a Federalist was she that only the Democrats who were prominent officials got invited to her mansion. Some of these from rural districts or towns hardly knew how to act. When Senator James Monroe called and the lackey announced him the senator answered: "I'm coming." But the tactful Mrs. Bingham never let him perceive that she had noticed his amusing error.

Persons in this story are not abstractions. Mr. Bowers has almost magically made them animate and very human creatures. Some are admirable; others are far from it. In their bitter wrangling scurrility was an every-day practice. A band played the "Rogue's March" under Jefferson's window; Hamilton was hit with a rock in New York. The revolution was on is France, and there were mob scenes in Philadelphia as the "English party" and the "French party" fought it out over here.

There came the Jay treaty, and Jay and other Federalists burned in effigy. There came the "Whiskey rebellion" with Hamilton seizing the occasion to exploit his military ambition. He marched his few prisioners through the main treet of Philadelphia like a Roman conquerer. Then there was the determined attempt of the Federalists to go to war with France and of the Democrats to keep the peace. The Federalists got through the alien and sedition laws, and then they began to put Democrats in jail. That gave them the upper hand for a while, but it ruined their party. They went too far in their autocratic, aristocratic government, and when the people got a chance they voted Federalists out.

This was a wonderful period in our history, and Mr. Bowers tells the story of it with that touch of genius which makes great books. It is not a new story but certainly a new handling of it. The book shows what can be done in the way of writing history. Shakespeare and others wrote history in the form of drama and made it exceedingly interesting. Mr. Bowers has proved that it can be done in the form of narrative—scholarly but not dry, entertaining but not frivolous.—Pathfinder.

CONSTRUCTIVE MODERNISM.

A friend has sent me a little book bearing the title "Constructive Modernism." I read it because of the word constructive. Constructive. Constructive is a term that does not suit modernism. As well talk of a constructive cyclone. I once heard a story of a man who wanted to move his house across the creek to a better site. He did not know how he was to do it. But a cyclone came along about that time, lifted his house across to the spot where he wanted it, and moved it without injuring the furniture or even breaking the dishes. Whether it dug a cellar and well at the new site the story did not tell.

Now that is what I would term a constructive cyclone. But to be perfectly frank, I never believed that story. For I have visited the path of a number of cyclones. I have seen homes destroyed. The house was torn into splinters. The trees were twisted, wrenched and shattered. The furniture was ruined. The treasured souvenirs and mementoes that had been sacredly preserved were scattered for miles for the curious eye to see and read. Utter, hopeless destruction was there. There was nothing constructive.

So I have regarded modernism. It has seemed to me utterly destructive. So I picked up this book with interest.

I found the destruction of those things I hold sacred and precious there.

He would destroy the Bible as an infallible rule of faith and practice. In spite of the fact that he says: "If modernism should ever attempt to displace or destroy the Bible, it would tacitly make all needful preparation for its own obsequies," he has undertaken to destroy it. He denounces those who "through the centuries have made the momentously melancholy blunder of risking their cause upon external evidences—more specifically the infallibility of the scriptures and the authority of the Church."

He confesses that "Paul, ranking theologian of Christianity," "held tenaciously to" "the monstrous doctrines of election, predestination, fore-ordination" though "rigid Calvinism thus dispenses with the Devil by putting God in His place." In short, Paul taught Calvinism; but Paul was wrong and modernism throws Calvinism out of the Bible by throwing the Bible out as an infallible rule.

Keep the Bible, he teaches, but only to "observe the same reactions in ourselves" that other men "report having found." Cultivate your conscience, look into your Bible, take out what your cultivated conscience approves. Reject all else.

What a Bible! Its truth and helpfulness based on yourself, not on the book.

He would take away the crown from Jesus Christ as God. Not that modernism denies His deity. Oh no. "His deity, which, however true, is a metaphysical abstraction eluding finite grasp and defying every definition." But their Jesus Christ is not our divine Lord "very and eternal God." He stakes everything "upon the perfection of the personality of Jesus." And that personality known not through the "four fragmentary narratives of that marvelous career which have come down to us from uncertain sources, as copies of other lost copies, translations of translations, etc.," which we honor as the gospels; but through the "historical background, involving the necessity of conceding and the psychological absurdity of denying that Jesus Christ" was an historical person.

He would take away the cross and its vicarious atonement. "In the same class of rejected teachings we may mention....various penal and substitutional theories of atonement" which he terms "hypotheses which do violence to moral sanctions and make salvation a quibble or dodge."

He would sweep away the fall of man. Modernism frankly accepts and confidently asserts....that mankind is not fallen but ascending." Therefore there is no need for "a legal or eucharistic plan of salvation from eternal punishment."

He would sweep away the church, certainly as at present constituted. "The church," he says, "has long been and is now a congeries of contradictions, collectively incapable of receiving or utilizing any endowment of consequence" and "is truly a spectacle to make angels weep and dis-believers blaspheme." This indictment he slightly lightens by a few other kindly words.

And so as we look, as the author has portrayed it, at the work of modernism, it has undertaken to crush, shatter, destroy, like some fell cyclone, our spiritual home and all its precious treasures. It has torn away our Bible, our Lord, our cross, our plan of salvation, our church, and left only fragments behind.

But where is the constructive part.

The author says that he could "enumerate the fundamental principles of constructive modernism in a dozen or a score of concise statements bearing a general resemblance to the planks of a political platform," but he resists the temptation to do so. What a loss.

So far as the writer can gather modernism does this:

With an "inner light" like and yet utterly unlike that of the devout believing Quakers, to guide him, the individual takes an old book, full of myths and untruths, and the figure, matchless in its purity and beauty but rising out of the mists, of a wonderful teacher, and from these two sources makes for himself such religion as he needs. If we misrepresent them, we apologize.

We have taxed the patience of the reader who has followed us thus far, not because we think the book has any value, but for two other reasons:

First. We want you to see the sublime egotism of the average modernist. The writer, penning himself as a modernist, says: "The ilustrious succession of modernists is as ancient as the recorded annals of the race, for the reason that in the realm of religion, from the beginning even to the present time, they have done just about all the thinking and writing that was worthy of preservation save as musty memoirs."

Second. We want you to see that modernism is not Christianity up-to-date, but not Christianity at all. It is paganism in religion, pantheism in philosophy, and despair in its end. They have taken away our Lord. They have given us nothing in His place.

There are two things more we would call your attention to:

The writer, publishing his book at Emory University, admits that the Bible teaches Calvinism, and that to get rid of Calvinism you must throw aside Paul's Epistles. We had suspected that all along.

Again the writer says: "At present it appears that only two Protestant denominations of repute in the United States even nominally hold to predestination, all others having expressly repudiated it. These two operate exclusively in the South, and representative men of both communions declare that even here the doctrine is virtually abandoned."

If one of the denominations mentioned is the Southern Presbyterian, we have no hesitation in saying that the writer's charge is absolutely untrue.—Presbyterian Standard.

ORATION THAT WON CONTEST

The seven orations on "The Constitution," delivered before an audience of 8500 persons at Washington as finals in the national contest for schoolchildren, were all excellent in the opinion of Chief Justice Taft and his supreme court associates who acted as judges. However, that of Herbert Wenig of Hollywood, Cal., more nearly met Vice-President Dawes's conception of good oratory i. e. "reason forcibly expressed and logically arranged." Wenig won first prize. His oration, which can be profitably read by every loyal American, follows:

From the beginning of recorded time the force that has propelled civilization onward has been man's desire for freedom. When that desire fails the wheels of progress cease their turning, and when most active civilization makes the greatest advancement.

Born beneath the sunny skies of Greece nurtured in England's island empire by those who wrested from an unwilling royalty the bill of rights and the Magna Charta, fostered in America by those lofty spirits that guided our revolution to success, its most baffling problem was faced by those men who, in May, 1787, in the city of Philadelphia, took up the work of consolidating and perpetuating the fruits of victory. For the crown and consummation of freedom's forward march was the American constitution.

Look with me at that group of men who in four months wrought out of the chaos and confusion of the confederation a constitution for all time. Into that constitution went the wisdom of Franklin, the majesty of Washington, the vision of Hamilton and the legal learning of James Madison. It has as its inheritance the dash and vigor of the minutemen at Lexington and Concord, the courage in the battery smoke of Bunker Hill, the prayers at Valley Forge, and the patriotic sacrifice in the ice and snow along the frozen Brandywine.

For the first time since governments had been instituted among men that constitution provided for a government whose base was in the bedrock of the God-given rights of the individual; for the first time a government had been formed, which guarded its citizens against encroachment of class and arbitrary power; for the first time man's desire for freedom found complete fulfillment in the constitution of the United States. In its check and balance system safety is assured. In its presidential message and presidential veto, in its representative initiative and senatorial clarification, its judicial review for constitutional violation, and finally in its amendatory prerogative, the constitution furnishes to the United States of America the greatest written guide for law making and potential progress ever devised by the human mind. And almost a part of the covenant itself incarnate and forever inshrined—a bill of rights guaranteeing to the individual his life, liberty, and property, undisturbed except by due process of law.

One hundred and thirty-nine years have passed since Washington took the oath of office to uphold that constitution. One hundred and thirty-nine years of constitution[al] blessing to America is the gift of the immortal men of '87.

My fellow countrymen: Only an American who knows our history, can feel the sacred symbolism of that constitution; only one whose soul is steeped in the spirit of the [o]ff days when the old meeting house in Philadelphia felt the throb of the great hearts of the constitutional fathers, can understand.

What solemn obligation is ours, to teach those who come among us from foreign shores, and who often, all too often, come to scoff because they do not understand. And here is our duty, here is our obligation to for those who do not know must be enlightened; and those who do not care must be taught to love our institutions, and the constitution by which they live.

And for those, who come with hatred in their hearts, ladies and gentlemen, no words of mine could fully express the indignation that should rouse every true American heart to stand on guard as they did on Concord bridge, who gave to us our flag, our country, our constitution.

For this flag, for this country and this constitution, Webster's voice still reverberates in the old senate chamber. For this Union and this constitution Lincoln wept, prayed and died.

"The flag," says Justice Holmes, "is but a bit of bunting to one who insists on prose."

But its red is our life blood, its stars our world, its blue our heaven. Its owns our land. At will it throws away our lives.

Without the constitution there would be no flag with its beautiful symbolism. There would be no united country; no supreme court to safeguard our liberties; without the constitution there would be no American republic founded upon equality; there would be no representation founded upon the ballots of free people.

Was there ever a document like this? Was there ever such a challenge to intelligent citizenship? Was there ever a martydom so sweet as death for its perpetuity?

The past has given us this constitution, let us guard with hallowed hand our inheritance and transmit it to the generation yet to come with no blot from our neglect and no blemish from our misdeeds.

The spirit of indifference which exists today toward our governmental institutions must be replaced with a spirit of interest upon the part of an intelligent and courageous citizenry. We must exercize that "eternal vigilance" which is the "price of liberty." If our constitution is to remain a vital living organism of government, if we are to hand down to posterity a constitution stronger and better because we have lived under it, you and I must stand sentry at the gate of constitutional promise guarding our citadel of freedom against the insidious plans of would-be reformers.

For real dangers are appearing on the horizon. Today disturbing reports reached us of the activities of organizations seeking to teach the necessity for a new national document. We are asked to destroy our constitu tion and to replace it with another made to satisfy the personal and selfish desires of class.

Ladies and gentlemen, if ever such a call comes, may every true citizen set his face "like flint" against the change and with universal voice let us fling back the answer. "Remove not the ancient landmark which thy fathers have set."

The pages of this sacred document are fast crumbling away, but their meaning and their significance are carried in your heart and in mine. Baptized by our fathers' blood, consecrated by our mothers' tears, dedicated to immortality by a free people, may our constitution ever stand as the emblem of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men," the sacred embodiment of the soul of the American people.

CROOKS, CORKSCREWS AND BOOTLEGGERS—THEY SHALL NOT PASS.

We have seen recently the largest crowd we ever saw assembled under one roof. It was the crowd which assembled Tuesday evening (February 23) in the Public Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, to hear Billy Sunday deliver an address on "Crooks, Corkscrews and Bootleggers—They Shall Not Pass." Fifteen thousand people were packed in the hall, and the police estimated that there were 15,000 who tried to get in and were not able. It would seem that the popularity of Billy Sunday has not waned to any considerable degree. The Christians of Cleveland specially welcomed the appearance of Billy Sunday at this juncture, because the city council of Cleveland had recently passed a resolution to petition Washington for light wine and beer. The resolution was passed in the face of the indignant protest of the best elements in Cleveland. Then Billy happened to ramble along and said a lot of things that many people were aching to have said. He has relieved the minds and the feelings of Cleveland church people very considerably. Those in charge of the Public Hall said that twenty-one minutes after the doors were opened 15,000 were in the hall, and great multitudes who were not able to get in filled the streets near the hall. Billy spoke in his characteristic language. He was acrobatic and full of ginger. Without fear he smote the enemy full and hard upon the face. He said: "Modify the eighteenth amendment? You might as well try to cross the Atlantic ocean on a grindstone drawn by cockroaches. You might as well try to elect the pope imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan. Our trouble is that we have a lot of bifocal politicians and judges; they see wet out of one eye and dry out of the other....We are told that nothing was created in vain, but I doubt if God had anything to do with producing this bunch of vultures who are known as bootleggers. Upon no other ground can I account for the brains of a buzzard, the heart of a hyena, and the odor of a polecat being found in a thing called human." Many times during his address the audience broke forth in a storm of handclapping and cheers.—United Presbyterian.

LOST ON ANNIVERSARY DAY.

A True Story

Florence Scott Hurst.

Eleanor's embroidered white dress and pink slip, her pink socks and white sandals, her white hat faced with pink, and her pink-tasseled white parasol were all laid out on her pink-and-white bed. If you had lived in Brooklyn and realized it was June, you would have said at once that this must be Anniversary Day. And that was what Eleanor's father said that very morning when mother let him peek at the dainty things as she laid them out after breakfast, making sure that nothing had been forgotten.

"Let's see, what anniversary is this, Persis?" he asked. "Something beyond the eighty-fifth, anyway, isn't it?"

"Eighty-fifth! It is the ninety-seventh," replied his wife emphatically. "I never get over the wonder of it! We had nothing like it in New England when I was a girl—though they do say most good ideas start there."

"Oh, you Puritans with your Plymouth Rocks and your Paul Reveres! No, you can't claim Anniversary Day. That is a Brooklyn institution. For ninety-seven years the Sunday schools of Brooklyn have annually paraded our streets and parks. Once a year we let 'em know what an army of Protestant children we have in this city of churches. Soon one hundred years"—

"Yes, yes," interrupted Persis, "I have no doubt—may we live to parade on the hundredth anniversary. But just now, Robert look at your watch and remember you must be back by two o'clock if you are going to the Park with us."

"Whew! It's nine already. Wh-ew!" whistled Robert, blowing a kiss, seizing his hat, and closing the door almost in one motion.

At two o'clock, however, when Eleanor, decked out in pink and white, stood waiting by the window for the first glimpse of father, the telephone rang and father quietly announced that business would detain him until too late to see the parade. "Tell Eleanor I'm sorry," he added, and rang off.

"O dear!" said Eleanor, almost ready to cry with disappointment. It was so perfect to have mother and father when they went anywhere.

"Never mind," comforted mother. "You have me and I have you, so let's start!"

There was something left to be glad about decided Eleanor, especially as she had a lovely new parasol to tilt over her shoulder! The public schools were all closed in honor of the occasion, and many other white-dressed children were on the street.

"Do you remember, Eleanor," asked mother as they walked along, "the first time you were in the anniversary parade? No, I don't believe you do—you were not quite two years old. We joined the parade as the Sunday schools marched back from the Park, but you could not walk fast enough to keep up even with the kindergarten children. We dropped back and back and on the second block the minister caught sight of you, picked you up, and carried you on his shoulder for another block. After that we stayed on the sidewalk and took our own pace."

"Didn't I see the parade the year before when I was not quite one?" asked Eleanor, interested in these stories of the baby that had been herself.

"Oh, yes, but from your own little carriage on the avenue. I kept you out of crowds and away from cake-and-ice-cream refreshments at that time, you may be sure."

"I remember the ice cream last year," said Eleanor, brightening. "We all sat beside a long, long table in the Sunday school room, and one boy had six plates. He really, truly did!"

"His mother wasn't around, I know," laughed Eleanor's mother.

"Oh, see the crowd!" exclaimed the little girl. "They're marching out of the church. We are just in time!"

Yes, there was a crowd: a crowd of boys and girls—among them Boy and Girl Scouts in uniform—and a crowd of men and women some of them pushing baby-carriages. A block or two down the street another similar crowd was assembling at another church. And a block or two up the street still another group with band and banners grew larger every minute. For in this parade, not only the "Methodists and Baptists have just gone along," but the Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Dutch Reformers, and all the rest fall into line.

Eleanor quickly found her place with the primary class, just back of the kindergarten, where her mother always marched to help keep the little ones in place.

The various groups were soon moving, hundred of children with their teachers coming from the south to join other hundreds approaching from the north, meeting on the broad avenue that leads to Prospect Park and marching together to the entrance. White and blue and gold were the banners at the head of each Sunday school where the little folks of the kindergarten led the hosts—banners with pictures of little lambs, or the Good Shepherd, or the star of Bethlehem. Then came Scouts with their nation's flag, and class after class from primary, junior, intermediate, and senior departments. Each school repeated the order of march: little ones leading and those of larger and largest sizes following.

Hundreds of people lined the way and cheered the groups as they passed, especially those decorated with bright caps all alike, or brilliant sashes, or gaily striped parasols. Click, click, click, went cameras here and there. And now they were in the Park—the mounted police guarding their passage across the Drive. In a few moments they reached the Long Meadow—and long, indeed, it looks to the little people, stretching away to the distant reviewing stand. But before they paraded its length, they rested on benches above which were signs lettered with the names of the churches. Scouts came with pails of water, teachers produced sanitary drinking-cups, and universal thirst was quenched.

Soon the roll of drums brought the paraders to their feet. Tramp, tramp, they marched time as the leading band began to play. They were off over the Long Meadow—banners, babies, grown folks, and all—coming down the slopes, emerging from the shade of the trees, falling into a long, long line of fours.

Eleanor trotted along beside the primary class banner, proud to hold one of its floating blue ribbons. She tried to keep her line of fours even, but you know some children just can't keep step and others will look around, instead of keeping "eyes front." But as they neared the reviewing stand, all, young and old, walked more erectly and sedately, for here were the officials and guests, men and women of national and local importance. Sometimes the President has come to Brooklyn to review the parade, sometimes a senator or the governor of the state, always some one who brought honor to the assemblage that honored him.

Cheers, nods, and smiles of recognition, and the grand stands, too, were passed. Immediately the marching line divided, the schools coming from the south and east turning back toward the southeast entrances, and the north and west sections going their ways, also—and thereby hangs this tale, for Eleanor's mother had not known of this division. She had dropped out of the line before its long march and taken a short cut to the West Drive, there to await Eleanor's coming with her class. From that point the two had planned to join friends and return to another Sunday school to which they had formerly belonged.

So mother watched from her station on the West Drive while hundreds and hundreds of the many thousands of marching hosts passed. Surely Eleanor's Sunday school should have reached here, before this, she thought uneasily.

"Have you seen the banners of St. Paul's?" she asked a woman who stood near keeping a baby-carriage in constant motion.

"St. Paul's? Oh, they go out 'way across the Park from here," was the reply.

"They do?" gasped Eleanor's mother. "Why, then, my little girl has gone that way! I was watching for her here."

"Now, that's too bad. Sure she has went the other way. They always do," rejoined the woman, interestedly. "But she'll keep on back to the church there with the rest. Don't you worry none. 'N' even if she didn't, some one would take her all safe to the p'lice station. Lots get losted ev'ry year. But your girl, she'll go back all right to St. Paul's."

"I hope she will. I'm sure. Thank you." But Eleanor's mother felt a little troubled on that point. She tried to reassure herself by thinking firmly, "Of course Eleanor will not leave her Sunday school teacher until she actually sees me. Of course not. It will be all right."

For herself, she decided to take a car outside the Park and try to reach St. Paul's by the time Eleanor arrived there. Just as she turned away, the banners of Westpark Church came by. Here were the old friends and relatives who had invited her and Eleanor to return with them for refreshments. She fell into line long enough to explain where Eleanor was and where she must go.

and then walked on to take the street car.

Strangely enough, after leaving the Park by a side entrance, she glanced across the street and saw again the same Westpark friend to whom she had first spoken, now hurrying to reach the church ahead of the line. She waved gaily and then stopped in surprise as her friend beckoned urgently to her. She crossed the street and the friend said, "Have you seen Eleanor? She was looking for you in the Park just after you spoke to me."

For a moment the world and all therein whirled before mother's eyes! Eleanor alone hunting through the Park for her—this hot day—in the confusion—among the scattered throngs—the police station, maybe!

"Oh, what shall I do?" she said, white-faced and trembling.

"Come down to the church; perhaps she will be there," replied her friend, not at all disturbed. "I told her to go to Mrs. Lowe, for I saw you talking to her after you spoke to me. Oh, she'll be all right. Probably she's marching along with Mrs. Lowe. Why don't you go and meet them and find out?"

There seemed nothing else to do. So hastening and fearing to hasten, mother went on until she saw again the approaching Westpark banners. She could hardly bear to look! But there was Mrs. Lowe, cheerful and smiling as ever, and there—there was Eleanor parasol and all, marching beside her own little cousin!

"Oh, Eleanor," said mother as soon as the line reached the church and disbanded, crowding into the assembly rooms eager for the promised ice cream and cake, "oh, Eleanor, where were you?"

"Oh, I'm so hot!" exclaimed the little girl. "I never was so hot in all my life! And I was lost and you were lost and I ran across the whole meadow three times trying to find you. I'm so hot I don't believe I'll ever be cool again."

Mother was a little alarmed herself at Eleanor's flushed face, but she slipped out into the kitchen past the ice cream tubs, and wet a clean handkerchief in cold water and bathed Eleanor's forehead and eyes and hot cheeks. And by the time the little girl had rested ten minutes, she was ready to eat ice cream very, very slowly and cool off inside.

"But how did you finally decide to come here with the others?" asked mother a little later.

"Well, when I got to Mrs. Lowe and found you had gone to find me, I thought she meant you had gone after my class, so I ran after my class again. When I caught up with them they were across the rustic bridge, but I couldn't see you anywhere. I looked at everybody, but nobody was you! So I ran back again to catch up with Mrs. Lowe and the Westparkers. They had kept marching along all the time, and I chased them across the Drive and out the entrance and down the Avenue just about a block before I looked up and saw you. And I was pretty thankful I can tell you!"

"You poor child," sympathized mother "You were as worried over your lost mother as I was over my lost child. Never mind, dear, it's over, but there is one thing: we will not let it happen again!"

"I guess not," echoed Eleanor, hugging her mother's hand.

That night after a tired Eleanor had told father all about it, she went very readily to bed; but when her prayer was said, she clung to her mother's hand a little longer.

"Oh, mother, I was so glad to find you again today. A lost feeling is an awful feeling to have."

"I know, dear; I had it, too. And I just asked our Heavenly Father to keep you safe and help us to find each other quickly."

"Did you, mother?" asked Eleanor, surprised. "Why, so did I. And He did, didn't He?"—Zion's Herald.

WHAT LISA HAD TO GIVE.

"I'd like to give a thousand dollars and I have only ten cents; but I'll give that," said Lisa to herself, and with an unclouded face she placed her little all on the plate.

She thought she gave only the dime in church; but she gave a drink of water to a thirsty child, and food to a beggar. She gave a helping hand to an old lady crossing the crowded street, and she gave a smile and a kind word to a discouraged boy.

She carried a bunch of flowers to a sick neighbor, and she offered to take care of the baby that the weary mother might rest quietly. She found grandmother's glasses, and she had father's slippers and paper ready for him when he came in tired at night.

All this and much more did Lisa give. Silver and gold she had none, but such as she had she freely gave, out of the very fulness of a loving little heart.

And he who seeth, in secret took note of Lisa's gifts and accepted them.—The Child's Gem.

PERILOUS TIMES.

Perilous times are here. They have always been here. Every age is afflicted with a different peril. The peril of the early church was persecution. The peril that followed the era of persecution was false doctrine. The peril of the middle ages was formalism. The peril that pervades more or less in every age is worldiness. The peril of this age is the invasion of science, falsely so-called, into the sacred precincts of religion.

Fallacious science has two and only two rules of evidence, the five senses and the human reason. The inspiration of the Scriptures cannot be established by either of these rules, so they say, the book is not inspired The supernatural contents of the Bible are contrary to the common experience and reason of men, therefore, they say, they are not true. It is contary to reason for any one to be born of a virgin, therefore, they say, the virgin birth of Jesus Christ is a myth, and He is not the Son of God that He claimed to be. It is contrary to observation and reason for any one to rise from the dead, therefore they deny the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is contrary to reason for God to create the universe and all its contents in six days of twenty- four hours each, therefore, they say, it took the Almighty millions of years to produce this world by the slow, unproven, and unprovable process of evolution. It is contrary to reason, say they, for man to be saved by the blood of a crucified Redeemer, therefore man must be saved by evolving and cultivating certain inherent virtues, these same stimulated now and then by the example of this same crucified Redeemer.

There is a third method of acquiring knowledge that scientists allow in the natural realm but deny its operation in spiritural. Life, growth, fruitage, electricity, gravitation, and many other forces of nature cannot be explained or understood by the exercise of the reason. They are accepted by faith. An Unseen hand has placed them here. The best and highest knowledge comes through the exercise of faith. God has spoken. We believe He has spoken. We believe what he has spoken. God has wrought wonders in nature, in revelation, and in redemption. We believe and accept as true what He has wrought, though we may not understand one half of them.

A fourth method of acquiring knowledge is through Christian experience. God reveals Himself in the believing soul. Christ becomes enthroned in the believer, the hope of glory. And man comes to know God, His love, His holiness, His power through the inner experience. And the recreation undergone in the soul by faith makes plain and acceptable every work of God in creation, nature, revelation, and redemption.

THE CAT IN THE BAG.

Little Arabella Frost was almost asleep; her curly head was nestled on the soft pillow of her brass cot, and the dark lashes rested on her pink cheek. Almost asleep, but not quite; the little ears were still open, and she heard mother say to big brother Joe, "Then the cat is out of the bag."

"What cat, mother?" asked Arabella, sleepily, without opening her eyes.

"Never mind, baby; go to sleep," said mother.

"What did they put the cat in the bag for?" Arabella asked herself; "it must be a wild cat." Just then she saw the bag—it was empty; she saw the cat—it looked very wild; it seemed to be biting and scratching many people, and in a great fright Arabella screamed and—woke up!

You see, she had gone off to sleep and dreamed about the cat getting out of the bag, and mother had to take her on her lap to get the little girl quiet again.

Then mother told her that letting the cat out of the bag meant telling a thing that ought not to be told, and that a story was sometimes just like the cat she had dreamed about; it hurt people when it ran about.

"If you hear anything ugly about your little playmates, darling," said mother, "remember what the cat did when she got out, and tie your bag as tight as you can."—Elizabeth P. Allen,—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Asheville.—While I am sending the Herald another installment of "the Denominational Outlook," I shall take the occasion to say a word or two about the outlook for our church here. It continues to be hopeful, and our people are encouraged to go forward.

We have been engaged in a campaign to buy new Hymnals to replace those in use for the past twenty years or thereabouts. Have almost enough to get the number we need, and expect to order them next week.

During the pastor's absence in the College campaign, the pulpit has been cared for by Rev. J. S. Williams. He preached once. The other services were supplied by the following: Rev. E. R. Lineberger, Rev. Homer Casto, and Dr. Julian Pennington.

We observed Children's Day on the first Sunday morning in June. The pastor was absent because of the College campaign, but reports are that the exercises were fine. Much thanks are due Mrs. J. S. Williams and Mrs. Ward for getting up the program. The offering was the largest in the history of the church here, almost double any previous year.

The church was complimented one day this week. The President of the D. A. R. sent word that our church was the only one in Asheville that called attention on the bulletin board to the fact that Sunday, July 4th, is the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. The pastor will preach Sunday morning on "America's Contribution to World Welfare."

The meetings of the various societies in the church have been unusually well attended lately. The last Missionary Society meeting had the largest attendance yet. The assessment for the Student Loan Fund was overpaid almost double.

Prayer meeting attendance is growing. The lecture room was practically full last Wednesday night. The pastor is giving a series of addresses on "The Friends of Paul."

We have raised our General Conference Budget in full, in fact a little more than overpaid. About half of the Annual Conference Budget has been paid. We shall put the emphasis on raising the balance during the next two months.

We have to record the death of another member of the church, Mrs. T. C. Johnson, who, before her marriage about eighteen months ago, was Miss Margaret White. The church has suffered greatly this year from deaths, most of them unexpected.

Thanks to Brother Hyatt the bulletin board has had a top put on it. A glass window provides space for the name of the church and the pastor. This is removable so the pastor's name may be changed as occasion arises. We think we have the finest bulletin board in the city. It is home made, and cost about half the price of the advertised boards.

When you folks come to the mountains, don't fail to drop in for a service. Several of our folks have been by. They helped us, and we hope we returned the favor.

C. W. Bates, Pastor.

Notice, Christian Endeavor Members of Third District.

The first meeting of the Third District Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Graham M. P. Church, Saturday, July 10, 1926. Two sessions 4:30 and 7:30 o'clock. Interesting programs are being arranged for both meetings. Every Christian Endeavor Member of the Third District is expected to be there. Picnic supper will be served. So come and bring your basket.

Pauline Nicholson, Cor. Sec'y.

Denton.—Despite the fact that last Sunday was a rainy day, we had our Children's Day service, and with very good attendance considering the weather. We are glad of our young folk, they rendered a very splendid program. It was composed of several songs by the choir, some special selections, readings, recitations, dialogues, etc, by the children. Everybody seemed to enjoy the hour. The preparation of the program and the training of the children were under the supervision of Miss Bettie Loftin and Miss Kathleen Frank. The missionary offering amounted to nine dollars and three cents. We were glad to have Rev. C. T. Goode, pastor of the M. E. Church of this town, with us and conduct the morning worship.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is very much alive and having interesting and helpful meetings. Fifteen members of the society are now taking the Christian Endeavor Expert Course. The class meets at the church at night, and not only the young folk take the course, but married men who work all day and then come out to church at night in order that they may better equip themselves for Christian Endeavor work and raise the efficiency of their society. We thank them for their interest.

Our mid-week prayer meetings are very inspiring, not because of the large attendance, but because of the earnestness and enthusiasm of those who do attend and pledge themselves to join in one united effort of prayer and sacrifice to God for our revival which will begin on the first Sunday in August. We believe in prayer and that prayer is the key that unlocks the doors of Heaven, and seeing the spirit of prayer that is being manifest among the members of this church, we are hoping for and looking forward to a great revival. By that time we hope to have the church debt cleared up so that we can have our church dedication service on the first Sunday of the revival.

Glenn Madison.

Randleman.—The revival which began at our church here sometime ago continued for three weeks and three days. The attendance throughout, as well as interest and results, have never been surpassed or equaled in my ministry. Every church in town cooperated. The laymen and laywomen from High Point, Asheboro and Cedar Falls did a fine work in Randleman. There were 160 conversions and reclamations. There was no flimsy handshake get religion and join the church proposition. Excepting those who were converted outside the church, nearly every one knelt and prayed through at the altar. Nineteen have joined here so far. The number looks small compared with the conversions reported. Some were members elsewhere. Others will probably unite elsewhere.

On the fourth Sunday evening at Worthville an interesting children's day service was held. The children were well trained and the singing was excellent. A children's day service will be held at New Salem next Sunday night. Level Cross will have an all day service the fourth Sunday in July.

The third quarterly Conference will be held at Worthville Saturday before the third Sunday at 2:30 P. M. The nominees for delegate to annual conference are Rom Ward and A. G. Myrick.

Funds are being accumulated for the purpose of painting the parsonage.

Mrs. Maggie Lineberry of Mt. Lebanon is in Clinic hospital, Greensboro, for treatment.

W. H. Neece.

High Point.—The Board of Stewards held a meeting last Tuesday evening, and adopted resolutions offering a vacation of two weeks to the pastor, Dr. Brown, when it is agreeable to him. At the close of the service Sunday morning, Mr. D. A. Neese, Chairman of the Board, made this announcement. Dr. Brown accepted with many thanks, and said that on account of the Young People's Summer Conference and other matters, he would not be able to take this vacation before August. A motion to close the pulpit for two Sundays was carried, but Sabbath school will be conducted as usual.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday school will hold a meeting at the church on Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

The Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies held their monthly meeting Monday afternoon in the home of Mrs. H. U. Oakes on Ennis St.

The Home Society was highly elated to receive a check for $100 for the Scholarship Loan Fund from Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Douglas. Their generosity is most praiseworthy, and is greatly appreciated by the entire Society. We are trying to make our Home Society 100 percent efficient according to the Efficiency Chart as prepared by the Executive Board.

We are very sorry to note the illness of Miss Ruth Moffit, daughter of Mayor and Mrs. H. A. Moffit, and her friends wish for her an early recovery.

Rev. P. E. Lindley, Professor of Religious Education in High Point College, has accepted the pastorate of the Community Church, Thomasville.

O. R. York has received notice that his appointment for a second term as Postmaster at High Point has been confirmed by the Senate. Mr. York has filled this responsibile post very acceptably and efficiently, and his many friends are congraulating him upon a second term.

Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Hardy are building an attractive residence on West College Drive near Pres. Andrews. Rev. P. E. Lindley is also building a home near the College.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reitzel have returned from a trip to Blowing Rock.

The beautiful new residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Douglas on Montlieu Ave. is nearing completion, and the family will soon move into it.

Mrs. C. C. Robbins and daughter Annie returned Saturday night from a visit of some length to relatives and friends in Greenville, Miss. and Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Earl Teague is expected home today from College Park, Texas, for the summer.

Shiloh, North Davidson Circuit.—Mr. Ed Fritts was buried at Shiloh on Sunday, July 4th. He had been suffering from dropsy for several months. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved ones.

Our community was saddened by the terrible accident which caused the death of Mr. Jeffie Lanning. While helping a neighbor thrash wheat on Thursday at the noon hour he let his pitch fork slide down the strawstack on which he was working; then he slid down right onto the handle. The handle entered his intestine, pierced a hole in the intestine, and also pierced his bladder. His suffering was most agonizing. He was carried right to the hospital and was operated on the day following. Death came and relieved his intense suffering Friday at 2 P. M. He was only twenty-nine years of age. He leaves a wife and four little ones, who were solely dependent on him for support. I know of no more worthy cause for your prayers and also financial aid than this broken hearted widow and her four orphan children. If anyone can contribute anything to this worthy cause, please send your offering to Mr. Ray Leathermon, Lexington, N C, R 4.

Mrs. W. B. Yarborough, who lives with her daughter, Mrs. Wiley Shoaf, has not been well enough to attend church for the past two Sundays. In fact she has been unable to get up much for the last three days. Hope she will soon be strong enough to be with us again.

Brother W. J. Berrier has been absent from Sunday school for two Sundays, but was able to be with us today, and we were glad to have him back. He is our class leader and a church father to all of us.

We are also glad Mrs. W. J. Berrier is able to be with us again after a severe attack of tonsilitis.

Our Sunday school attendance has been off some for the past two rainy Sundays. It was not quite normal today, possibly because of the death of Mr. Fritts. Let's go over the top next Sunday.

Our general work is progressing very satisfactorly. Mrs. Wiley L. Shoaf, Rep.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Bro. Millaway preached one of his very best sermons Sunday. We hear some say every one of his sermons gets better. That being true we will be real good preacher, if he lives to be old, for he says he is young yet.

Some of the Mt. Pleasant members will give a program at Nathaniel Greene High School building on Saturday evening, July 17, 1926, at eight o'clock Bro. Millaway, and also Dr. W. T. Whitsett of Whitsett, N. C., are on the program, so we we're looking forward for something good.

On the third Sunday of this month there will be all day service at Mt. Pleasant Sunday school and preaching in the morning and the afternoon singing. Some of the old friends, members, and acquaintance will be there. Come and enjoy the day.

The Woman's Missionary Societies and Precious Jewels are planning to give a public program in the near future, the exact date will be announced later. Reporter.

State St. Church.—Our work in all its branches is moving along well regardless of the recent hot weather, vacation time, etc.

Sunday school continues to hold a good attendance record and the C. E. Society is doing good work and is much enjoyed by all who attend.

The Daily Vacation Bible School closed Sunday night with a very well rendered program by the children. The work done by the director and teachers of the Bible School was wonderful.

Mrs. Curtis Koonts was general director of the work and her efficient helpers, Mr. and Mrs. Bethea and Miss Maxine Taylor, assisted her ably in all the departments of the work.

The memory work alone would have been well worth the time the children spent in the school, but in addition to this they were instructed in sewing, drawing, making card board toys and other things. A pageant was given also by some of the children from the different departments of the school. This was beautifully inspiring and helpful and much enjoyed by all present.

47 useful and pretty garments were made by the girls of the Bible School and their teachers. These were given to the children of the Home. The toys made by the children were sent to the Home too.

Miss Taylor left Monday to take charge of a Mission School at Plum Tree, a station near Spruce Pine.

Next Sunday night Mr. Bethea will talk on, "The unspeakable Turk." All these lectures have been so helpful and interesting and are always attended by a houseful of people. Reporter.

Children's Day at Bethel Church, Flat Rock Circuit.

On last Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock an interesting Children's Day program was given by the little ones of Bethel Sunday school.

Several interesting recitations, dialogues, exercises, and songs were given. Every one seemed to enjoy the program very much.

A Reader.

Flat Rock, Vance Charge.—We are very glad to have our pastor on the work all the time. He has filled all his appointments at Flat Rock since he finished school.

Rev. R. A. Hunter filled the eleven o'clock appointment 3rd Sunday, giving us one of the best lecture-sermons I ever heard. His theme "Opportunity," in regard to our duty to Our College made it seem a blessed privilege to help in such a great work that will mean so much to God's Kingdom and mankind. Come again, Mr. Hunter.

Rev. Mr. Chambliss was there for his regular service Sunday evening at eight o'clock. He was accompanied by Rev. Mr. Hethcock, who is assisting him in a revival at New Hope. Mr. Hethcock preached a splendid sermon.

We held Children's Day service 3rd Sunday evening at eight o'clock. The children were at their best, Little Miss Marie Wortham sang a solo, which was much enjoyed, as was a song by Messrs Roy Davis, Hill Ellington and Dorsey Short. Offering, $8.17.

Our Sunday school is very much alive. One hundred and twelve on roll and better average attendance.

The Ladies' Aid is on the move; they meet for short session each first Sunday after Sunday school. They put on a program last Saturday night and received $12 silver offering and $20.80 from sale of cream.

Hope to see improvements in looks of our church as result of their work.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society hold their regular monthly meetings with good attendance and splendid program, but are not making the advance in membership and finance it should.

J. Clyde Mission Band hold their meetings twice each month. The mothers were invited to meet with us at last meeting. Not one came. We need and must have the cooperation of the mothers, if we are to accomplish the things we should. We are trying to get each member to pay their five cents per month dues regularly. Mothers, you can help.

It was voted to hold our revival at usual time, 3rd week in July, as our pastor was not going to Pastor's Conference. Members of our Missionary Society did not attend the Rally at Rehoboth as we wished they might. We that went feel it was a day well spent. Mrs. C. L. Whitaker and Miss Annie Livengood were the speakers from a distance. Both were much enjoyed. The next District Meeting will be held with Flat Rock Church in October.

Miss Mary V. White is planning to attend Young People's Conference at High Point College. Wish others might attend also.

It is nearly a hundred years since a division on doctrinal points among the Friends resulted in the separation of the so-called "Hicksite" branch from their Orthodox brethren. Now for the first time these two bodies have taken a step toward a mutual closer understanding by each agreeing to recognize the marriage and membership certificate of the other. This action was consummated a few days ago in Philadelphia by the two groups meeting separately.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JULY 18.

The Call of Moses.

Lesson Text: Ex. 3:10-15; 4:10-12.

Golden Text: Ex. 3:12.

The Central Truth: Every call to service for God carries with it the pledge of the necessary equipment for that service.

Scriptural Points.

1. Moses' refusal to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter revealed a wise head and a great heart. He might have disowned his people and become famous as an Egyptian statesman and warrior. His wise choice showed that in sympathies as well in fact he was an Israelite. He understood the great cost of the decision that he made. He preferred to "suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

2. His sympathies led him to attempt the deliverance of his people by inciting a rebellion. He killed an Egyptian taskmaster for cruel treatment to an Israelite laborer. He strove to make peace between two quarreling Isralites. The party most to blame spurned Moses' efforts to make peace. Moses found out that his life was threatened for slaying the Egyptian. He also discovered that his people would not accept his leadership. Disappointed in his good purposes, he fled to the land of Midian, the nearest country over which the king of Egypt did not rule.

3. Here he spent forty years in quiet pastoral life. Here his rash, impetuous spirit became chastened into meekness. Here he learned lessons of faith and reliance upon higher powers. Here he came to understand that "the still small voice" was more powerful than an army flaunting victorious banners. In finding God he had come to himself.

4. The burning bush is where heaven again touched the earth. From it Jehovah spoke a call to the prophetic office, a deliverance for Israel, and a civilization for all time. With becoming modesty and reverence Moses hid his face and removed the sandals from his feet. A chastened and humble soul listened to a message from God.

5. It was a message of deliverance, and Moses was the appointed deliverer. To this divine appointment Moses raised five objections. These objections set forth the fact that Moses magnified his own limitations and minified the omnipotence of the Most High.

6. "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh?" A fugitive and an exile would have little influence in the country of Pharaoh. "Certainly I will be with thee," is God's reply to this objection. His presence and wisdom and power would more than compensate for Moses' lack of influence and equipment.

7. He next objected that the authority of this commission was entirely too indefinite "Who art thou any way?" And "what is thy name?" "And God said unto Moses, I am that I am." This a liberal translation of Jehovah, which means, the self-existing One.

8. "They will not believe me, nor hearken to my voice," is Moses' third objection. God's reply to this excuse was the performance of two miracles,—the changing of the rod into a serpent and into a rod again, and the inflicting and restoring of the leprous hand.

9. "I am not eloquent,....I am slow of speech," is another objection to undertaking this mission. God promised to supplement this defect with His own power and wisdom: "I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say." To be a plain mouthpiece of God ought to have satisfied Moses, but it did not.

10. In his fifth objection, Moses said in substance, "I don't want to go anyway, send some one else." The tried patience of God now gave way to anger. He was much grieved that Moses should display such unwillingness. To humor his two last objections God promised that Aaron would accompany him and be the chief speaker.

Practical Points.

1. Not every one is called to be a leader in the large sense. But every one is called to be a follower. Jesus is still saying to a race of sinners, "Follow me."

3. Acceptable and uplifting service must recognize the one supreme Master. "One is your master, even Christ."

4. The Lord Jehovah of the burning bush is the same as the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for our sins according to the Scriptures. He is the eternal Word, the everlasting spokesman of Deity. "This is my beloved Son; hear ye him."

5. Excuses are the children of unbelief. Faith finds in God an all-sufficiency to meet every need of the soul, every obligation of life, and every demand of service. "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Deut. 33:27. "My grace is sufficient for thee." 2 Cor. 12:9.

6. A sense of unfitness may be overdone. It may become another name for indifference or laziness. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Eccl. 9:10.

7. To hurry into an uncertain venture is folly. Take counsel of the supreme Wisdom in every undertaking. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord." Ps. 37:23.

KNOWLEDGE VERSUS WISDOM.

Glenn Frank in one of his daily contributions to the Philadelphia Record, calls attention to Bernadine Freeman's table of interesting sentences under the title, "Is this Education?" She says:

"I can solve a quadratic equation, but I can not keep my bank balance straight.

I can read "Goethe's Faust" in the original, but I can not ask for a piece of bread in German.

I can name the Kings of England since War of the Roses, but I do not know the qualifications of the candidates in the coming election.

I know the economic theories of Malthus and Adam Smith, but I can not live within my income.

I can recognize the 'leit-motif' of a Wagner Opera, but not fix a leak in the kitchen faucet.

I can read the plays of Moliere in the original, but I can not order a meal in French.

I have studied the psychology of James and Titchener, but I can not control my temper.

I can conjugate Latin verbs, but I can not write legibly."

The first half of each of these statements represents knowledge, the latter half the lack of wisdom. Knowledge and wisdom are not necessarily related. Wisdom means knowing how to live. It involves an understanding of the laws of life. Knowledge may mean nothing more than an acquaintance with certain facts and truths as a possession of the mind.

The mere school-boy of today knows more than Moses or Isaiah or Paul; Socrates or Plato. The range of our information has increased so enormously in recent years that our knowledge has vastly outdistanced that of any former age; but it would be simple foolishness to say that our boys are wiser than these great men of the past. They knew how to live and that seems to be what we supremely lack.

Whatever Jesus may have known or not known in His human life, He knew the laws of living and conformed His life to them, as no other man ever did. He did not enrich the world with His learning. He wrote no books. He did not even give us a code of laws. He made no contribution to science or art or literature, but He has been the inspirer of all these. His supreme contribution was made to the art of living, and that is true wisdom. He came not so much to inform the world as to give life to men.

Not knowledge, not even knowledge of God, but the fear of God, is the beginning of wisdom. "Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom."—Reformed Church Messenger.

"I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in its relation to the Kingdom of Christ. If anything I have will advance the interest of that Kingdom it shall be given up or kept, as by keeping or giving it I shall most promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes, both of time and eternity. May grace be given me to adhere to this."—David Livingstone.

—New gold desposits, believed to be the fourth in value in the whole world, have been discovered at Boliden, Sweden, just South of the Arctic Circle.

—Color light signals, declared by Southern Railway engineers to be the last word in electric automatic block signal protection, are now in service on the entire Washington-Atlantic double-track line, 637 miles, replacing signals of the three position semaphore type. The color light signal is a recent development, consisting of a series of three lamps mounted vertically behind colored lenses on a mast with an oblong sheet metal background. These lamps produce a light which can be easily distinguished at from 2,500 to 5,000 feet in bright sun light, giving an indication which enginemen can recognize even more easily than the position of the semaphore.

The only thing that fully satisfies both hunger and thirst is righteousness.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Mrs Lillian Thompson Cheek. A Tribute

In the death of Mrs. Lillian Thompson Cheek (Mrs. Thos. P. Cheek) at Mebane, N. C., June 25, 1926, death sought and found a shining mark. She was no ordinary woman. Gifted with an unusual mind, great business ability, kindness and sympathy to an unusual degree,—she held a high place in the estimation of all who knew her. To native ability she added the results of excellent educational advantages, and became one of the best teachers her county has ever known. In the circle of her home, and among her friends, her advice was always sought on all important matters, and her ability to decide upon a proper course of action was extraordinary. In church work, in school activities, and in the social circle, she was by right of her talents always recognized as a leader it was a delight to follow.

Her father, the late J. Frank Thompson, was one of the strong men of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina, and upon his daughter descended many of his abilities and much of his enthusiasm for all good work. She was a community builder, and a community leader, not for any glory that might come to herself, but for the general good of all concerned. We rarely find one of such broad sympathies, and such unselfish desire for the general good, as characterized the life and activity of Mrs. Lillian Thompson Cheek.

Her friends trusted her implicitly, and in their hearts will be a vacant place that can never be filled. This earth is a better place because of her life and work. Her influence will walk the earth through all time because of the varied activities of her life, and her good deeds will live after her, and blossom through the years.

Watching her career from young girlhood, and womanhood, on through the years, I lay this sincere tribute upon her dust, feeling that one of the finest examples of God's noblest womanhood has passed from us for awhile to be with the Father, and await the coming of her friends.

William Thornton Whitsett.

Miss Evelyn Curtiss.

Liberty.—Funeral services for Evelyn Curtiss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Curtiss, who died Saturday night in the Clinic hospital, Greensboro, from a complication of diseases, was held Monday afternoon at 4 p. m. at the Methodist Protestant church here, of which she was a lovable and royal member. The service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. F. L. Gibbs, assisted by Rev. J. D. Williams, former pastor of the church; Rev. L. W. Gerringer, of Greensboro; Rev. G. F. Millaway; Rev. J. E. Pritchard, of Asheboro, and Rev. A. O. Lindley. The choir was composed of members of the Junior Christian Endeavor society. Little Miss Mary Bowman Shepherd and Katherine Underwood sang a duet, "In the Garden," and Rev. Lester Ballard, of Greensboro, sang "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Asleep in Jesus."

Surviving relatives are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Curtiss; three sisters, Misses Dorothy, Frances and Cladoro; one brother, John W. Curtiss, Jr.; her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Jones.

Pall bearers were Frank Shepherd, Tom Stuart, Howard Swain, Donald Stockard, Benjie Ward and Fred Allred. Many beautiful floral pieces came from the friends and relatives of little Evelyn, and attested the love and esteem in which she was held. Funeral directors attending the funeral were J. H. Blue and John T. Else, of Greensboro; R. H. Sechrest and son, of High Point; Mr and Mrs. D. T. Yow, of High Point; Herbert Brady, of Ramseur; J. B. Marley, of Siler City; Ernest Thompson and W. D. Rice, of Graham; Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Elkins, of Siler City; Elvin Frazier, of Sanford. Interment was in Fairview cemetery.

Edward Hernon Page.

The darling baby boy, youngest child of Mrs. Corinne Page, died Monday, June 21st, at one P. M., after having been sick one day and a night. He was three and a half years old, and possessed all of the qualities that make a sweet and lovable child. He possessed so much of the good and so little of the evil that belongs to a child of his age that all of the neighbors are mourners as well as his mother, brother and sisters.

The disease that took him away was so rapid in its course and so severe that death was not only a shock but a surprise to all, even the skillful doctor who did all he could to relieve and mitigate his suffering.

He seemed to have pneumonia and membranous croup and tonsilitis all combined and his suffering was so manifestly terrible that heart-broken friends and nurses felt relieved when the sweet death angel relieved him and took him to that glorious nursery that the blessed Releemer had prepared for all like unto him. May his life and his death prove a blessing to many as it is to him.

Written by his loving Aunt, Mrs. Tom Billups.

In Memory.

Died at her home two miles north of Efland, on June 14, 1926 of complicated heart and kidney trouble, Bessie, wife of Dan Shanklin, and oldest daughter of John and Lizzie Cheek Miller, age 34 years. Those left to mourn her death are husband and four children, father, step-mother, one whole sister, three whole brothers, three half brothers and one half sister, as follows, Mrs. Oley Aulbest, Willie, Minick, and Claude, Sam, Dan, Jesse, and Eula Miller, all of Mebane, and Mebane R. 5.

Death is always sad, yet it is more intensified when a mother is taken from her little children, and they are left motherless.

Our hearts were crushed as we stood by and saw the "Death Angel" hovering over the pale cold brow of the sufferer, and the little children standing near their dying mother. And as we looked on the tear-stained face of the husband, and heard the weeping of the strong manly brothers as their forms shook and trembled, and the two sisters all of whose hearts were bleeding in sorrow, we thought of the aged father whose illness prevented him from being at the bedside of his dying child, and of the dear step mother who did all she possibly could for Bessie during her illness. Oh, how earnestly we begged and prayed to keep her with us. But God knew best. Dr. Thompson of Mebane, was constant in attendance at her bedside. Her and her husband's relatives, good and kind neighbors and friends, did all possible to alleviate her suffering and stay the hand of death. Bessie was a devoted mother, a faithful wife, a loving daughter and sister, a good neighbor and friend, and a Christian woman loved by all who knew her, as was evinced by the large number of people that attended her funeral, and the many beautiful flower designs contributed by loving hands.

Funeral services were conducted from Lebanon M. E. Church (of which she had been a member since girlhood) by her pastor, Rev. S. F. Nix, of Hillsboro, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hurley of Mebane, who paid beautiful tributes to her memory. Her body was laid to rest in the old Lebanon Church yard near by her two little baby boys, mother, and little brother, whose spirits with hers now mingle in the Bright Beyond.

May God, "The Great Comforter," take care of the motherless children, and comfort the other sorrowing ones, and as they are gathered in one by one, may they at last form an unbroken circle around "God's White Throne."

The lonely home, the vacant chair,
We see them day by day.
Oh, how sad and lonely there,
Since mother went away.
Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the "better land,"
We'll read the meaning of our tears
And then we'll understand.

One Who Loved Her.

Inez Lanier.

Lucy Inez Lanier, born March 3, 1925, died at the age of fifteen months and twenty-seven days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Lanier.

Inez has been sick for quite awhile, bearing her suffering with patience. She was such a good baby, and will be so much missed in her home, and her little face from our Sunday school.

"Jesus has taken a beautiful bud out of our garden of love, and borne it away to Heaven above."

Funeral services were conducted at Lineberry church July, 1st, at 10 o'clock, by pastor Rev. C. E. Ridge, assisted by Rev. J. L. Trollinger, Rev. Henry Bell, Thomasville, N. C.

Inez, thou hast left us. In our home no more to be;
In our Sunday school your face we cannot see;
You have gone where father and mother can meet you,
Gone to the Homeland fair.
Some day we'll meet you, Inez, over there.

We are still advancing toward the fifteen hundred mark, but not very rapidly. We have not reached the four hundred mark this week. Many of the churches have not yet been heard from. We know you are interested and we are still depending on you. "Eventually, why not now?" The Conference convenes only ten days from the publication of this issue. Come on, Friends, send me five hundred registrations next week and keep me busy!

THE BETTER DISPOSITION.

nstead of complaining because there is more, be thankful that there is as much here is.

INFILTRATING INFIDELITY.

In the Parable of the Tares the presence of the noxious growth in the field of the man who had sowed "good seed in his field" is explained by the statement, that "while men slept an enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat and went his way."

The statement is most significant. It is while men sleep that pernicious tenets and demoralizing teachings are planted and propagated.

Such destructive work is not done openly. It is done under various subtle disguises and plausible professions of devotion to truth.

Unitarianism has thus been propagated in the United States while evangelical Christians slept and dreamed not of what was going on. Now, its advocates are beginning to see with pride full-grown tares which they have sowed in our Lord's field, and they are confessing openly the processes by which they have accomplished the result in which they rejoice.

For example a writer in the Christian Register said in an article approving these processes:

"Our doctrines are especially good for budding and grafting on older stock. If the name is sometimes repellant the substance when transplanted and allowed to spread by inoculation has a wonderful power of expansion. We are sometimes astonished to see how our position on the Virgin Birth, miracles, etc., has been incorporated in the old faith. To be sure these new and vigorous branches are of a nature to render the remainder of the tree of but little value."

The same correspondent continues:

"The Unitarian body is constantly grafting new thought, purpose, and method on the older Churches....By indirection a large part of the finest and subtlest work is accomplished. ....No great landslide from the old ranks as was once predicted has taken place, but it is one thing to tear down a structure with tremendous noise and dust and another to transform it vitally or to assist the spirit of the age in this great work."

In the same Unitarian paper Dr. J. W. Day, a leading preacher of Unitarianism, wrote:

"A good many Unitarians are doing more good where they are than they do anywhere else. They are undoubtly capturing strongholds that we could never carry by direct attack. They are the modernists of Protestantism who are working from within the fold ....We want more of them, and we want them where they are."

The latter part of what Dr. Day says shows who among these sowers of tares in the field are the worst enemies of evangelical Christianity.

A leader of Unitarianism in the Middle West is reported to have said not long ago:

"Ten years ago we set out to capture the large universities of the land and we have practicaly done it, and now we are setting about to capture the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A."

There is something of boastfulness in this statement which is not justified by the facts. But this secret and treacherous Unitarianism has penetrated many institutions of learning and it has been far too successful with its designs upon theY. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A.

If Unitarianism is true, evangelical Christianity is nothing less than foul idolatry; and if evangelical Christianity is true,, Unitarianism is nothing less than vile infidelity. In either case they are incompatible and irreconcilable.

We believe Unitarianism is infidelity and has no just ground to claim the name of Christianity at all, and it is evidently seeking to infiltrate its infidelity into all the Protestant Churches of our country.

Its methods of capturing and corrupting the evangelical Churches of the country are uncandid, deceitful and cowardly.

The facts set forth above amply sustain this sharp indictment, and in our possession are many more proofs that are equally clear and conclusive.

The Unitarian conspirators who are betraying the evangelical Churches from within must be exposed and ejected before the treacherous schemes of Unitarianism proceed further.

The issue must be made plain and then fought to a finish. The outcome will not be doubtful when the multitude of our trustful souls who are now sleeping have been awakened to the dangerous designs of the Unitarians, which are so openly avowed and shamelessly confessed. —The Southern Methodist.

The Bible makes us, but does not make us all alike. Rather it delights to individualize and to distinguish.—Rev. R. F. Horton, D. D.

The Word of God Inspired presents to us the Word of God Incarnate—in the greatness of His Person, the value of His work, the diversity of His offices, the tender love and sympathy of His heart. To know Him should be our great object in reading the Holy Scriptures.—William Hoste.

I early formed the habit of reading through books of Scriptures and mastering their contents and plan as a whole—a practice I cannot too strongly recommend.—Prof. James Orr, D. D.

THE ROAD TO INSPIRATION.

It is quite true, of course, that only those travelers who have made a given journey are qualified to speak of the road and to discuss the beauty of the landscape along the way and at the end. And the road to inspiration is no exception. Only actual travelers may speak with authority. But still it seems that concerning an excursion of so much fascination surely anyone may, without charge of presumption, take an interest in the landmarks along the various stages of the route.

The first third of the journey is absurdly easy. Every one takes it practically without effort. No directions are needed beyond the proverb, "Seeing is believing." Through eyesight and like means the surrounding facts are assembled in vast numbers. Some of them are true and may be accepted; others make, in some curious way, a wrong impression on the mind. A professional magician, for example, can deceive the senses of the most intelligent people with astonishing success. At other times those who insist most vigorously on what they have seen with their own eyes fall short of the truth about as badly as does a six year old boy when he undertakes to describe what goes on under the floor-boards of an automobile. The observer is honest and sincere enough, but plainly something is lacking in the report.

The entrance into the second stage of the journey, an event that soon becomes imperative, is a great experience. It is a discovery of the Understanding. And from that moment life becomes more than a series of disconnected facts that are perceived by the senses. Life has relation, and use of the understanding to appreciate relations is a delightful activity. Everything is related to everything else. Somehow day and night, life and death, good and bad are all tied up with each other. And upon all else, when the suggestion is made that people and animals are connected in a rather embarrassing relation, it is not surprising that patience should give way under the strain. The business of understanding all the relations of the world in which we live is a frightfully big job.

At this point about the best one can do is to make generalizations. These serve a tremendous need, and those who provide such partial truths and constantly correct them do an inestimable service. But the so-called laws of science are not pure truth, and no one pretends that they are. About the best we can say is that, "Under certain complex conditions, provided this and provided that, barring accidents and disregarding exceptions to the rule, the self-starter on a car will live up to its name and put the motor into action." Not much more can be hoped for.

Hence the general acceptance of the doctrine of relativity is no wonder. Those who tinker with automobiles and radios and the like are certainly obliged to use it. In a general way it works. To show an interest in anything further is to be laughed at. Absolute truth according to popular supposition is not practical.

After dealing for a while with half-truths and quarter-truths and laws that are true only under the most elaborate conditions, however, the normal mind develops an appetite for things that are really dependable. Luckily there is a small supply for this very demand, and the supply is constantly increasing. It is fortunate that some generalizations, like 2 x 2 equals 4, are exactly true —yesterday, today, and forever. There is such a thing as absolute truth, and he who seeks may find. It stands for all time, unaffected by the changes of the moon, the conditions of the weather, or the views of the political party that happens to be in office.

In literature the first sentence in the Bible is as good an illustration as any: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." When was the beginning? What sort of a power was God? How did He do it? Critics and controversy may illuminate the terms employed; but when the meaning has been understood, the same statement is satisfactory: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." The writer was able to see a relation between the Infinite and the Finite that simply represents perfection of thinking.

If we look for the source of a writer's inspiration, we find it in the totality of the thinking process, in the ascent from fact to principle that is crowned by the revelations of the still small voice within. Is a certain piece of writing inspired? We may be sure it is if the writer has brought his individual mind into harmony with the reality that lies hidden in the surrounding particulars—in other words, if the writer has succeeded in thinking God's thoughts after him.

A METHODIST SESQUI-CENTENIAL: The Brunswick Circuit Revival Of 1776.

Methodists should recall that the year 1926 is the Sesqui-centennial of one of the greatest revivals known to American Methodism, —the revival in the Brunswick Circuit in 1776. The Brunswick Circuit was the first circuit formed in the Old Dominion, and "embraced as much territory as two or three modern Districts." It was formed on the six weeks plan, and extended from Petersburg to the south, over Roanoke river, some distance into North Carolina. While Robert Williams had preached in this section and laid the foundation for Methodism, "no regular circuit was formed until the spring or summer of 1774." The Conference held at Philadelphia in May, 1774, appointed the first preachers to the Brunswick Circuit: John Wade, Isaac Rollins, and Samuel Spragg. The next year the force was increased to five preachers: George Shadford, Robert Lindsay, Edward Dromgoole, Robert Williams, and William Clendenning. The great revival broke out near the close of this year. The year 1776 was a memorable one for the Brunswick Circuit, and George Shadford, William Duke, and William Glendenning were the preachers. Shadford and Devereux Jarratt, a clergyman of an evangelical spirit, were the prominent leaders in this great revival. As George Shadford was the chief instrument in this revival, it is interesting to recall Wesley's letter to him when he embarked for America: "I let you loose, George, on the great continent of America. Publish your message in the open face of the sun, and do all the good you can."

Shadford was an evangelist of great power. Bennett's "Memorials of Methodism in Virginia,"—an interesting old volume, now out of print,—gives a full and interesting account of the great Brunswick revival, and we cannot do better than quote freely from it:

"Shadford was amazed. Under almost every sermon sinners were convinced and converted; often three or four at a time.' "... After describing the conversion of a notorious dancing-master, the narrative proceeds: "Shadford was on another occasion stopped by a great flood of water; turning back, he came to a large plantation and asked for lodging. He was kindly received, and after taking some refreshment, proposed to preach if a congregation could be had. A messenger was sent out, and many came, 'but they were as wild as boars.' The word however took effect upon their rude hearts; the planter and his wife were both converted and a society of sixty or seventy raised up in the settlement. The work gradually increased through the summer and fall; in mid winter it broke forth with unusual power. It began almost simultaneously at three different points, two of these were in Mr Jarratt's parish, the other in Amelia county. The people in these neighborhoods had long been notorious for their wickedness. Immoralities of all kinds abounded. They delighted in gambling, swearing, drinking, racing, and held all sacred things in utter contempt. The year previous a few souls had been gathered in this unpromising field; this was the earnest of a great harvest. Shadford moved among the wondering multitude like an angel of light. Chapels and private houses were crowded by curious hearers; 'their ears were opened by novelty, but God sent His word home upon their hearts.' Convictions were powerful, indeed, awful; mercy! mercy! was the cry that rose to heaven by day and by night. The meetings were held for hours through the day, and often whole nights were spent in the blessed work of saving souls. All ages, and all grades felt the power of God and fell before it; veteran, gray-headed sinners, men in middle life, in the full strength of their manhood, young men, and maidens, and children of tender years, bowed together before the Lord, and lifted up their prayers to the mercy-seat. The preachers were not enough to carry on the mighty work; exhorters and class leaders took the stand, and multitudes hung upon their lips to hear the word of life.

"No matter who spoke, the power of God 'was still among the people;' and often in the prayer meetings held by the people themselves, the manifestations of the Spirit were glorious and awful. Through a circumference of four or five hundred miles the flame swept on with increasing power."

"The Windows Of Heaven Opened."

It is well that we have a report of some of these great revival scenes from such a trustworthy source as Jesse Lee.

"In the beginning of May, 1776, at a quarterly meeting at Boisseau's Chapel, Dinwiddie county, the work broke out with astonishing power. 'At that meeting,' writes Jesse Lee, 'the windows of heaven were opened indeed, and the rain of divine influence continued to pour down for more than forty days.' In the love feast, on the second day, the whole assembly felt the power of the Holy Ghost. No sooner had the exercises begun than 'the house was filled with the presence of God;' the flame leaped from heart to heart; sinners fell to the floor under strong conviction; mourners rose with shouts of praise; Christians were filled with love, and gave glad testimony to the power of Christ to save from all sin. The love feast ended, the doors were thrown open, and an eager multitude filled the house. The mingled scene of anguish and rejoicing struck them with astonishment. Silent they stood looking on; and then one after another sunk down with trembling and tears, and cried aloud for mercy. The work increased in power as the meeting progressed, and on the last day they continued in the meeting house till dark and then sent for candles, and continued till some time in the night. The noise of the battle rose on the still evening air, and rolled away in the distance. 'I left them,' says Jesse Lee, 'about the setting of the sun, and at that time their prayers and cries might be heard a mile off.'"

Thomas Rankin's Successful Labors.

Thomas Rankin also had a prominent part in this great revival. Dr. Bennett says:

"In the summer Thomas Rankin came into Virginia. He preached his first sermon at Boisseau's Chapel on the last day of June. Under the second sermon, in the afternoon, 'such power descended that hundreds fell to the ground, and the house seemed to shake with the presence of God.' The building was filled to the utmost, and hundreds from without pressed on all sides to get in. 'Look wherever we would, we saw nothing but streaming eyes and faces bathed in tears; and heard nothing but groans and strong cries after God.' The voice of the preacher was lost 'amid the groans and the prayers of the congregation.' More than an hour the mighty effusion lasted. in vain the preachers attempted, again and again, to speak or sing. They could only sit in the pulpit 'filled with the divine presence, exclaiming, "This is none other than the house of God! this is the gate of heaven!"' The meeting continued until night, and even then the people reluctantly withdrew to their homes.

"The next Sunday he preached at another church thirty miles distant. The text was from Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones: 'And there was a great shaking.' The house was crowded, while 'four or five hundred stood at the doors and windows, listening with unabated attention.' During the sermon he was compelled to stop several times and beg the people to be composed. They could not. While he was speaking, some were on their knees, others on their faces, 'crying mightily to God.' 'Hundreds of negroes were among them, with the tears streaming down their faces.'

Next Sunday he was again at Bois eau's. The people were more quiet than on the former occasion, and at the close of the sermon he thanked them for their 'good behavious.' He then left the place to dine with a friend. No sooner was he gone than they began 'to sing, pray, and talk to their friends.' Many knelt as penitents, and when the preacher came back, he found fifteen happy converts. He begged them to be quiet while he preached again. They restrained themselves till near the close of the sermon; then cries and tears, and prayers, again burst forth. In vain he appealed to them; the tide of feeling was too strong. He sat down and asked Shadford to speak to them. He rose, 'and in a little time cried out in his usual manner: "Who wants a Savior? the first that believes shall be justified.' In a few minutes the house was ringing with the cries of broken-hearted sinners, and the shouts of happy believers. It was an awful time indeed."

Closing his account of the great revival, Dr. Bennett says:

"Fourteen counties in Virginia were reached by this blessed work. It crossed the Roanoke into North Carolina, and in both States the fields were opening wide and white to the reapers. When the preachers closed up their year's work, the result was glorious. Eighteen hundred had been added to the societies. Many had been sanctified and rejoiced in that perfect love that casteth out all fear."

When we read this awe-inspiring account of the great work of God in the early days of Methodism, we are thrilled, for it reminds us of the apostolic days of Christianity. May the baptism of the Spirit come upon us today as it came upon our fathers!

ARE SMOKING WOMEN ENTITLED TO RESPECT?

Will H. Brown.

Two young men in Chicago accosted two girls on the street at night, and were arrested for the offense. In their defense they said of the girls: "They were smoking on the street, so we naturally concluded they would not object to a flirtation." They each paid a fine of $10, but in doing so declared they still held their original opinion of girls who smoke.

A reader of the Los Angeles Times writes that paper: "It seems that women with all their boasted intuition would realize that in aping men's habits they are losing men's reverence and respect."

The Rural New Yorker says that smoking women are responsible for at least part of the loss of respect which many city men now manifest toward women.

A reader of the Chicago Daily News—a young man, he declares himself to be—says he has found, by compiling statistics, that "ninety-seven of every one hundred men would never marry girls that smoke," and adds: "Girls, if you want a man with good moral character to be your husband, don't smoke."

H. W. Calder, of the New York Telephone Company, discussing the subject of feminine users of tobacco, says: "Personally, I have very little respect for the woman who smokes."

Although the Prince of Wales has been a heavy smoker, he evidently doesn't think much of women smokers. Here is what he said when asked what he thought of the modern girl: "If you mean the close-cropped, cigarette-smoking, mannishly-dressed, noisy girl, I must confess that the modern girl does not appeal to me in the slightest."

A MIXTURE NO NATION CAN STAND.

By Allan L. Benson.

We are going to quite a lot of trouble in this country to ascertain whether we can stand outlawed booze and crooked politics—mixed. We stood booze for three centuries, before it was outlawed, and, though it did us much harm, survived it. We have always suffered from a certain amount of crooked politics. During the days of lawful liquor we stomached many a mixture of politics and booze, but never until now did we have to deal with a mixture of outlawed booze and crooked politics—a blend that is beginning to sputter from machine guns in the outlying districts of Chicago. Mayor Dever had scarcely finished defending the fair name of his city before a senatorial committee in Washington when the concoction exploded, killing an assistant prosecutor and two crooks with whom he was riding, and causing a Cook County judge to declare that, unless certain evil practices were stopped, the city would yet be in the hands of a mob. What has happened in Chicago can happen and may happen anywhere else.

It should be plain to almost anybody that illegal booze and crooked politics cannot be safely mixed, yet this is the one question that arises from the growing tumult over liquor, There is not a wet leader in the country who does not know that the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution can never be repealed. There is no person in the country who can read who does not know that so long as the amendment exists it will be unlawful to make and sell any intoxicating drink. Even if Congress were to enact a law purporting to legalize a drink that was in fact intoxicating, the act would be unconstitutional and the United States Supreme Court could do nothing else but set it aside.

So long as a majority of the members of the Supreme Court can read and understand plain English there is not the slightest possibility that any intoxicating drink can ever be legally made and sold in this country. What any state legislature may say to the contrary will have no more legal standing than would the same words if uttered by an inebriated gentleman leaning against a telegraph pole at two o'clock in the morning looking at the moon.

Before booze can be made legal in this country the wets will have to control a two-thirds majority in each house of Congress and a majority in three-quarters of the state legislatures. Nothing of the sort is even remotely possible, even if one look forward half a century. As a matter of fact, the farther one looks forward the slimmer is the chance of such a wet victory, because booze has been dying out of the United States ever since it came into it. Its grip is being loosened all over the world, even where there is no prohibition. A saner spirit prevails.

Such facts, however, do not disconcert such gentlemen who, as a wet United States Senator declared would have their alcoholic drinks, 'constitution or no constitution.' They are going about it to break down the Volstead law if they can, and trample over the Constitution that they have no hope of getting out of their way. The whole question is going to be thrown into politics and the dry leaders expect that the liquor issue will be the big thing in at least the next two presidential elections. It may last longer than that. The drys do not intend ever to quit so long as prohibition is under fire. Nor do they expect the problem to be settled speedily. Neither side has any such expectation.

Wet gentlemen who are sitting around the country with their tongues out, expecting almost any time to see light beer and wine with a little whisky under the bar would do well to wake up. Nothing of the sort is in sight. The most that wet leaders hope for is to control Congress in six years. The worst that dry leaders fear is a temporary defeat somewhere on the road to final victory, and if such a defeat should ever come they believe the dry sentiment of the country would insist that all lost ground be recovered.

The day is near, according to those who know what the dry forces are doing, when those who back the Anti-Saloon League will insist that such presidential candidates as receive their support must be dependably dry, officially and privately. In politics there is a good deal of difference between being dry and being dependably dry. The late Mr. Harding was officially dry, but not dependably so because he was personally wet. There is no reason why his record in this respect should not be discussed, even though he is dead, since it is a part of the history of the United States.

Mr. Harding was the kind of a prohibitionist, of whom there are millions in this country, who was personally wet, yet down in his heart believed in the value of the law. He used to say to Wayne B. Wheeler: 'You needn't talk to me about the virtues of prohibition, Wayne, I know drinking is bad for people and believe in ending it.' Yet when Wheeler urged him to cease drinking on the ground that he was setting a bad example, the most that Wheeler could get from Harding for a long while was that some time or other he would swear off. As a matter of fact, he did not swear off until he was on his way to Alaska.

At Denver he made a very vigorous prohibition speech. After he made it he did not feel that, in honor, he could go on drinking. He swore off, and one of the correspondents who accompanied him sent a dispatch back to his New York newspaper that was printed under the heading, 'Harding Quits Drinking.' Yet never was there a time when Harding, as President, was not officially dry. He had to be since prohibition was the law and he had taken an oath to enforce all laws. But as a matter of private habit he was wet. And it was very unfortunate for prohibition that it had to come in under this unlucky star. Those who would like to violate the law looked to Washington for a sign as to whether it would be safe to do so. What they saw and heard gave them heart. They went ahead. They organized, expanded and dug themselves in. Gifford Pinchot once told the writer that if Roosevelt had been President when the Volstead law came into existence he would, within three weeks, have made everybody understand that it would be extremely unsafe for anybody to violate it and that, as a consequence, the law would have been accepted and obeyed. Certainly Harding's attitude helped to make the situation that now exists.

There is now a division among the dry leaders as to whether they should make a fight in both of the great parties to compel the nomination of presidential candidates who are actually and dependably dry. Those who believe this line will be drawn in 1932 are not so sure about the wisdom of drawing it in 1928. It is doubtful if it will be drawn when Mr. Coolidge's successor is chosen. Both candidates will have to declare, of course, that they are in favor of enforcing the law so long as it is the law, but one or both of them may really be very half-hearted about it. It will be the pleasant task of the voters to look beneath these official utterances and try to determine which shell the pea is under.

The Republican candidate, whoever he may be, will probably stand for prohibition as a general proposition, while maintaining silence, if he can, as to whether he favors a redefinition of what constitutes an intoxicating beverage. The Democratic candidate also will probably stand for prohibition, but he may have a great many things to say with regard to the right of each state to declare what, within its limits, shall constitute an intoxicant.

In this respect, New York is setting the pace. The people of the State of New York are to vote next autumn upon a series of involved questions prepared by Elihu Root, the purpose of which is, as Senator Borah has pointed out, to nullify the Eighteenth Amendment. The questions are phrased in fine words—there is even something said about making only such changes as will permit the sale of 'beverages not in fact intoxicating' but the plan leaves to the several states the right to declare what, within their borders, shall constitute an intoxicating beverage. In other words, the Federal Government is asked to step aside and let the various states declare for themselves what a part of the Federal organic law means. Mr. Root did not suggest that the Federal Government step aside in the matter of defining other parts of the Constitution. It is only with regard to the Eighteenth Amendment that he proposes such an innovation.

Of course Senator Borah is entirely right in declaring that if the New York plan were to be followed, nullification would result. There could be and might be forty-eight different answers as to what constitutes an intoxicating beverage, and some of the answers would be wet enough to keep the whole country saturated.

The strategy of the wet leaders lies in reviving, as far as booze is concerned, the old doctrine of states' rights. With complacent courts and loose legislatures enough wet spots could be sprinkled about the country so that the dry states could not possibly be kept dry. Of course there is no assurance whatever that the courts would be complacent, and the probability is that they would not be, but the wets are so hard pushed that they are turning down nothing that might possibly prove to be a way out.

The main thing is to keep up a clatter and, if possible, convince the people that prohibition cannot be enforced because so many are opposed to it. Without a leg of law to stand upon they have nothing to lose whatever may happen and there is always a possibility that something may happen to change the outlook. That is why they clamored for hearings before a senatorial committee last April, as it is also why 'straw votes' were taken in such newspapers as were willing to play the wet game. The hearings amounted to nothing except that they gave the wets an opportunity to get out their propaganda through the press of the country. The wet propaganda was, of course, offset by the propaganda of the drys, yet the wets, nevertheless, had again reminded the country of their existence. The straw votes, too, added to the clamor and convinced those who were already convinced.

When one thinks of what crooks can do with ballot boxes guarded by officers and covered with the sanctity of the law it is humorous to think what wets could do—and doubtless did—in a straw vote that violated no law regardless of how many fake votes were registered.

To make a big showing, all the liquor interests had to do was to buy extra copies of the papers, clip and mark the coupons and put them in. Yet all of this wet propaganda did one thing that perhaps the wets did not expect it to do and certainly did not want it to do—it aroused the drys who went to sleep after the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted. It did more than that. It brought out support that the drys had never before been able to get. A group of Episcopal bishops whom the anti-saloon forces had long vainly urged to endorse prohibition began to speak vigorously about the time of the Washington hearings. Also, little rivulets of money began to pour into the anti-saloon coffers, showing that the springs still exist that once produced funds so voluminously. In fact there are many other indications that 'the wets will defeat themselves.'

While there is no conceivable chance that the wets can ever win, it seems certain that the liquor question is destined to plague American politics, city, state and national, probably for twenty years. It is a pity, because when public attention is concentrated upon a single subject opportunity is offered to smuggle in much selfish legislation that would otherwise be defeated. It is unfortunate, too, that until such time as the people shall become thoroughly aroused the mixing of unlawful liquor and crooked politics will continue. But what else is there to do but fight out the battle to the end? Mayor Dever, at the Senate hearings, spoke feelingly of the deplorable conditions that law violators had brought about and declared it to be the duty of Congress to work out a plan that would be satisfactory to both sides. There would be no doubt of the duty of Congress to do this if it were intellectually conceivable that such a plan could be drafted. In the very nature of things both sides cannot be satisfied. For the truth of the matter is that one side wants intoxicating beverages made and sold and the other side doesn't.

All of the wet talk about the desirability of having 'light wines and beer' and beverages stronger than the Volstead Act permits that 'are not in fact intoxicating'—all this talk is bosh. No wets wants wine, beer or anything else that is not intoxicating. No wine was ever made that couldn't intoxicate. Wine can be watered until it is harmless and a very few prefer to drink it that way, but wine thus watered would not satisfy the wets. Such beer as we used to make did not have the punch of whiskey, but enough of it would intoxicate anybody. It did not make them climb telegraph poles, but it had an effect.

Granted that one-half of one percent is below the limit of intoxication for most persons—what of it? Would it do any good to increase the legal limit to a point just below where it would become intoxicating? Would the wets be satisfied then? Everybody knows they would not. Canada's 4.4 beer makes no hit anywhere. Everything that could not intoxicate would still be near beer or weak wine. What wet cares for a little more alcohol provided the legal limit is still too low to feel? It is the feeling that the wets seek. Anything that exhilarates will intoxicate if enough of it be drunk. And the Constitution is the authority of the prohibitionists for saying that intoxicating beverages shall not be made or sold in this country.

Therefore, the fight must go on. There is no room for compromise. Both sides cannot be satisfied. It is what one side wants that the other side, backed by the Constitution, says cannot be. And so long as the Eighteenth Amendment stands, it will be the duty of the Congress, the President and the courts to enforce it.

President Coolidge's attitude toward prohibition does not make much of a hit with the drys. They feel that he mixes too much politics with his enthusiasm for enforcement. Personally, of course, as well as officially, he is dry. Politically he balances things nicely. His Attorney-General, an old Vermont lawyer, talks prohibition straight from the shoulder and even raps Government officials for criticizing the law that they are directed to enforce. At the head of the Treasury Department, however, is Mr. Mellon, a retired distiller who, under the Volstead Act, is the chief prohibition enforcement official. Mr. Mellon probably believes he is enforcing the law as well as he can. The drys do not agree with him. Many severe things have been said about Mr. Mellon's brand of enforcement. Perhaps the best that can be said about him is that for a former distiller he is a great prohibitionist.

At that, enforcement is making progress even under Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Mellon. It is making progress because it had to go ahead if it were to move at all. Mr. Harding left a record in this respect that could not easily be touched without improving it. In other words, Mr. Coolidge is the beneficiary of a poor precedent. But as the fight against booze grows hotter, he and his successors will have to do a still better job of enforcement. The drys are not forever going to put up with make-believe enforcement at Washington. They know the law can be enforced if the President is determined to enforce it. It is nonsense to suppose that the Government cannot prevent the illegal withdrawal of millions of gallons of industrial alcohol each year if it wants to.—The Dearborn Independent.

Greer, S. C.—It has been a very long time since I have made a report of the Anderson and Yarboroughs work. Last conference the conference decided to annex the two works for one year on account of the tremendous crop failure we had in the Piedmont section. The work is scattered over four counties. I pass through six counties to cover this vast circuit. I have driven my Franklin over 10,000 miles in six months time. Not on joy rides but on real ministerial drives. In spite of the vastness of the work our work seems to be growing. We were much blessed on our last visit to our churches. We began at Liberty Hill and preached a sermon on the subject of Profit and Loss. We tried to get the people to an attitude where they would figure on real profit. Not all that looks like profit is really profit. We felt like praising the Lord when we extended the mourners bench for those who really wanted to be a profit to God and to themselves. To our surprise four came forward. Among them one young man for whom we have been praying for some time. We took five members into our Liberty Hill Church last Sunday. We went to Fairview the following Sunday when again we had the folk to figure on Profit and Loss. We had five who came forward for prayer. There seemed to be a good atmosphere. Conviction was felt. We feel as if the revival spirit has already began to burn at Fairview.

Our revival meeting begins at Fairview July 18th. The last time we were at Harmony we had 17 hands raised for prayer with five kneeling at the penitent form for prayer. We are praying for a mighty outpouring of God's spirit upon this large work during the revival meetings. We hope to see many turned from their ways of sin to Jesus. Sister Koons who has been with me in many a revival meeting in the last 12 years of our married life has been in poor health for some time. We were compelled to carry her to the Hospital last week at Chick Springs. Her condition is quite critical. The doctors are at loss to know the reason of her intense suffering. I would like to make a request that all the Methodist Protestants and others who believe in prayer to please pray for her that she might be healed for his Glory. She has meant so much to me in all previous meetings, many times preaching for me, never failed in prayer and personal work. It seems almost as if my right hand were gone.

Sincerely yours in His service.

R. G. Koons.

Bessemer City.—We are moving along very nicely at present. We have been doing some repair work on the outside of the church and hope to have it remodeled inside shortly.

The Ladies' Aid Society have purchased a nice new piano for the church which was much needed. They are a busy crowd of workers and believe in doing things. We will have Home coming here first Sunday in August and wish to extend a hearty welcome to all the ex-pastors and members to come and join us in having an old time gathering. Come and be with us, friends, and try to make the day an enjoyable one. Dinner will be served on the grounds picnic style.

With best wishes to all.

Midway, Haw River Ct.—Our pastor filled his appointment last fourth Sunday, and at night we had the Children's Day exercise. It was not my privilege to be there, but have heard others say that it was a success, and the children did well. Much credit is due to Miss Sallie Dobbs and others. Collection was something over $11.

We did not have preaching yesterday on account of the revival at Fair Grove.

Our meeting will begin the 4th Sunday in this month. Will ask the prayers of all who feel interested in us. Pray that we may have a glorious revival. Mrs. G. W. Apple.

MY VISIT TO SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

Following the directions of the Board of Home Missions, I left Baltimore June 7th on an official visit to our three churches in Seattle. My route from Chicago was by the Burlington Railway to St. Paul, and from there to Seattle by the Great Northern. These roads very generously favored me with trip passes, which greatly lessened the expense of travel. Their employees are courteous and the scenery through the Rocky and Cascade Mountains is most charming.

My stay of twelve days was pleasant, and I am fully convinced profitable to both the churches and the Board of Home Missions. I am indebted to the pastors and other friends for their kind hospitality, and their efforts to add to the enjoyment of my visit.

With the exception of the two Saturdays we were engaged every day with some duties relating directly to the work before us. The first Sabbath was given to Ravenna and Seaview Churches. The summer exodus had already begun. The people of the Pacific coast are noted for their fondness for outdoor life. During the summer season they camp in the mountains in great numbers. Notwithstanding this we had at Ravenna in the morning 212 in the Sunday School and 150 in the public service.

It is gratifying to report that this church is making encouraging progress under the faithful and efficient ministry of Rev. W. L. Hoffman. During the pastorate of his predecessor, Rev. George W. Beck, a splendid modern church 70 by 70 feet, with Sunday school rooms, was built at a cost of $35,000. In all my travels I have not seen a better building for the money. They also have a comfortable and attractive parsonage. Ravenna is a suburban section of Seattle and is a promising field for a successful church.

Brother Hoffman has had some problems to solve and serious difficulties to overcome. Such are frequently met with in the establishment of new churches. In this case these have been met with discretion and patience, and peace and harmony prevail. The Sunday school which has an enrollment of 400 is still growing. New members are being added to the church, while the financial conditions are improving. There is a debt of $8,000 on the property which is being met by annual payments. On the morning of my visit an offering was taken for this which was followed by personal solicitations and amounted to $700 with the expectation of making it $1,000. I have confidence that the entire amount of this debt will soon be secured and the church will become self-supporting. This is one goal which brother Hoffman has before him.

In the evening I was at Seaview and preached to a congregation which taxed the capacity of the chapel to the limit. This church was projected during a visit of Dr. Charles H. Beck and myself to Seattle eight years ago. This was during the pastorate of Rev. L. B. Smith, D. D., at First Church. He purchased the lot and superintended the erection of the chapel. They still tell how he became both carpenter and painter. The parsonage was erected during the pastorate of Rev. O. B. Williams. Dr. R. N. Orrill, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who resides in Seattle, has been supplying the church for more than a year. Dr. Orrill is not only an efficient minister of the gospel, but is both broad-minded and fair-minded. His pastorate at Seaview has been very successful. The congregations and Sunday school have both largely increased.

More than sixty members have been added to the church. The spirit of the people has undergone a great change. There is a zeal and enthusiasm among them that makes the outlook very hopeful. I was with them in their quarterly conference Tuesday night. The reports, which were written, showed every department of the church active and prosperous. There were funds in every treasury. They have a very comfortable parsonage. The balance of the debt on this, amounting to $2,500, was recently paid.

The principal item of interest here, however, is the new church. This has been talked of for a long time. Steps were taken looking to this during the visit of Dr. Lewis and Dr. Beck a year ago, but nothing definite materialized until the beginning of 1926. Since then the Building Committee has been busy and the Secretary of the Board of Home Missions has been cooperating with them.

Two things looking to this end were accomplished during my visit. A loan of $10,000 was secured from the Washington Mutual Savings Bank of Seattle, and the laying of the corner-stone of the new building. The Building Committee had raised $6,300 in cash and subscriptions and had erected the foundation. The first unit of the church will be two story brick veneer 44 by 70 feet and will cost approximately $20,000. In addition to the audience room and basement, there will be several small rooms for Sunday school classes. These, with the present chapel, will furnish ample room for a large school.

The erection of this church marks a new epoch in our work in Seattle and gives us another very creditable church building. The corner-stone was laid on the evening before my departure for the east. A large company of friends gathered. The exercises were participated in by our three pastors and the writer. The building will be completed by early fall. It will be paid for in time and should become a strong and self-supporting church.

I will conclude the account of my visit to these churches in another letter. I am reporting in the order in which the churches were visited. The schedule of visitation was made previous to my arrival, by a committee composed of the three pastors and a layman from each church.

The following is the summing up of the Church Problem in Mexico, by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This excerpt from Bishop Cannon's article is taken from the New York Times Current History Magazine for July, 1926, in which appears a very interesting symposium from every angle of the problem. Bishop Cannon had supervision of the work of the Methodist Church in Mexico for eight years.

The effort which has been made by Roman Catholics to link up Protestantism with its attack on the Mexican Government has been so far an utter dismal failure. Protestantism has no faith in such pleas for "religous liberty." Whenever and wherever the Vatican has had the power it has permitted no freedom of worship. It did not permit it in Mexico, Cuba or in South American countries as long as it could prevent it. It endeavors today to stifle all Protestant efforts in Spain, Poland, Italy, Rumania and indeed everywhere else. It is in so doing perfectly consistent with its exclusive claims. But it cannot secure support from Protestantism in its effort to compel the Mexican Government to give to the hierarchy its old position of domination over the people under threat of present pain and future damnation. It is even possible that Protestantism for the ultimate good of Mexico may decide that, although it can never agree that any human government or agency has the right to restrict the simple preaching of the Gospel entirely free from political activities, yet it may hold that right in abeyance rather than seriously embarrass the Mexican Government in its present life and death struggle to free the country from clerical domination of the people. Certainly the present-day situation in Italy, Spain, Poland and other countries is sufficient proof that nothing would be more hurtful to Protestant aims and activities and to religious liberty in Mexico than a victory for the Roman Catholic hierarchy led by the Vatican in the present conflict. Although there is no certainty that the Government will be obliged to take such steps, yet it is possible that it may be necessary for the present distress to prohibit religious activities of any kind by the Protestant missionaries, not because the Government believes those activities will be hurtful, but because Roman Catholics' clamor for a technically consistent enforcement of the Constitution may require it.

Perhaps the most significant fact for citizens of the United States which has developed in this matter is the open effort which has been made by Roman Catholics in the United States in response to the Apostolic letter to compel the Government of the United States to aid the Vatican in the accomplishment of its designs upon Mexico by demanding, not only in the press but in the Congress of the United States, actual intervention in Mexico by the United States Government to secure again for the Church the position and power which for four centuries it so shamefully abused. The violent attacks upon the Mexican Government in both houses of Congress, culminating in demands for intervention, and the intemperate denunciation of President Coolidge by Archbishop Curley of Baltimore for entertaining a Cabinet officer of the Mexican Government are symptomatic of the tendency of the leaders of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to confuse the proper relations of Church and State, and to expect the Civil Government to be subservient to the order of the Church.

SUMMER CONFERENCE.

Stewardship.

The subject of stewardship will be taught at the Summer Conference, by Rev. N. G. Bethea. He is a very fine teacher and will make his subject most interesting. I wish the President of the conference had arranged for every member of the conference to take this, one of the most important courses, that will be given. If every adult member of the Methodist Protestant Church would T'the one year, our college would be free from debt. You will be missing a great deal if you fail to take Stewardship.

Take the course, then go back to your Christian Endeavor Societies, Missionary Societies and probably study it with your Wednesday night prayer meetings. Our beloved church needs this emphasized as much as any other one phase of its work.

THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY.

By the time this is read by our people throughout the denomination the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the first Methodist Protestant Church in Japan will have passed into history.

It was a bright Sunday morning, July 11, 1886, when the writer and his wife met our Japanese friends in the church services, then held in a Japanese lawyer's residence, built in foreign style, in the Japanese section of Yokohoma, not very far from the railway station, and organized a church of twelve members, the first Methodist Protestant church in the entire heathen world.

The building has long since given way to the march of progress, and of these first members a goodly number have gone to "the better country," one, brother Sakai, was pinned down in the earthquake and was burned to death.

The building for the First Church was erected by Rev. T. H. Colhour, in the foreign settlement near the Japanese part of the city, but was later taken down and rebuilt among the homes of the Japanese on a fine site. This building was demolished during the great earthquake of September 1, 1923, but has been rebuilt in a more substantial manner, and is well suited to its purposes, and, under the leadership of its faithful pastor, Rev. C. Sakai, who is also the president of the Japan Mission Conference, bids fair to accomplish a work of large proportions.

The First Church Yokohoma, was followed by the organization of the First Church Nagoya, in November, 1887, by the writer, with 19 members, and this by the organization of the First Church Shizuoka, by the late Rev. E. H. Van Dyke, with 18 members, followed by others, and then the organization of the Mission Conference September, 1892.

From those beginnings the work of our church has extended to China and India where the work is well organized, with a Mission Conference in each, schools, medical and other departments attest the fact that God has answered the prayers of our people for the success of our foreign missionary enterprise.

It must follow that it behooves our people to support adequately the work which has grown as we desired and prayed for, and cannot be maintained with as little money as when we had only one field to develop.

Repeatedly have appeals gone forth for every Sunday school to order the Children's Day supplies, and hold a service, and secure as large an offering as possible.

There is plenty of time to hold a service yet. Just order the supplies, and arrange for holding the services as soon as possible.

Send your card to me at Berwyn, Md., and prompt action will follow.

We are gratified at many of the offerings which have been reported. and hope all will do their best, and that the offering will be sent in to your annual conference treasurer with the clear statement "This is the Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions."

The President of the General Conference has published "When the collection is sent in it must be distinctly stated that it is for the Board of Foreign Missions as the collection for Children's Day. This will be counted on the apportionment of the Budget for that church just as the regular collections for the Budget. But it will not be given entire to the Board of Foreign Missions unless it is stated when sent to the Annual Conference treasurer." Hence it is most important that you comply with the above request, and make it plain it is the Children's Day offering otherwise the Union Board stands to lose 75 percent of your offering. Fred C. Klein

ATTENTION.

Seventy-five percent of the church membership in America today is found in the country church. Eighty-five percent of the membership of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church is rural. Rural church is receiving more attention at present from the larger denominations than any other subject. Why not, when it comprises seventy-five percent of our interest?

The subject assigned for the courses in Rural church are "Home Missions"—more properly called "The Whole Mission of the County Church," and "Serving the neighborhood." Both of these subjects are based on practical experience and tested methods in country and community churches. We are not only anxious to hear our young people taking these courses, but hope all our pastors serving small town and country churches and those serving city churches who are ambitious to sometime become country pastors take the courses also. We hope you will come to class at least, for your experience is worth much to the class.

Charlotte, First Church.—The Children's Day exercise was the 3rd Sunday evening. The program was fine and the children well trained under the direction of Mrs. J. E. Hawkins. The collection amounted to $25.00.

The Juniors are enjoying a new piano in their department purchased by the Sunday school and friends.

We have with us now Mrs. W. A. Neal as pianist and choir director.

Mrs. Mabelle William Brown of Winston-Salem was a visitor with us Sunday morning and night. The congregation enjoyed hearing her sing a solo "Open the gates of the Temple" Sunday morning. In the evening she and Miss Carrie Muse sang a duet, "One sweetly solemn thought." We hope she will come again.

The Ladies' Aid Society are planning an ice cream supper Saturday evening the 17th on the lawn near the church.

The Annual S. S. picnic was thoroughly enjoyed by all last Saturday.

We are planning to make some repairs and do some painting in our church in the near future. Our church will be dedicated the 1st Sunday in October. Dr. A. G. Dixon will preach the dedicatory Sermon. Others have been invited to rejoice with us on that day.

Mr. and Mrs. Surratt with several others assisting have just closed a very successful Daily Vacation Bible School with an enrollment of 72 children. We feel much and lasting good has been accomplished through their effort.

Some of the visitors in our congregation recently were Fred Pritchard of High Point and Mr. Bunch of Asheboro. Glad to have them. Four new members have joined with us since last report. Robert Nichols, Miss Mangum, Mrs. Poiter and Mr. Scruggs. We are glad to welcome them into our church.

We trust several of our young people attend the Young People's Conference at High Point next week. Mr. and Mrs. Surratt will leave Monday to be there through conference.

Our church has joined in with the other churches of this community in union prayer meetings to be held at Park during July and August.

Our pastor is giving us some very fine sermons. Last Sunday morning his subject was "Christians helping the devil," made some of us almost feel ashamed of ourselves but he does that right often. Reporter.

Forter.—The Home coming day, which was held last Sunday was largely attended and enjoyed by all. We consider it a great treat, to have Bro. Lowdermilk and a class of children from the Children's Home, to be with us and to render such a beautiful program. Following the children's program Bro. Lowdermilk delivered an instructive address. This led us up to the noon hour. Then the ladies spread the dinner on the big table, which was truly enjoyed by all.

After a short period we reassembled and continued the program with the following speakers, all who gave interesting addresses: Rev. F. G. Little, Mr. C. F. Ritchie, Rev. H. W. Kelly. We are very sorry that the late hour would hardly admit of an address from Bro. A. Ridge, the other speaker on program, but this was a day to be long remembered by those present for its up-lifting attitude.

We will begin our revival meeting the first Sunday in August continuing in the following week, with Rev. J. W. Hulin of Midland, as helper. We are trusting, praying and believing that there will be much done for the Master. Pastor.

Corinth and Littleton, Littleton Ct.—So much time has passed since I reported.

Children's day service was held at Corinth last Sunday. It was said to be the best service held at Corinth. Credit is due Mrs. Walter Carter and Mrs. B. F. Morris for training the children. To Mrs. Bernice Carter for her faithful service as organist. Sunday school growing in interest and number.

Here at Littleton we feel so despondent over the loss of Brs. Rightmeyer, who passed to his reward Sunday night, the 4th, about 2 o'clock. He was a pillar of this church, a strong one, though for the last six months he had been very weak, I mean weak physically. Hardly a month ago he attended church and took the offering, looked so feeble he could hardly get around but managed to, and that was his last work for the church. Next time he was a corpse brought in. Funeral service at 10 o'clock Tuesday, after which he was taken to Vaughn cemetery for burial. Just how long Mr. Rightmeyer had served as superintendent the writer does not know. Of course an obituary will appear lat

Will your Society or School send delegates, paying part or all of their expenses? Doubly fine! It will be money well invested. The mental and spiritual help that these young folks receive will be of permanent future value to your Church.

Have You Registered?

Still the call goes out, echoing and reechoing into every nook and corner of our Conference district. It is not too late yet to register. Send your fee in at once. If you can't get it to me this week, bring it with many others you have obtained to the Conference. Help someone in your Church to get free entertainment for having procured 100 registrations. Be one of the 1168 who have not registered, and help to put it across in fine style. Again I say, it isn't too late yet.

—Last Saturday while we in Greensboro were sweltering at a temperature of 101 degrees, Rev. J. E. Pritchard writes that it was only 97.5 at Asheboro. He invites us down to enjoy the delightful climate of that region. We thank him. When the mountains round about Asheboro grow a little taller, we may be tempted.

TOMMY'S GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Uncle Ned looked very solemn indeed.

"And do you mean to tell me that Tommy O'Rourke hates the Fourth of July?"

There was a shrill chorus.

"He said he did, and he wouldn't shoot firecrackers nor torpedoes, 'cause they're no fun, anyway."

"Whew!" whistled Uncle Ned. "I didn't think there was a boy like that in the whole country. Maybe there is a reason for Tommy's feelings. Perhaps he doesn't have as much of a Fourth as you do. You know I've promised to help you celebrate, and I propose we show Tommy O'Rourke how nice a real Fourth can be. You get all your firecrackers, and I'll soon be back with him," and Uncle Ned strode out of the gate.

How he did it they never knew; but half an hour later he reappeared, holding Tommy by the hand. The boy's eyes were red, and his freckled face was shining with cleanliness; but, more than that, there was a look of great wonder at his invitation.

Uncle Ned supplied him with firecrackers and punk, and he was soon in the midst of the fun. His crackers went off just at the right moment and his "sisters" were the envy of the other boys. The little, brown face was aglow with happy smiles, and Uncle Ned, who was the jolliest boy of all that day, watched him with a little lump in his throat.

There were many sorts and sizes of firecrackers and torpedoes; and Tommy was in the thick of it all, his small grimy hands busy as bees, his eyes dancing with happiness, and his stomach comforted with Aunt Molly's good things to eat.

It was dusk when Mrs. O'Rourke arrived on special invitation to witness the grand display of fireworks

"An' it's the toime of yer loife ye're havin' allannah," she said to Tommy, "thanks to the kind heart. Sure, sir, it's Tommy that saved up twinty cints for the Fourth, an' that dirty Moike Rafferty took 'em away this marnin'—bad cess to 'im, an' 'im there wid not a cracker at all, at all!"

The boys looked at each other and then at the shamefaced Tommy, but Uncle Ned came to the rescue.

"It's high time to begin, boys," he cried. "It might be well to settle beforehand who is to help me send up the big rocket."

"Let Tommy!" they cried with one voice, and "Tommy it is," said jolly Uncle Ned.

Then came the other rockets—a great many of them.—the Roman candles, giant crackers, pinwheels, and last of all the big paper balloon. The boys watched breathlessly as it mounted higher and higher, careening as the air currents struck it: then, righting itself, it drifted straight toward the hill. As the balloon, now only a mere point of light, was swallowed up in the distance, Uncle Ned turned.

"Hats off, boys," he cried. "Three cheers for our country and for Independence Day!"

The boys gave the cheers with a will, and Tommy's voice was loudest of them.—F. M. Pendleton.

FIRE CAKE.

Ella and Edward Brown had seen many interesting things in their short lives, for instance, real savage Indians and they had been in some Indian fights. Once Edward had been shot at, and although he was only ten years old, he knew enough to throw himself down and "play dead." If he had run probably another arrow would have followed the first one, and maybe found its mark.

Edward was something like his father, always thinking up things to do. Edward's father had invented a vest and helmet which would keep out most Indian arrows and it had saved his life once, the vest had. Edward's ambition was to grow up into a great Indian fighter, and go out West and fight the fierce plains Indians.

This was all very well, but all of a sudden people stopped talking about Indians, and everything was about British and Red Coats. Then Edward wanted to grow up and be a great soldier and lick the Red Coats.

"I'm glad you're too young to go to War," said Ella. "War is awful."

"Yes, but you believe in Liberty, don't you?" asked her brother. "Wouldn't you fight for what you believe in?"

"Yes, I would, but I don't want you to go and get killed," said Ella.

Mr. Brown cleaned his old musket and marched off to fight under General Washington and Edward had to content himself with helping on the farm and taking care of his mother and sister. He felt quite important being the Man of the House. Ella was busy too.

One day as the children sat on the front step waiting for some word from their father, they saw a man coming on horseback.

"One of the Riders!" cried Ella. "Perchance he has a packet from Father!"

The man was one of the Riders, who were the Postmen in that day. He was a rough-looking man with red hair, and not one of the Royal Mail Riders, who belonged to the British. He was one of William Goddard's Riders, and William Goddard was a good patriot in Baltimore, the Father of the Post Office, because he was the first American to carry mail for people.

Well, the Rider drew up beside the children and handed them two letters, then he said that they should watch out because the soldiers were coming, not the Red Coats but the Continental Army, the Patriots.

"They are going to camp by the River," the Rider told Edward and Ella.

It was like Circus Day to those children. They waited and waited, and pretty soon, sure enough! they heard the drums and fifes. Then the soldiers came, three regiments, almost a thousand men. As soon as they had pitched camp, some of the men began exploring around. Two of them came to the Brown's farmhouse.

"I'm one of the drummers," said the little skinny soldier, and the other one said he was just an ordinary soldier.

"Won't you drum for us some time?" asked Edward, eagerly.

"We are not allowed to drum except at certain hours," said the man. "But I can practice between four and five in the afternoon. If it please you I will bring my drum and drum for you."

The other soldier was sniffing the air hungrily, for Mrs. Brown and Ella were baking. Ella came out soon and asked the soldiers to come in and have some hot bread and butter and milk.

While they were eating the soldier whose name was Bert Simmons said that he would like Ella to bake bread for him.

"Not this fine bread," he said. "Just hard bread will do for a soldier."

Ella said she would try and the soldier explained that he wanted her to bake fire cake, which was hard like a cracker and good enough for a soldier.

"Each man of us gets one pound of flour a day, but most of us are not bakers, and we have no ovens," he said. "We make fire cake on hot stones, but it is vile stuff."

"We would gladly bake bread for several of you," said Mrs. Brown. "We can at least do that much to help the cause of Liberty."

"And you need not go unrewarded," said Soldier Simmons. "A pound of flour will make more than a pound of bread. Keep the extra flour for pay, and to engage men to cut wood for your oven. There will be money in it if you manage well."

"We wish to make no gain by the War," said Mrs. Brown. "But we will keep enough to pay our expenses and the rest we will return to the Army."

After this Ella and Edward and their mother were busy from morning till night, baking fire cake for the soldiers. More and more came with their flour and Mrs. Brown sent some to neighbors. Soon all the women were baking bread. It was done so cheerfully, because each felt that she was helping the cause of Liberty.

"We are marching away early in the morning and I have brought five hundred pounds of flour to be made into fire cake to take with us on the march," he said.

Five hundred pounds! Poor Ella and her mother looked at the great sacks of flour, but they were patriots and began at once to stir and weigh and make fire cake. Edward was left sleeping in his bed. Some of the soldiers came and chopped wood for the oven and by morning the hard tack was ready for the men.

After that the mother and daughter were too tired and sleepy to stay up another moment. They tumbled on their beds and fell sound asleep. Edward, who had had his rest, ran out to watch the soldiers march away. He followed them for two miles, tramping beside the friendly drummer—but they were all friendly. They turned to wave him a farewell, and suddenly they gave a shout. Edward looked back and saw flames and smoke coming from the spot where he knew his home stood.

"The oven," he cried. "It was too hot and has set fire to the house. Mother and Ella are sleeping. Oh! Oh!"

He began running back as fast as he could. The drums behind beat a hasty signal and in a moment, thud! thud! the regiment was running behind him. Would they be too late to save the brave lady and the loyal little girl? It seemed so.

"Fire cake!" sobbed Edward. "It was fire cake for us!"

Quickly the men formed a line from the well. Edward rushed to barn and found two more buckets. They passed water from hand to hand, but the flames were leaping high. Some of the men tried to go into the house from the front, but they could not.

All hope was dead. Edward threw himself on the ground and cried. The Captain said: "These were true heroines and patriots!" All the men stood silent while the Captain began to speak, when suddenly from the barn a voice exclaimed: "Edward!"

"Mother!" he shouted, dashing up.

"Wait!" screamed Ella's voice. "Please see if you can't find two coats for us. We escaped with our lives and —only our nightdresses."

Coats were soon found and there was great rejoicing.

"Never mind," said the brave mother. "We shall be very comfortable in the barn. It is an honor to bear hardship for one's country!"

Little did they expect in those hard days that soon the Fourth of July would be celebrated from Coast to Coast and good Americans all over the world remember and glory in Independence Day!—Selected.

PROMISES.

"So they chose you to give the big address before the Philharmonic Society on the eighteenth. Oh, Mrs. Norman, how perfectly splendid!"

Betty Harper was perched on the arm of her friend's chair, and she gave the older woman a little squeeze with her round, white arm as she helped herself from a little plate of cakes on the nearby table.

"You'll wear your black lace dress and your pearls," she went on. "Oh, and do your hair all tucked in under, won't you? You know—the way I like it best. I do wish I were going to be there. I'd be so proud of you!"

"Foolish!" laughed Mrs. Norman.

"If it were anything else except this trip I'd stay at home just on purpose, but an auto trip of a whole week— we'll spend one night in the town where mother was born Auntie's promised to show Cousin Amy and Louise and me where they fished and mother almost got drowned when she was three years old. And Quebec— Oh, I just dream of it nights!"

"Of course you do. It's a wonderful thing for your aunt to take you three girls."

"But you must save the manuscript of your address so I can read every word. What's it going to be about?"

"They've asked me to speak on Beethoven and that's what is bothering me. The town library is so weak on musical subjects. I might go to Putnam, but it's a long trip on the bus and I should have only a little time at the library. I'm unusually busy this week, too."

"Oh, Mrs. Norman, I [illegible] terial. Clara Hunt, [illegible] with me, lives in [illegible] teaches music. He has [illegible] library you ever saw. [illegible] him because he sleeps [illegible] books like that. I'm [illegible] for you."

"Why—why, no, it's Wednesday, isn't it?"

"Of course it isn't! And I waited a solid hour and a half!"

"Oh, Jane, I'm so sorry. I [illegible] was Wednesday, truly. [illegible] shame! Can you ever forgive me?"

For an instant the girl on the other end of the wire hesitated. Then she laughed. "I [illegible]

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Asheville.—Sunday, July 4, Pastor Bates gave us two exceptional sermons. In the morning, "America's contribution to the world's welfare." In the evening, "Where art thou?" the first of a series on "The great questions of the Bible." Brother Pickett Montgomery with Mrs. Montgomery were welcome visitors. There were a number of other visitors at both services, also at the midweek prayer meeting Wednesday. Misses Norvella and Verdie McIntyre left last week for Columbia University. They will be much missed at our services.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to Mrs. Pearl Sullivan Barnard in the loss of her only child—a beautiful lad of eight. The little fellow was fatally hurt by falling on the sidewalk while at play. His conversations about heaven had shown a premonition of an early translation. Almost from infancy he had the habit of prayer.

The readers of the Herald will be interested to know that a granddaughter of the late Dr. Cicero Harris was, with her husband, honored in a brilliant reception in Biltmore Forest Friday night of last week. She is Mrs. Joy Kime Benton. Their gracious host and hostess were Dr. and Mrs. Ray Griffin. Several hundred people attended.

Reporter.

Miss Mary Josephine Morrow.

There comes a time when death must enter the home of every one. On May 24, death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Graham Morrow for the first time, and took from them their daughter, Miss Josephine. It was heartbreaking to the parents to part with her, but their great sorrow has been made lighter as they think of her beautiful Christian life.

Miss Morrow was a loyal member of Salem M. P. Church, having joined when just a little girl. Almost all of her life of 21 years was spent in the Master's service. Possessing a beautiful Christian character and a charming personality, she was loved by all with whom she came in contact, and in her passing the community feels a great loss. Coming years cannot erase the memory of her; it will grow brighter as we remember the goodness there was in her heart.

In addition to her parents she is survived by one brother and two sisters.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer, interment taking place in the family burial ground. H. L. Isley.

Enfield Charge.—We must make a combination report since we have waited so long.

Early in the Spring Dr. and Mrs. Dixon came down and we traveled over this district seeking to arouse more interest concerning the general work of the church. The last meeting of this nature was held in at the Enfield church and Dr. Sexsmith and Rev. Lawrence Little were with us. The visit of three Specialists were no doubt very helpful to our district.

The 5th Saturday and Sunday in May found us in another district convention at Spring Church on Spring Church Charge. Here we had a fair attendance on Saturday and a large attendance on Sunday. All those who brought messages to the conference did well. Doubtless the address of Dr. Carl C. Taylor, Dean of the Graduate School at N. C. State College, was one of the best and most effective addresses we have listened to in a long time. His subject was, "The Rural Church a Social and Religious Institution." The largest attendance was from Spring Church Charge, the second Greenville charge, third Whitakers, fourth Enfield, fifth, Littleton, and sixth, Halifax.

The work on Enfield Charge is making some advance in growth through the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. The Sunday School now has the largest enrollment in its history. The Whitaker Chapel C. E. still increases in membership and interest.

We are looking forward to the Summer School and Summer Conference with much interest and here and now call on the First District to get busy with registrations and also send up a large attendance again this year. R. C. Stubbins.

Cid, South Davidson.—As we have been enjoying the reports from other places, maybe some one will be glad to hear from us.

Our Sunday school is doing fine.

Our prayer services are growing in interest. It keeps widening out. It was at Mr. Isaac Black's last Saturday night. Mrs. N. W. Lanier was leader. It goes to Mrs. Bettie Barnes next Saturday night, close to Dr. Myers.

We had our Children's Day service on the 11th inst with a right large attendance.

Cid church was nearly full. They rendered a very splendid program, composed of songs, recitations dialogues &c, by the children.

We are proud of our young folks. Everybody seemed to enjoy ours. It was the stillest audience that almost could ever be seated. There were three duets sung, but the one that was rendered by the two little Misses Harris of Thomasville, aged nine and eleven years, was applauded to the fullest extent.

The preparation of the program and the training of the children were under the supervision of Mrs. N. W. Lanier and Mrs. C. O. Leonard. The Missionary offering was $9.36.

There were three prizes offered to the one that got up the largest Amt.. The prizes went to Miss Abseiler Holles, Master Foy Lanier, and Miss Ora Wright. Mrs. Herman Heifner acted as organist, and gave us some excellent music. The exercise was applauded by many. We had a lot of out-of-town guests.

There were several inspiring talks made by Mr. C. O. Leonard, Rev. Avery Wooddell, and Mr. Hermon Heifner.

There is a good revival going on at Clarksbury church, conducted by several men of High Point called the "Gang." Lots of interest is manifested. Have had several conversions. Don't know when it will close.

A well wisher to the Herald and its many readers.

Shiloh, Randolph Charge.—Children's Day was observed at our church last Sun July 11th. Flat Rock Circuit.—We have just closed a very good meeting at Gideon's Grove.

Bro. A. Ridge came to me on Saturday before first Sunday and did the preaching till Friday night. He preached the gospel with power and all seemed to enjoy his messages. While we did not have the visible result that we hoped to see, yet it was a good meeting; the church was revived and there were nine conversions; four joined the church. There were many unsaved that would not yield to the gospel, but we believe the gospel that Bro. Ridge preached will yet bear fruit in the lives of some of those that did not yield.

NOTICE.

The third quarterly conference of Flat Rock Circuit will meet at Bethel church on Saturday before fourth Sunday in July at 2:30 P. M., being 24th. I trust we may have a good number from each church present.

High Point.—The Christian Endeavor Society enjoyed a pleasant outing and picnic at Hayworth Springs, three miles from the city, on Monday evening. The members motored out, held their usual weekly meeting, and an appetizing lunch was served at 7 o'clock.

The Ladies' Aid Society departed from its usual custom, and held its monthly meeting Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock in the home of Mrs. S. S. Coe in Emerywood. It is decidedly more pleasant on these torrid days of summer to meet in the evenings. The Ladies' Aid is still active; on Monday a Committee of which Mrs. J. W. Hinkle and Miss Delia Barker were Chairmen, served dinner to 20 members of the Committee of Social Agencies of High Point. After the business of the Society was finished, Mrs. Coe, assisted by Mrs. James T. Ryan and Miss Annie Robbins, served delightful ices and home-made cake.

Circle No. 4 of the Foreign Missionary Society, composed largely of the members of the A. M. Idol Philathea Class, will meet next Thursday evening with Miss Lucille Pickens on West Broad St.

The Young People's Summer Conference will convene at High Point College next Monday, July 19th, and a large number of young men and women from various sections of the state is expected through the week. A splendid program has been arranged and published. Rev. Nat Harrison's many friends will be delighted to greet him again after an absence of a year in Chicago.

Mrs. George R. Brown is spending ten days at the Y. W. C. A. Conference at Blue Ridge, N. C. as a representative from the local "Y."

Mrs. Joseph McAlister of Hopkinsville, Ky., and her little daughter have arrived to spend a few weeks as guests of her aunt, Mrs. J. B. Spencer and her uncles, Messrs. C. L. and J. A. Gray. Mrs. McAlister's mother was Miss Lillian Gray, who was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Armistius Gray, and was reared near Jamestown, where she attended the noted Jamestown Academy taught by Prof. J. M. Westmerly in the 80's. Though she passed on seventeen years ago, many of her school-mates and friends of her youth hold her in precious memory, and they are happy to greet her daughter.

Mrs. Coe of Greensboro is a guest in the home of her son, Dr. S. S. Coe.

Miss Ruth Moffitt has gone to Asheville to spend some time for her health.

James Moffitt has returned from a trip to Wrightsville Beach.

Mrs. R. T. Pickens and daughter, Virginia and Annette, have returned from a trip to Black Mt., Asheville, and Mt. Mitchell.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—The annual Sunday school picnic will be held at the church on Saturday before the first Sunday in August.

Some of the members have become afflicted and the infirmities of old age keep them from attending church services regularly. They are Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Amick, Mrs. Judge Euliss, Mr. Filmore Richardson, Mrs. Hetty Amick and Mrs. Victoria Mendenhall. We surely do miss them, for they were always there when they were able.

Mrs. Sallie Cobble, better known as Aunt Sallie John Cobble who is and has been an invalid with rheumatism for some years, has been more feeble for the past two weeks. She is sorely afflicted, but is happy in the Lord, she is so interested in the members and old friends and acquaintance of Mt. Pleasant community that she is asking all about them when anyone from there visits her. She would be glad if any of you would call to see her if it is only for a few minutes.

at the sky for possible storm clouds, and frequently Betty would hold out her wrist to her sister.

"Feel my pulse and see if I'm coming down with rheumatic fever or have a stiff knee, or something, so I can't go!"

But her pulse was perfectly healthy and the evening sky was cloudless. "Oh, dear! Only think!" Betty sighed resignedly as she snuggled down into bed.

It took her a long time to get to sleep, for she was just dropping off when suddenly she came wide-awake with a start. Her throat went choky and queer with the horror of that lightning thought. She had completely forgotten to see Clara Hunt's tickets, also those books on Beethoven!

She lay rigid in the dark for a moment. Then she stole quietly out of bed and over to the window seat. The yard was flooded with moonlight and a light breeze stirred the tree tops outside her window. Just where the road went round the hill like a broad curving ribbon she could see the bungalow that was Mrs. Norman's. If she were awake, what must she be thinking of her? Leaning her head on her hands, Betty tried to plan what to do.

"Mrs. Norman's depending on me, and it's for the big Philharmonic concert, too—there'll be crowds of people to come here from people from Putnam and Westonia. Everyone has told us [illegible] into trouble by my carelessness. How could I ever have forgotten a thing like that! Of course she can go to the Putnam library, but they haven't as good books on music as Mr. Hunt and besides"—She gave a little gasp as she remembered. "Why, didn't I hear last night that the man who runs the bus in Putnam was in a smash up and his bus will be out of the garage for a week!"

She tried to think whether she could not go out to Clara's the next morning and get back in time to start with the others, but she knew it could not possibly be done. There was just one thing to do. She had given her word and she must keep it. For a moment she sat leaning her head against the window-casing. Then, slipping into bed, she buried her face in the pillow.

The next morning when Louise called her she made no move toward getting up. "I'm not going," she said, so low as to be almost inaudible.

"Not going! Are you sick? You're joking!"

But she was not joking, and neither Louise nor her father could get her to tell why. Her aunt and cousin Amy arrived, and her aunt questioned and tried to persuade her.

"Don't say any more," she choked, biting her lips. "I—I—just can't go."

And at nine o'clock she sadly watched the automobile start on its way.

Then she called Clara Hunt on the telephone. Yes, Clara was at home and would be glad to see her. Without a word to anyone she stole down the street and knocked at

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JULY 25.

The Passover.

Lesson Text: Ex. 12:1, 2, 21-28.

Golden Text: I Cor. 5:7.

The Central Truth: Jesus Christ is the [illegible] that taketh away the sin of the world" and saves from the retribution of sin.

Scriptural Points.

1. Moses and Aaron made the journey to-[illegible] from Midian to the court of Pharaoh. They brought to this monarch a message from God,—"Let my people go that they may serve me." To this demand of the Most High Pharaoh gave a defiant and contemptuous No. "And Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go."

2. Ten terrible plagues were visited upon this [illegible] king, who began to yield when four of them were inflicted. These were the plagues of blood, frogs, lice and flies. "And Pharaoh said, I will let you go,....only ye shall not go very far away." This was not satisfactory, and the plagues kept coming.

3. Three more plagues followed, those of death of cattle, boils, and hail. Then another partial permission was given: "Go now, ye that are men, and serve the Lord." The men were just a part of the people. God demanded that all the people, men, women, and children, should serve Him in the promised land.

4. Another plague was sent, that of darkness, a darkness that was felt. And another insufficient permit was granted: "Go ye, serve the Lord; only let your flocks and herds be stayed." All the flocks and herds must go too "There shall not a hoof be left behind."

5. One more plague, the death of all the first born, wrung from Pharaoh a full and urgent permit to leave this sorely stricken land. So insistant was the request of the Egyptians that the children started on their journey at night.

6. It was a most memorable night. A lamb for each family, or one for two small families, was slain. The blood was sprinkled upon the two side posts of the door and the cross-piece above the door. This was done so that the destroying angel might pass over such houses and not destroy the first born within.

7. The lamb roasted by the fire was eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. This was the institution of the Passover to be observed as a memorial of deliverance when the first born of the Egyptians was slain. And it was to be observed annually to the end of time.

8. At the quiet and unexpected hour of midnight the destroying angel visited every home of the Egyptians and took the life of the flower and promise of the household. The first born in each home lay a corpse. A cry of great distress went up all over the land of Egypt.

9. A new era of time was inauguarated. It was a new beginning of God's dealings with mankind. A new nation was about to be organized for the service and glory of God. The history of the race now turned over a new leaf.

Practical Points.

1. To say no to God is to invite self-destruction. "But he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul; all that hate me love death." Prov. 8:30.

2. A half-way Yes is equivalent to a positive No. A promise with reservations is no promise at all. It is a cheap attempt to still the voice of conscience. God will have the whole heart or none at all. The devil gets the benefit of every compromise with righteousness. "No man can serve two Masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

3. No one can reject the gospel and get away with it. "Be sure your sin will find you out." Num. 32:23.

4. The most glorious fact of revelation is that Christ tasted death for every man. Will anyone let him die in vain? "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1:9.

5. Every day is a new beginning of opportunity. "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness." Lam. 3:22, 23.

6. A good beginning does not always have a good ending. The road to heaven like the road to hell is paved with good intentions. Every one of the two million who left Egypt fully intended to reach the promised land. But Caleb and Joshua were the only adults that got there. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke 13:24.

BISHOP CANDLER'S MONDAY MORNING ADDRESS AT THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

The expectation of the many who heard with interest and profit the morning addresses of Bishop Candler, was amply met in the closing exposition of the Sermon on the Mount.

Bishop Candler read Matthew 7:21-29. His opening statements dealt with the reception given the word of Jesus by the people.

"We read here that the people were astonished at the doctrine of Jesus. Some of us may be surprised that they were astonished. Our surprise should be that we are not stirred by Jesus' words.

"The people were astonished at the doctrine and the preacher as well. The call we hear sometimes to leave matters of doctrine and go back to the Sermon on the Mount is really a desire to get rid of the preacher on the mount."

Determines Destiny of Man.

The Bishop said that "the sayings of Jesus are to determine the destiny of man. It is to determine whether character is to be like a house founded on a rock or on shifting sands. It is the Lord that speaks here. We must accept Him as Lord or reject Him altogether. If He is not Lord divine He is a most atrocious impostor.

"We need to know Him here, for He shall judge us hereafter. 'Many will say unto Me in that day, "Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Thy name, and in Thy name do many mighty works?" and then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity.'"

Speaking of creeds, the Bishop said everybody has a creed. Politicians have creeds and, incidentally, he stated that in most instances now they have but one creed—"What can we do to get elected?"

Like Various Schools of Medicine.

"Our creed comes from heaven," said he. "We cannot conceive of the incarnation of God without a supernatural birth. If Jesus was not supernaturally born He was naturally born. If He was born only of the flesh He was not the incarnation of God."

Paying his respects to the innovations in the realm of the Christian creeds, he likened them unto the various schools of medicine—the homeopathic, hydropathic, osteopathic, etc. "All of these paths," he said, "lead but to the grave."

He declared that the bodily resurrection of Jesus lifts humanity into the realm of the heavenlies.

He quoted Bishop Pierce, of the earlier period of Methodism, when giving his solicited opinion of a sermon that savored of Universalism, preached by a Methodist preacher with whom he was rooming, as saying, "You covered up hell with a bunch of flowers so much as to make it positively inviting."

Every Teacher a Shepherd or a Wolf.

Applying the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount to the ministry, the Bishop made a tremendous hit by declaring that "every public teacher becomes a shepherd or a wolf."

He described the awful consequences of a preacher degenerating into the destructive work of a ravening wolf. —Selected

ON HELL.

(Extracts from a Sermon by John Wesley.)

"Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."—Mark 9:48.

Every truth which is revealed in the oracles of God, is undoubtedly of great importance. Yet it may be allowed, that some of those which are revealed therein, are of greater importance than others; as being more immediately conducive to the grand end of all the eternal salvation of men. And we may judge of their importance, even from this circumstance: that they are not mentioned once only in the sacred writings, but are repeated over and over. A remarkable instance of this we have with regard to the awful truth which is now before us. Our blessed Lord who uses no superfluous words, who makes no "vain repetitions," repeats it over and over in the same chapter, and as it were, in the same breath.

And let it not be thought, that the consideration of these terrible truths is proper only for enormous sinners. How is this supposition consistent with what our Lord speaks to those who were then, doubtless, the holiest men upon earth? When innumerable multitudes were gathered together, he said to his disciples (the apostles), "First of all, I say unto you, my friends, fear not them that can kill the body, but after that they have no more that they can do. But I say unto you, Fear him, who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him." Luke 12:5. Yea, fear him under this very notion, of having power to cast into hell; that is, in effect, fear, lest he should cast you into the place of torment. And this very fear, even in the children of God, is one excellent means of preserving them from it.

It behooves, therefore, not only the outcasts of men, but even you, His friends; you that fear and love God; deeply to consider what is revealed in the oracles of God concerning the future state of punishment.

THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE.

It was the proud boast of the Apostle Paul that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for the very good reason that it was the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Just because it is that, because it is effective in the redemption of human life and the freeing of souls from the curse of sin, as ault after assault has been made upon it. It is not strange that it should be so attacked and that attempts should be made to rob it of its fundamental truths. We must expect these attacks, and not be surprised nor discouraged when they come. It is to better purpose if we keep ourselves on the alert to defend the fundamentals of our faith, and more than that, declare them vigorously to the world.

There was a day when Christianity was endangered by the armed Mohammedan hosts who swept across Europe, giving those whom they conquered the choice of the sword, tribute or the Koran. They seemed irresistible until they met the still more valiant soldiers of Charles Martel, who broke their power and saved Christian civilization from annihilation.

There is no army today marching forth to conquer the world by force of arms for some religious faith, or to uproot some religious system. The world pretty generally recognizes the impossibility of accomplishing that result by such means. But Christianity is being endangered by an enemy of another kind which is making its assaults by teaching ideas and theories, both in the realm of religion and philosophy, which either directly oppose the tenets of orthodox Christianity, or so modify them as to rob them of heir very essence and power.

PROTECTION FROM POISON OF FALSE DOCTRINE

What would we think of town commissioners who would connect up their water systems with poisonous springs? We are confident that such officers would promptly lose their jobs. What are we to think of teachers and agencies which open the way for the stream of error to permeate the church? Surely it is fair to say such teachers and agencies should be removed.

What would we think of a father who, because of his desire to maintain a large manufactory, would not protect his children against the poisonous fumes that come from that factory? It would be fair at least to say that he was unworthy of fatherhood, and he should be compelled to save the life of his children, or they should be removed from him. What shall we say of a church so carried away with the idea of a big organic union that it is ready to allow its people to be spiritually poisoned in order to accomplish it? Surely such a church would receive condemnation from him who stood in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks.

The church must do something to save her people from the poison of false doctrine, and that something is imperative and immediate.

WANTED—A CONSECRATED WOMAN.

The Eastern Carolina Training School for Boys is in need of a matron to handle the house-keeping work of its first cottage. The school is located about four miles from Rocky Mount. For this reason we want a woman who was reared in the country and who will not be bothered by the "lonesomeness" of country life. We want a woman who is interested in this type of work in a permanent way, not as a temporary job. She must be familiar with general house-keeping, the handling of food, the making of bread, the keeping of milk and the making of butter. She must know the rules of sanitation as this is a state institution and things must be kept clean. She must be a consecrated Christian woman and love boys. On Sunday she will be asked to take a Sunday School class of Boys.

Boys are detailed to do the work but must be constantly supervised. The work is not hard if the mangement is good. The place pays $50.00 a month with room and board. The room is a large airy one with electric lights and bath, hot and cold running water.

Having been a reader of the Herald since childhood and knowing the type of homes into which it goes I am asking Mr. McCulloch to publish this in the interest of giving some good woman a good home where she can do real missionary work and at the same time give us a good woman. The woman should be old enough to be "mother" to the boys, yet young enough to be able to do the work. Possibly the widow of some minister will be interested, or some teacher who is looking for work less strenuous.

MARRIED.

A marriage of interest to their many friends was that of Miss Beulah Kindley and Mr. Robert Kirkman which took place on Tuesday evening, June 29, 1926, at six o'clock at the home of Rev. T. F. McCulloch, who performed the ceremony.

The bride, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kindley, was becomingly dressed in blue georgette with blue hat and gray accessories. Mr. Kirkman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ed. Kirkman of the Moriah Community, and is a useful member of his church.

Immediately following the ceremony the bride and groom left by motor for a trip to the western part of the state. For the present they are making their home with the groom's parents near Greensboro.

RELIGION AND FREEDOM.

There is an old notion that to become a Christian means to surrender. IT IS TO ENLIST. There is a strange idea that to make Christ our Lord is a resignation. It is consecration. There is a peculiar notion that limited, narrow life. But Jesus came to live as a Christian is to know a that men might have life more abundantly. Religion is a personal matter between the individual and God. God has revealed Himself in His Son. Men can be truly free only when they become like Christ in motive and purpose. A ship is free when its port is chosen. Its rudder under control, and with sail set it bears up in the teeth of the storm. A man is free only when he has chosen the goal of his life; when he can say, "THIS ONE THING I DO."—Sel.

LESSONS FROM THE LIVES OF BURBANK AND DAVEY.

(From the Christian Observer, Lousiville, Ky.)

Recently two men noted for their knowledge of plant life have passed into the Great Beyond. Men and women who give thought to the more vital things of life find many interesting points in the contrast between the life and death of Luther Burbank as a professed infidel, and the life and death of John Davey, Father of Tree Surgery, as an avowed Christian.

Here were two great naturalists working with the instruments of nature, and yet one believed that death is the end of life and the other that death is but a door to a new existence. It is difficult to realize that such dissimilar views could be held by men who e work, in the main, was along the same general lines.

Luther Burbank worked with plants and vegetables, which come into life in the spring and pass away in the fall. The falling leaf, to him, was not a propheey of spring but only a token of death. Was he influenced in his mental attitude by the brevity of the life with which he dealt?

John Davey dealt with trees, whose lives extend through many generations of mankind and ofttimes through many centuries. Perhaps he was subtly affected by the grandeur and the longevity of his friends, the trees. But best of all he believed in God and God's Word as revealed in the Bible. John Davey saw the tree as a living thing—as the handiwork of God. Natural objects, the stately tree, the roadside flower, the green carpet of grass—all were to him manifestations of divine providence and power and love.

His soul thrilled to the beauty of the tree. He wanted to save it from wanton destruction and preserve it for generations to come, as a living friend and benefactor of man. And yet he was not unmindful of its economic value, nor of its profound effect on climate, water supply and soil fertility.

Luther Burbank, twice married, left no offspring to perpetuate his name; John Davey left five children—four sons and one daughter—to carry on his life's work and maintain his life's traditions.

Burbank spent his closing days in proclaiming a doctrine of atheism; John Davey in expounding the Christian religion. His book, "A Prayer-Made Man," written after he was seventy, is a striking testimonial of the efficacy of prayer.

Each man was a naturalist; each knew privation and hardship in youth; each had a vigorous struggle to succeed; each lived nearly eighty years. Strange, indeed, that as death drew near one should turn his face toward the setting sun, and the other toward the rising sun. Belief in God made all the difference.

TAKE THE FRUIT I GIVE YOU.

Take the fruit I give you, says the bending tree:
Nothing but a burden is it all to me.
Lighten me my branches, let them toss in air;
Only leave me freedom next year's load to bear.
Do my waters cheer thee, says the gurgling spring,
With their crystal coolness 'tis their life to bring?
Leave me not to stagnate, creeping o'er the plain.
Drink for thy refreshment; drink, and come again.
Can I yield you blessings? say the friendly heart,
Fear not I am poorer, though I must impart.
Wherefore should ye thank me, Giving is my need.
Love that wrought none comfort, sorrow were indeed.

PREPARE FOR PRAYER.

Whoever prays publicly has a greater obligation than to weave words together in prayerful phraseology. He must have a definite purpose, must know something of the particular needs, must be in touch with the spirit and the progress of the service. More than that he must have an awareness of his being called to lead others in prayer. This will not come quickly if "called on" to pray; it follows time for meditation so that his personal inclinations may be set aside or modified. Too many sudden prayers are unabashed exposures of personal concerns that have so little relation to other people that they are not "led in prayer" at all; they merely listen to somebody's prayer.

Superintendents should not forget this in making up the program for their schools. Whoever is to lead the school in prayer should be told long enough beforehand so that they can be prepared to pray.—Selected.

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, folding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing overmuch
You almost are too tired to pray tonight.
But it is blessedness. A year ago
I did not see it as I do today—
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.
And if, some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee,
This restless curly head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again
If the white feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.
I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear its patter in my home once more.
If I could mend a broken cart today,
Tomorrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I
But ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest is flown;
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

STATEMENT BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE.

By Ernest H. Cherrington.

The measures before this committee for which these hearings are being held involve questions of a national referendum on the National Prohibitory Law, the elimination of important regulations controlling the use of alcohol for medicinal purposes, the increase in the alcoholic content of liquors and the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The Proposed Referendum.

The proposed referendum, if adopted by Congress, would be an official sanction of a method which either directly or indirectly would tend to undermine the American form of government. It would be the first official act of Congress to defeat the purpose of that portion of the Constitution which the framers of that document considered so vitally important that they placed it beyond the possibility even of amendment.

The policy of a local or state government is determined by the collective voice of the individual voters of the community or of the state. Federal policies are determined not by the collective voice of the individual voters of the nation, but by the collective voice of the individual States.

New York State, for instance, has 10 per cent of the population of the United States, but in determining Federal policies, New York State in the last analysis has only one forty-eighth of the national voice. Such a referendum as that proposed would give to the great State of New York as much of a voice on this important national policy as would be given to eighteen other States of the Union. The methods used by the friends of prohibition during the last twenty-five years of intensive political effort have been legal, direct, constitutional methods. Those who would undo or modify the work that has thus been done, should use similar methods.

So long as only 15, or 25 or 30 or even 35 of the States desired National Prohibition they could have no voice outside of their own confines, and in fact they could not fully protect themselves and enforce their own prohibition laws because of the conditions in other States. Thirty-five States agreed upon the policy of prohibition could not dictate the policy to be followed in the city of New York or in the State of New Jersey, but when 36 States united in a demand for National Prohibition, those 36 States under the Constitution had the dight to determine the policy for the entire Nation, and to prohibit the liquor traffic even in a city like New York and a State like New Jersey.

Public Opinion and Prohibition.

Those advocating modification have suggested that prohibition does not represent national public opion.

Before National Prohibition became operative 75 per cent of all the municipalities and villages, as well as 85 per cent of all the counties in the United States were already under prohibition. Sixty-eight per cent of the Nation's population, and 95 per cent of the land area was under prohibition by State enactment. Before we had National Prohibition 66 of the 96 members of the U. S. Senate and 70 per cent of the members of the House of Representatives were at the National Capital representing States and districts already under prohibition.

The official majority for the adoption and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution is unparalleled in the history of the Republic. The first eleven amendments to the Constitution were ratified by the bare three-fourths majority required. When it came to the twelfth amendment we had seventeen States, but four of those failed to ratify. Five States failed to ratify the 13th amendment. Four failed to raitify the 14th. Six States did not ratify the 15th Amendment. Six did not ratify the 16th Amendment. Twelve States did not ratify the 17th Amendment and ten States have not ratified the 19th amendment. In the case of the Eighteenth Amendment, however, of the 48 States, 46 ratified.

The aggregate majority for the original Constitution in all the State ratification conventions was about two to one. The aggregate majority for ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment in all the State Legislatures was more than four to one.

By all proper standards the Eighteenth Amendment and the National Prohibitory Law were nothing more nor less than the translation of American public opinion into law.

Prior to the outlawing of the liquor-traffic by Congress and the States, the opponents of prohibition were given eminently fair consideration. They always had the distinct advantage in the contest.

So long as they could hold just one more than one-third of either House of Congress, they were able to prevent National Prohibition. Six wet States through their representatives in the lower House of Congress could have prevented National Prohibition, but the liquor traffic finally reached the point where it could not hold to its support even the Congressmen from those six wet states.

Even after National Prohibition was submitted by Congress, it had to run the gauntlet of 96 State legislative bodies (two in each State). So long as the liquor interests could hold the support of a bare majority in one house in each of thirteen States they were able to block National Prohibition. But they could not hold even that margin. Out of the 96 State legislative bodies 93 voted to ratify.

Having been fairly defeated at every point and having finally been outlawed, liquor traffic next turned its attention to nullification, thereby attempting to bring into disrepute the law and the Constitution. In a few cities and States it has succeeded in some degree, but success even there has been only a partial success, and it now seeks to secure by an indirect method what it could not accomplish directly —a method whereby conditions in a few large cities and a few States can be given over-emphasis and made indirectly to exert an influence all out of proportion to the proper constitutional and legal voice such cities and such States can possibly have in the Federal Goverment under the Constitution.

The evident object of the opponents of prohibition is to stretch the Constitution, if necessary, to bring back alcoholic beer. Before National Prohibition 80 per cent of the beverage liquor traffic was the traffic in distilled spirits. Three per cent was the traffic in wines Ninety per cent was the traffic in beer. The principal fight of the prohibition forces in the drive for National Prohibition was the fight against beer. Before National Prohibition the production of beer in the country had reached the enormous figure of two billion gallons per year. This was the amount produced and consumed in spite of the fact that most of the States produced either none or an infinitesimal amount. These two billion gallons of beer were produced mainly for the benefit of States, cities and wet districts containing a population of 35,000,000. If beer were again to be legalized, probably 90 per cent of the old liquor traffic with its attendant evils would return.

Under the old system the average glass of whisky, the average glass of wine, and the average glass of beer each contained the same amount of alcohol. That is why the different sized glasses were required. What was desired was the half-ounce of alcohol in a drink whether that particular quantity of alcohol was mixed with a chaser of a glass of water, or whether it was mixed with the ingredients that entered into the making of beer. The evident purpose of modification now is to inaugurate a program that will eventually secure that quantity of alcohol in a drink. The near-beer of today is like the old beer of pre-prohibition days, except that the alcohol in the product is reduced to less than one-half of one per cent.

It is argued that modification would not mean the bringing back of the old time saloon.

Neither the Eighteenth Amendment nor the National Prohibitory Law prohibits the running of a saloon as either a rich man's club or a poor man's club. Hundreds of thousands of saloons might be set up tomorrow in the cities and villages of the Nation. The law does not prohibit the old bar, the brass rail, the glasses, bottles filled with liquor to drink, the tables, chairs, bartenders and free lunches. The only exception is that liquors containing one-half of one per cent of alcohol can not be sold. The saloon as an institution has not been abolished by law. The saloon was simply the natural and logical vehicle for distribution which the permitted sale of alcoholic liquors seemed to require. It does not exist today in those portions of the United States where the law is enforced because it does not pay financially, but if the old liquor traffic were to be brought back the saloon either by its old name or by some new name would certainly come back. The Federal Government can not escape dealing with this problem so long as the Eighteenth Amendment stands, and if the Federal Government proposes to take upon its shoulders the task of attempting to regulate and control the saloon in addition to those phases of the question with which the Federal Government now has to deal, it will speedily find that its enforcement sk and its difficulties have not been modified t have been multiplied.

Is Prohibition A Success?

In determining the success or failure of pro- bition, some factors that have to do with mmon knowledge of conditions should be ken into account. It is not necessary to gath- a mass of statistics to determine certain cts that have very much to do with answer- g the question as to whether National Pro- bition has been a success or a failure. Sub- antial success does not mean complete suc- ss, and there is a vast difference between a bstantial success not complete and a failure. The average observing individual can easily iswer for himself the important question as whether as a rule there is now greater or ss evidence of the beverage liquor traffic id its evils on the streets of any city, on ilroad trains, in interurban and street cars, otels, restaurants, manufacturing plants, usiness houses, local, State and Federal pub- buildings, city council chambers, State gislative halls, and Congressional lobbies. he average casual observer who recalls con- tions before the adoption can easily tell for mself whether today there is more or less idence of drinking and drunkenness at pub- meetings, in caucuses, state, local and na- onal political conventions, fairs, base-ball nd foot-ball games, holiday celebrations and nctions of almost every public character.

Is it reasonable to believe that a commodity ich as liquor which was before prohibition dvertised perhaps more widely than any oth- commodity, in the newspapers, magazines, n billboards and electric signs all over the ountry and which was sold openly in hun- reds of thousands of retail establishments on ne principal street corners of our cities and owns, would have a larger sale and sonsump- ion now that all advertisements have been rohibited; that the entire trade has been out- awed and that when one wishes to purchase a rink he must resort to clandestine places and nethods and even then not be certain as to whether he will be poisoned or whether he will e arrested?

If the liquor now used is so deadly and yet nore than ever is used, as many enemies of rohibition insistently aver, how does it hap- en that the public health record of the Na- ion is so much better in recent years and hat the national death rate has been lower ince National Prohibition went into effect, han at any other time in the history of the Republic?

Many enemies of prohibition insist that uch legislation is paternalism; that it is an ttempt to make men good by law. Certainly he prime object of the prohibition law like nost other laws that affect the conduct of the ndividual is not to make men good by law, ut rather to protect society at large from the nti-social acts of those who insist upon dem- onstrating by their conduct that they can not e made good by law.

Much has been said by the advocates of nodification about lawlessness, a crime wave nd vast increase of arrests since prohibition ame. Many people take these misrepresenta- ions without question and without regard to nany new causes of lawlessness, yet the facts are that practically the only class of crimes or arrests that have greatly increased during the past six years have been those that have to do with the regulation of the automobile and traffic. If those are eliminated, the statis- ties of 500 large cities of the United States will show no alarming increase in crime and will also show a very favorable tendency as compared with the trend of arrests and crime in other countries of the world. The city of London and the city of Paris have been re- peatedly referred to as having great success in dealing with the liquor problem as compar- ed with the city of New York under National Prohibition. In comparing statistics in such cities the general attitude of the police and the public must of necessity be taken into ac- count. For instance, men are arrested in New York City today who would never be arrested under the old system. One reason is the gener- al attitude of the public with regard to seeing a drunken individual. Another is on account of the rapid development in the use of the automobile which on the streets jeopardizes the life of a drunken man although that man may not be disturbing the peace. On the other hand, as long as the average drunken man in London and Paris disturbs no one and com- mits no other offense he is not only allowed to go along but often helped to comfort and safe- ty by the accommodating police. Nevertheless, while the convictions for intoxication in New York City between the years 1918 and 1924 increased 70 per cent the convictions for in- toxication in the city of London increased more than 200 per cent. The records available in the city of Paris show that the arrests for all causes other than intoxication increased between the years 1918 and 1924 by less than 20 per cent, while the arrests for intoxication during that same period increased by more than 75 per cent. The convictions for intoxi- cation per 1,000, 000 population in the city of New York for 1924 numbered 2,125; similar convictions in London numbered 4,058, while the arrests for intoxication per 1,000,000 pop- ulation (record of convictions not available) in the city of Paris for the same year num- bered 4,719. My own observations in the city of Montreal, Canada, have convinced me that drunkenness in that city under so-called Gov- ernment control which is however, properly speaking, Government sale, is more flagrant than in any similar city of the United States, even under the old saloon system.

It is a significant fact that of all those who have appeared before this committee asking for modification of the prohibition law there has appeared no official representative of the great student bodies in the colleges and uni- versities of the United States and no repre- sentative of the great youth movements of the nation.

Much has been said about a vast amount of drinking and increased drinking among stu- dents in the colleges and universities of the United States of America. To my knowledge only one official investigation has been con- ducted in any of the large universities with regard to this question. That was in the Ohio State University, at Columbus, Ohio, with about 10,000 students.

The following communication, signed by Dr. George Rightmire, President of the university, gives the very difinite results of that inves- tigation:

"Columbus, Ohio, April 10, 1926.

"My Dear Dr. Cherrington:

"Your letter of April 8, concerning our ex- perience at this university with alcoholism since prohibition, has been read very atten- tively. Last winter we were required here to undertake an investigation into the use of liquor among students, and the unanimous tes- timony of those who know most about student life was that the situation is better today than it has ever been known to be here, and, in fact, the situation in that respect here at the present time is thought to be highly creditable to the good sense and self-restraint of the student body. The groups of students, such as fraternities, for some years have had regula- tions against the use of liquor by their mem- bers and only a few occasions have arisen within recent years when these restrictions have been called into action. Of course, there are occasional cases of student drinking and possession of liquor by students, but the whole tendency of the student body is in the oppo- site direction.

"It would be impossible here, so the evi- dence indicated, to connect student drinking with prohibition. Many things have been said which indicate that the students rebel against the prohibition restriction, but there is no evi- dence to that effect here, and clearly drinking among students has vastly decreased in re- cent years.

"The above is based on quite a volume of testimony which we took during our investi- gation, and this testimony I regard as much superior to the statements made in numerous magazine articles and periodical issues of va- rious publications.

"Very sincerely,

(Signed) "George W. Rightmire,
"President."

Demands of Modern Industrial Age.

Economic and industrial demands had much to do with the adoption of prohibition. Those demands are more imperative today than they were when prohibition was adopted six years ago, or than they have ever been. The new in- dustrial revolution in which America finds herself already involved has made remarkable progress in six years. Where unskilled labor represented the principal factor in industry comparatively a few years ago, the require- ment now is for skilled labor, with clear eyes, steady nerves and unclouded brains. The transformation in this respect in the steel and iron industry, in mining, in transportation and in many other lines indicates that conditions have been practically revolutionized in a de- cade. Locomotive engineers, operators of elec- trical machines in factories, together with di- rectors of intricate mining machinery, as well as those in control of electrical equipment now used in practically all the great branches of industry, can hardly be benefitted by the bev- erage liquor traffic. Certainly the public is not insisting that any kind of alcoholic liquor be made more easily available to the drivers of 20,000,000 automobile and auto trucks, which have more than doubled in number since pro- hibition was adopted. These special classes represent the great majority of the voters of the nation. They have come under prohibition, not merely by reason of the state law or of the economic law and the great social law of public safety. It has been well said that the liquor traffic belongs to a lower and a slower age. Never was that factor more to be considered than at the present hour.

Counting the Cost.

It has been suggested that it might cost $75,000,000 a year to enforce this law in the district of New York, but $75,000,000—or even many times $75,000,000—for such a purpose would be incomparably small for the Federal Government of today, as contrasted with the $1,500,000 which it cost the poverty-stricken Federal Government when George Washington, as President, spent that much money simply to make preparations for a campaign that would have cost many millions of dollars more had it been necessary to continue in order to bring to justice the law-defying distillers of Western Pennsylvinia in 1794.

The Federal Government faced another great crisis when the "whiskey ring" of distillers, brewers and high Federal Government officials, in General Grant's administration, with headquarters in St. Louis and Washington, D. C., defied Federal revenue laws and for many years defrauded the Federal Government wholesale. A very serious situation developed in connection with those whiskey and beer frauds, but General Babcock, the Secretary of the Treasury, almost single-handed and alone, took the necessary heroic measures, stood his ground against all pressure and finally brought the outlaws to book and established again respect for the Government.

The District Attorney of New York has declared to this committee that twenty-one agents of the Federal enforcement department, at a salary of $2,000 a year each, in a few weeks succeeded in reducing diversions of denatured alcohol to the value of over $200,000,000 in New York by merely standing around and furnishing that effective silent moral suasion that suggested to the denaturizers that the Federal Government is able to enforce its laws. He also reminded this committee that an effort of the same character in the city of Philadelphia evidently resulted in reducing such diversion to a very much larger degree than in New York, even without additional judges or court machinery.

The United States Government, in its wisdom, for the last several years has spent over $700,000,000 a year for the army and navy. A nation that can afford to spend $700,000,000 a year on the army and navy for protection in times of peace can spend more than $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 a year on the enforcement of the national prohibitory law. The Federal Government today is spending slightly more than one-half of one per cent of its ordinary expenditures to enforce this law. The demand of the defeatists is for the Government to confess that it cannot enforce its own laws and increase the percentage of alcohol from one-half of one per cent to two and three-fourths per cent. Why not increase the one-half of one per cent of expenditures for prohibition enforcement to two and three-fourths per cent, which would mean about $100,000,000 a year?

The need of the hour is not to surrender to those who defy the law, but to use the nation's resources to demonstrate for all time that this Republic can enforce its own mandates; not to stretch or evade the Constitu- low the line of least resistance, but to follow that line which alone will make for the preeervation of national honor.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

On Thursday, July 8th, Mrs. Dixon and I, together with my brother J. A. Dixon and his wife at the Children's Home, started for Pensacola for a District meeting. We carried with us an automobile tent and camped on the way one night, and then camped on the church grounds at Pensacola for two nights.

All three of the pastors in that district attended the meetings on Saturday but not many of the people came. On Sunday we had good congregations and good meetings. Moving on from here, Bro. A. G. Wilson of the Pensacola church went with us up the new road he and his son have built to the top of Mt. Mitchell. And we found it so exceedingly pleasant that we spent one night camping near the top of the mountain through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Wilson. Some of the most beautiful scenery I have ever been permitted to look upon is found along this new road from the home of Bro. A. G. Wilson to the top of Mt. Mitchell. Much was added to our enjoyment of the trip by having Bro. Wilson with us to explain the many points of interest.

Any one planning to go to the top of Mt. Mitchell will do well to go to Pensacola and up to the top from the north side. It is a great mountain trip.

Rev. C. W. Bates kindly invited us to occupy his cottage at Weaverville during our remaining days in the mountains, so on Tuesday afternoon we left Mt. Mitchell and drove to Weaverville and enjoyed the cottage and the mountain life about Weaverville for five days. During our stay here we attended meetings of the Brotherhood, the Missionary Societies, the Sunday school, and the preaching services in Asheville. Spoke to the Brotherhood, conducted the third quarterly conference and preached once in Asheville. The work here is in fine shape under the splendid leadership of Bro. Bates and his good wife.

They are planning to enlarge their Sunday school rooms at an early date. This will add much to the usefulness of our plant there.

I also held the third quarterly conferences on the Weaverville charge and on the Democrat charge, and preached at a union revival service near Weaverville.

Rev. J. D. Cranford is rendering splendid service on Weaverville, the people are encouraged and the work is in good condition.

Rev. M. C. Henderson is doing his best on Democrat under the handicap of having to work at other things to support his family. We found the people discouraged a bit, but did our best to encourage them.

Summer Conference.

On Monday morning, July 19th we left Weaverville and drove direct to the High Point College for the Summer Conference. To my mind this was the best Summer Conference we have ever held. Dr. C. E. Forlines and Dr. W. J. Thompson were at their very best. All ministers who were deprived of the privilege of hearing them missed much. The faculty for the Young People's Summer Conference was a good one and the young people privileged to take the courses were fortunate. It was fine to see the college dining room filled at nearly all the meals.

Some one else, I take it, will make full report of these meetings.

Funeral of Mrs. R. G. Koons.

On last Saturday efening I received a message calling me to Greenville, S. C. to conduct the funeral of the wife of the pastor of Anderson and Yarborough Charges, Rev. R. G. Koons. Mrs. Koons was sick for some two weeks. It proved to be a tumor on the brain, and all that could be done failed to give relief and stay death. Those who knew her best speak of her in very high praise as a devout Christian woman and an excellent Christian worker. She leaves her husband and three bright interesting children to mourn their loss, also an aged mother and other relatives in Kentucky and Ohio. One sister and her husband reached Fairview Church just in time for the funeral.

Bro. Koons, because of hospital bills and funeral expenses is behind financially.

His churches are helping him, and the Masons are helping him. But he would like to help himself, and in my judgment he will render splendid service in evangelistic meetings if any of the brethren would like to have him in meetings where help has not already been secured.

An Obituary Committee for Mrs. Koons will be appointed soon.

Appointments.

August 1st, Denton, to dedicate church.
August 5th, Friendship.
August 6th, Albemarle.
August 7th, Why Not, Circuit Rally.
Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

Our good friend, R. N. Hauser, gives abundant evidence of his continued interest by his generous payment. Likewise, Dr. S. S. Coe makes an additional contribution, of liberal amount. The Mebane payments apply on the note of the Board, endorsed by friends of that place, the note having been reduced from the original amount, $1000., to $300. To all these friends, the treasurer expresses his appreciation. I am feeling very much encouraged over the situation; it is easily within our power to finish the task we have set for ourselves, to the extent of relieving the college of embarrassment, and enabling it to meet its pressing obligations. Just why do we delay?

J. Norman Wills, Treasurer.

Tabernacle Charge.—The third quarterly conference will meet at Moriah church on Saturday before the second Sunday in August at 2:30 P. M. All officials please take notice and if possible be present.

The quarterly conference is a very important occasion, and I think the success of any charge depends to a great extent on the interest the officials take in the quarterly conference. Come to Moriah at the time appointed. Come with your reports ready so we can transact the business of the church as we ought.

Edw. Suits.

Spencer Charge.—Our third quarterly conference will convene on Saturday, 31st, at 2:30 P. M. The conference will be held at my home in Concord. We shall be glad to have all of the members of the quarterly conference present. Our folks at Spencer and Charlotte have bought a lot at each place; and have partly paid for them; and they are very anxious to get them paid for by Conference. Our folks at Charlotte have built a right nice little Chapel on their lot and we are holding services in it, with some success. I doubt if there are two more little bands in the State that have endured more and proven to be more sacrificial than these little bands have proven themselves to be. They deserve sympathy and help. I feel like our people who can ought to help them. I am doing what I can to help them. If you have anything to give them send it to me at Concord, N. C. Please don't ask is it a paying investment. Ask if it is a saving investment? The gospel of Salvation was to be a saving investment. One of the first things some people ask when you talk about starting a new church is, will it pay? can we build a fine church there? The greatest question is, can we save a soul out there in the dark corners of earth. Again I say it, it is not a question of paying, it is a question of saving. Nearly forty years ago when God called upon me to give up my farm to go out to preach the gospel with a dear wife and children on hand to feed and clothe, I had a good home and I loved it as well as any man ought to love his home. But I had heard the call of Almighty God to preach His word. And the worth of souls had gotten on my soul. And souls are in my eye or I would not be doing what I am doing now and have been doing for three years.

I started out under discouragement. And I have gone on through all these years of discouragement. It has cost me something to preach, but I am glad that I was willing to pay the price. I am expecting to preach on as long as I can.

It has taken some religion to go on these three years and preach any way, without even running expenses. There are many things I would like to say but I fear I would be misunderstood. I have got great joy out of my work while serving a faithful few. My wife is still here with us. She is helpless and almost mindless. I need not tell you the balance. The burden is too great for me, but not too great for me and my Lord. I buried my oldest brother the 3rd of June. And I buried my next oldest brother the 18th of July. And just a few months ago I buried my youngest sister. That takes them all but me; that makes me very lonely. Out of eleven in the family that only leaves one. I am only waiting. I have made my plans to go and see them in the near by and by. May our Father continue to bless you all. Pray for us, we need your prayers.

Yours in His name. D. A. Braswell.

—Christ's earthly ministry covered not quite three and one-half years—from early A. D. 27 to the late spring of A. D. 30. His baptism, according to the best authorities, probably occurred late in December A. D. 26, or during January, A. D. 27. The early part of 1927 will therefore mark the 1900th anniversary of that event, and the three and one-half years immediately following will a little more than cover the 1900th anniversary years of His public ministry.

OTHER SACRED TRUSTS PERVERTED.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(We wish to commend the following article by Bishop Candler, in addition to the one last week, in reference to the betrayal of trusts. "Thou shalt not steal," surely applies to churches, colleges, seminaries etc., as much so as to hen roosts and water melon patches.)—J. F. Dosier.

Harvard University is not alone in its attempted perversion of the Andover Theological seminary, which effort at the alienation of that sacred trust has been arrested by the supreme court of Massachusetts.

Other educational foundations have been subverted most successfully, and with little or no protest.

Mary Lyon, when serving in Derry academy, made so much of Bible teaching that liberalistic trustees objected, and so she went forth with her green velvet collecting bag, and from the pious farmers of western Massachusetts she raised the funds with which Mount Holyoke was founded and pledged to be "perpetually Christian."

The institution was opened in November, 1837, and for more than fifty years it was conducted with great and increasing success, the evangelical purposes of the devout founders being kept in view most scrupulously. But that pious purpose is no longer respected there.

The teacher of the Bible now teaches the young women who go to Mount Holyoke for instruction that the Apostles' Creed is no more than "a kind of shibboleth, a necessary password to the orthodox, but totally without meaning in as far as real living is concerned." In her book entitled "The Evolution of the Hebrew People," her teaching is, if possible, still more liberalistic. The story of the institution of the Passover is legend according to this female exponent of rationalism, and the history of Abraham, Joseph and David is composed of fictitious stories. Other preposterous stuff disfigures the pages of her pretentious volume.

And this teacher is the successor of Mary Lyon!

Mr. Henry F. Durant, founder and fosterer of Wellesley college, became interested in the education of women by a visit to Mount Holyoke, which he made in company with the great evangelist, Dwight L. Moody. In the corner stone of the library which he presented to Wellesley in 1871 he placed a Bible inscribed as follows:

"This building is humbly dedicated to our Heavenly Father with the hope and prayer that He may always be first in everything in this institution; that His word may be faithfully taught here and that He will use it as a means of leading precious souls to Jesus Christ. Except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it."

Mr. Durant was so determined that God's name only should be glorified in the institution that he refused to allow his name to be given to it, or to permit a portrait of himself in any of its buildings, saying, "The college belongs to God, not to me." In his family prayers he was accustomed to make special supplication for Wellesley daily in this form, "O Lord, bless thy college."

Miss Helen M. Gould, an evangelical Christian, endowed at a later date, in the same spirit as that of Mr. Durant, a professorship of biblical history. And behold the occupant of that chair is reported to reject the story of the creation as recorded in Genesis, the account of the experience of Moses at the burning bush, and other essential parts of the Old Testament! She holds that the accounts given of the birth of Jesus by St. Matthew and St. Luke are not authenticated, and that possibly belief in our Lord's resurrection is groundless. The conclusions of that liberalism commonly called "the higher critism of the New Testament" she accepts and imparts to the students whom she instructs.

And that is the outcome of the perversion of Dr. Durant's College which he founded and dedicated so fervently to the service of God.

Sophia Smith left a legacy of $375,000 in her will to found an "evangelical Christian College" for women at Northampton, Mass., where "the Great Awakening" began in 1734, under the ministry of Jonathan Edwards. The third item in her will read as follows:

"Sensible of what the Christian religion has done for myself and believing that all education should be for the glory of God and the good of man I direct that the Holy Scriptures be daily and systematically read and studied in said college and that all the discipline shall be pervaded by the spirit of evangelical Christian religion."

But notwithstanding this expressed purpose of the founder of Smith College, the associate professor of biblical literature in the institution is a Unitarian woman preacher, brought from Norwich, England, where the heretical teachings and influence of "Taylor of Norwich" have lingered for more than a hundred years. What an enthronement of Taylor's spirit in the home of Jonathan Edwards!

Bryn Mawr College was founded by Dr. Joseph Wright Taylor, who expressly desired that "it should ever maintain and teach an evangelical and primitive Christianity as set forth in the New Testament."

Now in Bryn Mawr there is a professor of psychology who is an atheist and who glories in what he believes is the prevalence of atheism in American colleges. In his atheistic work, "Belief in God and Immortality," he says that "disbelief in a personal God and in personal immortality is directly proportional to abilities making for success in the sciences," and at one place in his pernicious production he teaches that a death that ends all is "a satisfactory, even a desirable goal," and that "many of the most distinguished moralists condemn belief in immortality as ethically wrong." And then he adds, "Yet much is made of it among benighted Christian populations."

Yet this Leuba lives on our educational foundation established by Dr. Joseph Wright Taylor to promote evangelical Christianity!

Matthew Vassar, at the first meeting of the trustees of Vassar College, insisted "that the training of our students should never be entrusted to the sceptical or the irreligious."

Nevertheless, conditions in Vassar are now much the same as in Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Smith, and Bryn Mawr.

Goucher College in Baltimore was born out of the faith and toils of that noble Methodist Rev. John F. Goucher, D. D., but in the few brief years that have elapsed since his death influences have begun to operate which seriously affect its evangelical character. Mr. H. S. Dulaney, once a trustee of the institution, in resigning his trusteeship, said:

"I am led by my own investigations to the conclusions that the Bible teaching in the classes of Goucher College call in question and cast doubt upon the inspiration, credibility and integrity of the Bible."

These are the rationalistic conditions found in six of the leading colleges for women in our country.

Like conditions of liberalism have been set up in a number of the most conspicuous institutions for young men in the North.

For example, Professor J. B. Pratt, successor of Dr. Mark Hopkins, of whom President James A. Garfield said "with Dr. Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and a serious student on the other end we should have a university"—this Dr. Pratt is reliably quoted as saying, "The Bible has lost all hold on the leaders of thought and certainly is destined before many years to become one of the curiosities of the past....The inspiration of those who spoke a 'Thus saith the Lord' is only of a little higher type than that of the whirling dervishes and heathen medicine men."

And that is the truculent utterance of infidelity by the successor of Mark Hopkins in Williams College, where in 1808 was formed the first foreign missionary society organized in the United States.

Amherst College was founded in equally profound evangelical motives and purposes in the year 1821. The object of its foundation was expressly declared to be "for Christ and the Church." and its chief purpose was for the education of young men for ministerial and missionary labors, but of late years the Bible Chair of the institution has been occupied by one who was active and influential in the scheme to deliver Andover Theological Seminary into the control of Harvard University, and who makes no secret of his liberalistic sentiments.

The institutions that have been mentioned are not sinners above all others in the northern part of our country. The evil leaven of liberalism has penetrated and permeated most, if not all, the leading colleges and institutions of the North. A professor in the University of Chicago has said with perfect candor undisguised, "The American college began as an institution of religion. This status is passing. Some denominational colleges have discontinued their ecclesiastical connections and others will do so in the future on the same principle that the public schools are free from Church control. Our educational institutions have the right to self-determination when they have achieved their majority."

Nothing could be more specious than the last two sentences of this deliverance of this sapient sage of Chicago.

The public schools never belonged to any Church, and were never founded by any Church or Churches. They are purely secular institutions of the civil government, and were not set up to serve religious purposes. Such is not the case of denominational colleges and universities. They all were established to serve definite religious ends, and they can not be diverted from the purpose of their founders without an act of dishonesty upon the part of those who would thus divert them, which approaches the sin of theft in its grossness of immorality.

This is exactly what Prof. J. Henry Thayer meant, when declining to be a party to the perversion of Andover Theological Seminary, he said, it was "because my obligation to be and be known to be an honest man outweighs all other obligations to trustees or seminary."

This theft of Christian institutions has not yet proceeded far in the South, but the process of perversion of educational trusts among us has been subtly begun.

"Eternal vigilance," it is said, "is the price of liberty," and by the same vigilance must the Southern Churches safe-guard there educatonal institutions—and they can not begin too soon to exercise this vigilance.

The Southern people can not afford to send their sons and daughters to the denatured schools of the North, nor can they afford to have their own institutions denatured by the introduction into them of the pernicious leaven of liberalism.

LAST CALL THIS YEAR.

I greatly appreciate all the efforts put forth by our officials and members in holding a Children's Day Service, and in securing an offering, and trust my dual request has been or will be complied with—to send the offering promptly to your Annual Conference Treasurer, and to state to him it is the Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions, so that all allowed the Union Board may be secured thereby.

Concern is felt, however, over the fact that quite a large number of Sunday schools, again this year, have not ordered the free supplies, because it means a loss to those schools in not giving an opportunity to their members of receiving the information provided for them by authority of the General Conference, and in not giving them the means of sharing in the God-assigned work of their denomination which is an obligation upon all our people so to do.

It is evident also that such a course results in a loss to the church in curtailing the resources now greatly needed to maintain the work already developed. And it means that the members of those schools are not being fully taught and trained in the privileges and duties of church membership, and that must result in future loss to the church of no mean proportions.

The loss of the offerings from those schools is not so important as the fact that they have failed to meet their obligations to their denomination, and to a degree have hindered it in doing adequately its God-assigned task.

Great efforts were put forth to enlist the cooperation of all our schools, a sample and order card were mailed to every superintendent whose address we could secure, and repeated appeals by card, letter and through the church papers were made, and with free supplies there seemed little excuse for schools not to hold a service, save in very exceptional cases.

There is still time enough to hold a service if you will mail me at once an order for supplies at Berwyn, Md. We cannot trespass upon the time allowed the Board of Education in behalf of its Rally Day, and this must be our last call for schools to order Children's Day supplies.

The Union Board is not an independent organization, but is a creature of the General Conference, under its authority, and required to do the things necessary to develop missionary interest at home and extend the work abroad.

This cannot be done fully, successfully, without the cooperation of all the churches and their organizations, and that makes it imperative for every Sunday School to hold a Children's Day Service as a part of our denomination's program.

There must be a determined purpose to overcome local difficulties, and to put forth all possible efforts to be a real working part of the denomination, striving to build up God's kingdom at home and abroad.

I earnestly hope that this last call will move a number of superintendents to send me an order.

Remember that Children's Day offerings count on the Budget and the service gives you a fine opportunity to raise one-fourth of yours. Let me hear from you.

CHILD LABOR IN TOBACCO FIELDS.

Will H. Brown.

It is a disgrace to the boasted civilization of the United States that such conditions are tolerated as exist in the employment of children in the tobacco fields of our land. The report of the Children's Bureau of the Department of labor, issued in May of the present year, should arouse all friends of children to the enormity of the evil.

Children between the ages of eight and sixteen are employed, working from seven to ten hours a day. Their work is varied, including "topping," "suckering," and harvesting the crop. Some of the work is so hard and exacting that the children often complain of backache, while sickness and skin irritation due to the strong odors from the plant are of common occurrence.

A cross-section of the situation is shown in the study of 2278 children, employed in Connecticut, Kentucky, South Carolina and Virginia. One-third of the children were girls. Nearly half of those in the Southern states and over one-third of the children thus employed in Connecticut were under twelve years of age.

One of their duties is to remove worms from the leaves. This is so disagreeable that premiums are sometimes offered for thorough work, while at other times the children are met with threats if worms are found on the plants after their work is finished.

The tragedy of thus working children, none too strong at their best, is two-fold: Deprivation of proper schooling, and physical injury. Their bodies are injured, not only by the hard work and long hours, but by the close contact with the poisonous plant. It is high time that such conditions were brought to an end.

Keep the children of our land clean from the blight of nicotine.

A THANKSGIVING DAY STORY.

Many, many years ago—about one hundred years—Sarah Buell lived with her father and mother in a New Hampshire village. The people kept up the customs of their forefathers, and gave praise to the Giver of all good gifts. Her father was one of the Pilgrim soldiers who fought for American independence, and she was a loyal American girl. Grown to womanhood, she married and became Mrs. Sarah Buell Hale. In her own home she taught her little children to be true and loyal, too. Her husband was not able to provide the little family with much more than the actual necessities of life. All the luxuries they had were cheerfully made by this devoted mother, and no one in all the country around could make such delicious plum cakes. She wrote poems that were published in magazines, and with the few dollars gathered in this way she bought books for her children. For the blessings in her home, the beauty of the world, the peace and freedom of the nation, she gave due thanks to the heavenly Father.

Remembering her own happy childhood, she made Thanksgiving Day the big feast day of the year in her household; and more than that, she shared her squash pies, plum puddings and hams with the poorer neighbors.

By and by the father died, leaving Sarah Hale with five little children and no money to support them. Brave little mother that she was, she collected her poems and had them made into a book. This was sold in Boston for $100. It is interesting to know that she was the first woman editor in the world, and to her is given the credit of raising the money for the Bunker Hill Monument. But listen, girls, all the while she was using her time and her talents to strengthen patriotism in all the United States, and urging the annual observance of a national day of prayer and thanksgiving to God for His mercies to all. She was grieved to know that for only a few years after the Pilgrims' first harvest did the people generally keep the day. After 1628 there was no public Thanksgiving Day, outside of the New England States, until 1776 and 1778, when Congress appointed a special day of thanksgiving for victories of the Continental Army. Again in 1789 and 1795 Thanksgiving Day was appointed by Washington as a national holiday. The years went by without a day proclaimed for Thanksgiving until 1812. President Madison ordered a Thanksgiving Day for the cessation of the war. Then for twenty-five years there was no proclamation for this national day.

Sarah Buell Hale could keep still no longer, and for twenty-seven years urged the Presidents and Governors of the United States to establish one day each year as a national Thanksgiving Day. President Lincoln was so impressed with her earnestness and loyalty that he promised, in 1864, and as long as he was President of the United States, he would each year proclaim the last Thursday of November as a national Thanksgiving Day. Since that time each President in turn has called the people to observe the day, although the name of Sarah Buell Hale is unknown to many people.—Ex.

A FEW MORE REGISTRATIONS.

Congratulations to Albemarle.

Albemarle, with ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FIVE registrations, won the honor of sending in the largest number. Her next competitor was Asheboro, with forty. Hence, the former towered "head and shoulders" above all others. But we have a premonition that other charges will give her a lively chase for first place next year.

"1927" Registrations.

Our good friend and loyal Pastor-Endeavorer, Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, of High Point College, has asked the privilege to register for next year's Conference. Also, Miss Annabel Thompson, one of West End's "best," made the same request for herself and sister, Miss Laura Thompson, a popular Junior at High Point College. Of course, we accepted these gladly, and will welcome equally as much any others. Send 'em in! Be among the first hundred to register for 1927.

TAKE A TRIP TO THE HOLY LAND.

Rev. E. Lester Ballard has been designated Special Organizer by the director of the Mediterranean Cruise and Tour of the Holy Land of the past winter, to obtain memberships for a similar but more extensive trip next January. If you are at all interested, write to him and he will send you interesting literature.

Randleman.—On the 17th of July the third quarterly conference was held at Worthville. The usual business was transacted harmoniously Bro. Rom Ward is delegate elected to annual conference next.

About sundown the evening following the Q. C. a good sized pounding was sent over by truck from Mt. Lebanon members. This was an agreeable surprise to us. About nine o'clock a delegation came from Worthville and pounded us again. This also was an agreeable surprise. The two poundings consisted of flour, 120 lbs., meat, sugar, snaps, coffee, cereals, canned goods, lard, syrup, honey, rice and money, soda etc. We were not only agreeably surprised, but also wonderfully pleased. Our gratitude is inexpressible.

At Level Cross yesterday forenoon a children's service was held. Miss Dolly Vickry and Miss Myrtle Causey had trained the children for the occasion. A fine program was given. The afternoon hour was given to Bro. Lowdermilk and Mrs. Dixon, and a group of boys and girls from the Home. An interesting program was rendered, and an offering for them was taken. We hope to have them again on this charge. W. H. Neese.

West Forsyth Circuit.—The third quarterly conference met at Tabernacle. A canvass of the vote for delegate showed that Bro. T. J. Phillips had received a majority and he was declared elected.

The Woman's Missionary Societies held their July meeting at the parsonage. The study this month was home missions.

When the guests had departed the parson's pantry was fuller by numerous packages. A young lady visiting at the parsonage said she had assisted at "poundings" but never before in the receiving line, but declares it was a pleasant experience.

Mr. Thomas Wesley Long, one of the oldest members of Pleasant Hill Church, after many months of intense suffering passed quietly into the beyond July 24th. Funeral Sunday in the presence of a great concourse of sorrowing and sympathetic relatives, neighbors and friends. Funeral conducted by pastor.

C. H. Whitaker.

Mitchells Grove, Guilford Circuit.—Pastor Loy filled his appointment Sunday evening and preached a wonderful sermon. We wish Bro. Loy could be with us every Sunday. He always has an interesting and inspiring message for the people.

Our Sunday school work is fine. We have splendid attendance every Sunday and everybody seems interested. The Sunday school is planning a picnic Thursday of this week.

The Church has recently bought a piano and the choir meets every Saturday evening at eight o'clock for practice.

Sorry to report that Mrs. J. H. Billings is sick. Hope she will soon be able to attend services again. She is such a faithful member. Also sorry Mrs. Henry Beck who has been sick so long, is still unable to be with us. We miss her very much.

Last week the W. H. M. S. met at the home of Mrs. E. G. Wilson, the former Pres., for a social hour. Miss Martha Parsons, the new Pres., delightfully surprised the members by serving delicious ice cream. Quite a number were present to enjoy the meeting.

Nina Jones, Reporter.

Liberty, Siler City Charge.—Our pastor, Mr. Gibbs, was with us last Sunday morning, and preached an inspiring sermon to a large and attentive congregation. Two new members were also received into the church.

On the second Sunday in July we were delighted to have Miss Lucy Boone of Elon to sing for us. We hope she will come again soon.

We had Children's Day service 4th Sunday evening at eight o'clock. The children were at their best. The church was beautifully decorated with roses and ferns. Many songs and recitations were enjoyed.

Our delegates to the Summer conference at High Point have returned home reporting a pleasant time as well as beneficial. They were: Misses Nettie Stuart, Margaret King Shepard and Pauline Elkins.

Our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are very much alive.

Sunday afternoon Rev. D. A. Highfill and W. C. Shepard attended the quarterly conference at Siler City.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Bertine Shepard, Reporter.

Mt. Zion.—The Lord is still blessing us wonderfully. We have just closed a week's revival meeting. Bro. S. W. Taylor of Burlington was Bro. Hunter's and our help. And he is just fine. There were a number of reclamations and 13 accessions to church.

We have only two regrets, relative to this meeting: 1st, there are a number of fine boys and girls and some parents that we love that are still by their actions calling satan their master—and the revival meeting over—that fact causes us sorrow. Then our beloved pastor was almost exhausted when meeting closed; he was not able to fill his regular appointment Sunday because of Lagrippe. However he was present and continued to be present at every service. Those of you who know Bro. Hunter join us in prayer that he may be restored to health.

That song—you remember it—"God will take care of you?"

The weather has been unusually hot and dry but we had large congregations day and night and they gave Bro. Taylor good attention. (Bro. Taylor postively will not let any one sleep while he is preaching.) But at the close of most every service some one in crowd would say, "Oh! it's so awful hot and dry, I want it to rain, but I dread to see a cloud coming such hot weather because I am afraid it will hail or we will have a severe storm"—but listen! the meeting closed Friday night and we had fine bright sunshine for day service and soft and pleasant moonlight for night. Then Saturday morning, when we awakened from slumber, behold it was raining, just a fine steady downpour and kept it up most of the day. Oh! of course "God takes care of us."

Our Sunday school is not doing as affective work as we hope to do in the future. We hope to have a children's day service yet this year.

C. W. Allen.

High Point.—The Young People's Summer Conference was brought to a happy close on yesterday (Monday) after being in session since Monday, July 19. Taken all in all it was the best in the five years of its history from the standpoint of interest, attendance, and quality of the lectures given. There was an attendance of 150 fine young people, most of whom took courses in Bible, C. E. work, missions, or methods of teaching. Pres. P. E. Lindley and Director Lawrence Little were most active all the time in their endeavor to make the Conference a success, and to see that everybody had a pleasant as well as profitable stay. Mr. Dwight L. Fouts was Director of Recreation, and every afternoon led the young people in games, stunts, hiking, and the like. The evening addresses were unusually good this year, being given by Dr. W. J. Thompson of Drew Theological Seminary, Mr. D. W. Sims, Supt. of Sunday school work in our own state, Rev. E. Lester Ballard on his recent trip to the Orient and Holy Land, Rev. J. S. Eddins Pres. Alabama Conference, and Dr. J. H. Straughn of Washington, D. C. In addition to these Dr. S. K. Spahr of Greensboro conducted devotional exercises every morning at 10 o'clock, and Dr. C. E. Forlines of Westminster, Md. who is a great favorite with our people, gave several excellent addresses. Rev. M. M. Harrison, Jr., now, of Chicago, who was the first Pres. of the Conference, gave the Address on Monday morning, and presented the Certificates. It was a matter of deep regret that Rev. N. G. Bethea, of Lexington, could not be present this year, being detained at his home by illness. His cheerful face and broad smile were greatly missed.

On Sunday morning at 11 o'clock the pulpit of the First church was filled by Dr. J. H. Straughn of Washington, Regional Secretary of the General Conference, who delighted the congregation with a splendid sermon, on the text from John 6: 60; "This is a har saying: who can hear it?" Dr. Straughn said that the test of the character of a man or woman is made when the crises of life come, and the way in which they are met proclaims his or her true worth.

If we do not accept Jesus and take Him into our lives, what is left? His address was most timely and practical, and was well received by his hearers. At the conclusion of Dr. Straughn's sermon, the beautiful old Gospel Song, "Tell me the story of Jesus," was sung by a quartet of young men, Messrs. Clarence Schultheiss, Dan W. Smith, Arnold Koonce, and Carey Davis, without accompaniment, and with fine effect.

On Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock a missionary service, led by Mrs. A. G. Dixon, was held in the College auditorium, when she delivered an address on "Home Missions," and Miss Florence Hughes, a missionary of the Presbyterian church, presented a "Message from Korea." Again at the evening service Dr. Straughn preached to the young people in the Auditorium.

The Mission Study Class held its monthly meeting at the church on Monday afternoon. A number of small children of the Cradle Roll Department were present, and gave songs and recitations. The Fourth Chapter of the Study Book, "Adventures in Brotherhood," was given by Mrs. R. T. Pickens. A number of Current Events in connection with our Children's Home, Pine Ridge, Ky., and Bethel Home were given by different members. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown presided at this meeting, and led the devotional exercises, the topic of which was Service as taken from Gal. 5:13-14. Special prayers were made for Miss Dawson and Miss Evelyn Wolfe.

The Stewards will hold their usual monthly meeting on Tuesday evening, and the regular mid-week prayer service will be conducted by the pastor on Wednesday evening in the Assembly room, which is delightfully cool and pleasant during the summer months.

The Pastor's Conference, of which Rev. C W. Bates is President, closed on Friday in order that the pastors might reach home in time to hold services on Sunday in their respective churches. The Conference was well attended this year, and the preachers greatly enjoyed the lectures, discussion of their many problems together, and the fellowship of kindred spirits. This is a pleasant outing for them, and the only vacation for many during the whole year.

Misses Jewel and Frances Montgomery have gone to Rutherfordton to visit relatives and friends.

Miss Lucille Pickens left last Friday for Wadesboro to visit friends for a week or so.

Misses Rosalie and Alma Andrews left Monday for Henderson to spend a month with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Lewis White of Greensboro spent Sunday with Mrs. C. L. Whitaker.

The many friends of little Miss Margaret Neese are much pleased to know that she is rapidly recovering from an operation for removal of tonsils.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin have gone on a trip to Atlantic City, New York, and the Sesqui-Centennial at Philadelphia.

West End, Greensboro.—Manifestations of the spirit of the Young People's Summer Conference, in session at High Point College, were very evident at West End Sunday, and we felt we were richly blessed.

At the Sunday school all the adult Bible classes were grouped together in the main auditorium and Miss Carrie Booker taught in her usual interesting way the wonderful lesson on the "Passover." Miss Booker is one of our most popular teachers at the Young People's Conference.

At 11:00 o'clock our beloved former pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., brought to us a message we will not soon forget. Many friends had gathered to hear Mr. Harrison and his message filled their hearts with a greater love for Christ and a greater desire for service in His Kingdom.

In the evening Rev. F. W. Paschall, pastor of Whitakers Charge, preached a very earnest sermon, which delighted the congregation. Mr. Paschall is one of our outstanding young ministers and we wish for him much success in his chosen work.

Those of our number who attended the Young People's Conference were Misses Annabell and Laura Thompson, Annie Livengood, Margaret Osborne, and Rev. E. L. Ballard, who was director of the music. These young people have returned to us with new plans and ideas, and we are sure of reaping much benefit as a result of the Conference.

Miss Carrie Booker, of Atlanta, is spending a part of her vacation with her sister, Mrs. L. M. Foust. Just previous to coming to Greensboro, Miss Booker attended the Sesqui-Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia.

Miss Margaret Osborne was hostess to the Senior Christian Endeavor Society at the July meeting. Officers were elected for the coming year, and Miss Emily Ward was re-elected president.

Our pastor, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, was elected State Superintendent of Comrades of the Quiet Hour and Life Work Recruits at the recent State Christian Endeavor Convention at High Point.

Mr. C. F. Johnson is convatescing in the Greensboro Clinic following a very serious operation several weeks ago.

We extend to our beloved Dr. Joy Glascock our sincere sympathy over the loss of her twin brother, Mr. Luther Harris, who has been an invalid in her home for the past few years. The funeral was held Monday afternoon, July 19th, by Rev. E. Lester Ballard, assisted by Rev. L. W. Gerringer. The burial took place at Summerfield.

DISILLUSIONED IN GOD'S PRESENCE

By Richard C. Trench.

Are there times when the world threatens to become too much to us, the near hillocks of time to hide from us the more distant mountains of eternity, earth's tinsel to outshine heaven's gold? It is in God, in the light of His presence, as we press into that presence, that all things assume their due proportions, and are seen in their true significance—the tinsel for tinsel, the gold for gold; the hillocks subside and the mountain-tops reappear; the shadows flee away and the eternal substances remain.

—Robert Todd Lincoln, son of President Lincoln, died suddenly last Monday night at his summer home in Vermont. He was the last remaining member of Abraham Lincoln's family. He was relatively a prominent man in polities and in business, but did not attain to the notoriety of his distinguished father.

—Bro. W. J. Williams was taken to a hospital last Monday and operated on. He has been ailing for some time; we hope this operation will bring permanent relief. He is the treasurer and one of the best members of Calvary church.

TWO NAUGHTY PIGGIES.

Daddy bought two little pigs and carried them home and put them in a fine new sty at the end of the garden. But when he and Frank went out later on to give the piggies their dinner they were nowhere to be seen. Both had escaped from the sty and run away!

Little pigs are often very difficult to catch. As daddy stood at the gate, wondering which way to go in search of them, a man passing by told him that he had seen a pig by the Athletic Grounds—perhaps piggie wanted to play football! So daddy caught one little silly, and brought him home none the worse for his adventure.

Then he began searching for the second. Where do you think he found Piggie No 2? Locked up in the railway shed. An engine-driver had seen him trotting on the line, and had had such a chase for him! Perhaps he would never have caught him had not piggie got caught in a hedge half-way through and could get no further.

He had scratched his back, and was squeaking terribly from pain and fright when daddy came to claim him and carry him home. I wonder if they learnt wisdom by their adventures. Anyhow, although they are only pigs, they have never again caused so much trouble through going astray.—Selected.

THE LADY JANE.

Evie and Claire were delighted when their grandmother came home from her trip abroad. They were cousins and just about the same age, so they were quite certain that there would be as many gifts for one as for the other.

Sure enough, there was a wonderful little china tea set from Japan. This was for Claire who loved to play house. It was white with gold and blue stripes on it. Blue was Claire's color, for her eyes were like the sky on a clear, bright day. And the gold on the little dishes was just the tint of her own fleecy, yellow hair

Besides the tea set, there was a box of paints, and a funny little balloon with a net over it which you could blow up whenever you liked. At the bottom of the balloon was a little basket and a rubber doll which was always ready to take a ride. Sally was the rubber doll's name, and Evie and Claire had lots of fun watching the balloon sail around, and in taking turns could pull the balloon back to them when they got ready.

Evie's gifts delighted her especially. First, there was a wonderful doll that came from Switzerland where they make so many clever toys, and a little folding high chair which just fitted the Lady Jane, for that you must know, was the doll's name. She was dressed in dainty white with pink flowers embroidered around the bottom, and on her head she wore a cunning cap just like a real baby's, and tied with pink ribbons. Evie had always wanted a baby doll, and so the Lady Jane gave her great pleasure.

One day Claire proposed that Evie come across the street to her house and bring the new doll and its high chair, and they would have a tea party. Evie's mother was willing, and so when lunch was over, she brushed her small daughter's brown hair until it was smooth and shining, and put on her new dress with the pretty red yoke.

"Be a good girl," she cautioned as she gave Evie the finishing touches. "You know you and Claire sometimes disagree. See how nice you can play today."

Evie Jane in one arm and the high chair folded under the other, she ran across to her cousin's home.

Claire was ready and waiting. A little tea table just the right size was set with a pretty blue and white cloth, and there was a steaming teapot and sugar and cream and some tiny cookies which Nora had given for the party.

The little girls examined the Lady Jane carefully for she was still new.

"I wish she walked," said Evie firmly. "It is lots more fun when a doll walks."

"And she can't shut her eyes," reminded Claire. "I don't see that she is very much better than the kind of dolls we get right here in America."

"Oh, yes she is," differed Evie, emphatically. "She is a lot better. She has traveled on the ocean, and she has hair that you can comb."

"That's all right," retorted Claire, "but she can't do anything! See, her mouth is open a little ways, and she has some cute teeth. Do you suppose she could drink a cup of tea?"

Evie looked thoughtful.

"We might try a teeny weeny bit in a teaspoon," she said, "and see if she swallows it."

Claire poured a cup of pale-looking tea and seasoned it with sugar and cream. Then she took part of a teaspoonful and poured into Lady Jane's mouth. It disappeared immediately.

"O-ho! I knew she could swallow," exulted Evie. "She's a very smart doll."

"She did not swallow at all," scoffed Claire. "It just ran down because she's partly hollow inside."

"Try it again and see if she doesn't swallow," demanded Evie, her black eyes flashing.

Claire turned to the little table.

"O-ho," she cried. "A bad fly has dropped into Lady Jane's cup of tea. I wonder," she giggled, "If the fly thought my teacup was a bathtub and wanted to have a swim. Well, I will just fish that fly out and the tea will be all right."

Evie's round cheeks grew quite pink.

"I should say not," she protested angrily. "My daddy says that flies have billions and trillions of germs on them, and the Lady Jane is not going to be poisoned like that! We'll throw that tea out and wash the cup and spoon and fix a fresh cup."

"No, we'll not," differed Claire. "Nora said we were not to come into the kitchen and bother her this afternoon. Muvver's away and said I must do as Nora said. If you don't want Lady Jane to have that cup of tea, you can drink it yourself. The teapot just holds two cups and that is all we can have."

"It's only cambric tea anyway," exclaimed Evie, jumping up and flourishing her hands in her excitement. "Besides, I'm not going to drink after that fly, nor let my dolly. So there, I will go right home first!"

"All right, go along," snapped Claire crossly.

Evie's heart sank. Hadn't her mother told her to be a good girl, and to play nicely, and here they were quarreling over a fly! She made up her mind that she wouldn't go home, but she would keep on pretending she was going to do it. So she grabbed up the Lady Jane and hugged her tightly in her arms.

Then a funny thing happened. A queer little sing-song voice piped up:

"Quick! Quick! I'm very sick,
I've got a terrible pain.
Haste! Haste! No time to waste!
A gumdrop and a jelly bean
For the Lady Jane."

It was so funny that Evie and Claire laughed merrily. Claire herself ran to the door and threw out the cup of tea with the fly in it.

"We'll put Lady Jane right to bed in Little Sister's white crib," beamed Claire, "and I'll be the nurse and you can be the doctor."

"It was the tea that made her sick," frowned Evie. "Well, while you undress her, I'll go up to the candy store at the corner and get the medicine. I've got a nickel."

When the medicine was all gone, Evie announced that the patient was better and ought to have some air. So the cousins dressed her and put on her bonnet.

Claire wondered if Lady Jane felt well enough to talk some more. Evie thought she did and pressed gently all about the doll's waist to see what would happen. Sure enough—there was a soft, buzzing sound and then the same little voice was heard:

"It's always nicer to agree
Than to quarrel—don't you see.
So own up when you are wrong,
And be happy all day long."

Claire looked a bit guilty. So did Evie.

"I was wrong about that fly," said Claire, soberly.

"And I was wrong," admitted Evie, "to pretend I was going home when I wasn't."

"Let's have our tea party right now," said Claire. "There will be half a cup of tea for each of us and all the cakes. And you can pour the tea if you like."

Evie dimpled.

"Oh, I'd love to," she said.

The little girls looked at Lady Jane and both of them were positive that she smiled.—Selected.

THE FISH THAT WORE NIGHT CLOTHES

Jack had been sick for weeks. He was better now, but the days in bed had seemed very long. And now the spring vacation had come, and the boys were going fishing almost every day. Fishing along the lazy Florida streams is fun, and Jack must miss that. But the day when his class went for a sailing trip on the gulf was the hardest day of all.

Jack tried hard to be brave, but all day, it seemed, he could think of nothing but spreading sails and dancing blue waves.

"Anyway, the boys will come in and tell me all about it before bedtime," he comforted himself.

Eight o'clock came and went, then nine o'clock, and still no boys. Jack's mother settled him for the night.

"The boys have forgotten all about me," he thought as he lay there alone in the dark. And his only reminder of the sea now was several big salty tears that ran down his cheeks.

Just then a crunching sound on the walk, whispers—

"I'm awake yet," called Jack, "ever so wide awake."

Then steps along the hall, the snapping of the light button, and the boys were with him. Of course they hadn't forgotten him. They were late because they'd had to hunt all through Peter Bell's attic for an old aquarium. They'd brought Jack the greatest catch of the day.

"We got him in the net," said Peter proudly.

"What a beauty," cried Jack, "but whatever is it?"

"Guess," said the boys.

Jack studied the fish with its brilliant green coloring and its queer hooked bill.

"It looks," said Jack slowly, "it looks—of course you'll laugh—but it looks like a parrot, as much as a fish could."

"That's just what it is, cried the delighted boys, "a real parrot fish."

"It's a dandy," declared Jack enthusiastically. "I'm going to call it Poll."

"Poll Parrot," laughed the boys.

"Of course," cried Jack. "I'll have just lots of fun watching it; I'm going to keep it always."

After the boys had gone Jack soon fell fast asleep. He did not waken until the gray dawn of early morning, and then his first thought was of his parrot fish.

Peeping from under the covers, he looked at the aquarium, looked carefully, and, gasping with astonishment, looked again. His lovely, green parrot fish was gone—altogether gone!

And stranger yet there was another fish in the aquarium, a dull brownish creature, mottled with a few dark spots.

"Why, whatever!" cried Jack as he looked at the stranger fish that rested on the pebbles in the bottom of the globe.

Perhaps there were two fish in the globe, after all, he thought, and sitting up, he switched on the light to make sure.

Then when he looked again—it does seem hard to believe it—his bright green parrot fish was swimming gracefully about the globe, and the homely, dull colored fish was gone. Yes, there was only one fish there surely, and that was pretty Poll Parrot!

When his mother, who had been awakened by the light, came into the room anxiously, she commenced to shake down the fever thermometer.

"No," laughed Jack, "I'm feeling fine—better than I have for days and days. I'm sure I haven't any fever."

And indeed he hadn't.

"A dream, of course," said the boys when he told them his strange tale in the morning.

"No," protested Jack, "it was too plain for that, and, besides, I pinched myself hard to make sure I was awake."

"Magic, then," suggested Peter; but he laughed as he said it, and so did the other boys, for they all knew better than that.

"Get the nature book for me," said Jack, "the big one."

The other boys held the heavy book while Jack turned the pages.

"P," read Jack, "P-a, P-a-r."

"There it is," said Peter, "Parrot fish."

A moment of silence and then a shout.

"It's true," breathed Jack, "I didn't dream it after all."

"Well, did you ever!" exclaimed Peter, who was reading over Jack's shoulder.

And indeed the book told something that made all the boys gasp.

"The parrot fish isn't the only fish that changes its color when it goes to sleep, either," said Peter; "the book says that lots of common fish do the same thing."

"They must be made that way to protect them from their enemies when they are asleep," the boys decided.

"Well," said Jack with a happy sigh, "I thought last night when I saw Poll Parrot for the first time—I thought you'd brought me something pretty fine, and I said I'd keep him always, but I didn't even begin to guess what I'd got—a fish that wears a night-gown!"

With a shout of laughter, the boys caught the words and chanted them like the refrain of some funny song—

"A fish that wears a nightgown! A fish that wears a nightgown!"

"Yes," said Jack, "I'll keep Poll Parrot always and always."

But after all, Jack changed his mind. The very first day that the little boy was able to go down to the seashore he took the parrot fish along and turned it loose in the water.

"Of course, I'll miss Poll Parrot," said Jack, "but I'm so glad to get out again myself that I can't bear to think of keeping anything shut in. Even a fish ought to be free."

All the boys agreed that Jack was right. And from the way that the handsome fish flashed its sparkling fins and darted out into the deep water, it was very plain that Poll Parrot thought so, too.—Selected.

A MESSENGER MAID.

Kittie Graves ran eagerly down the front steps of her home a little earlier than usual.

The morning was a crisp, cool one in the fall, and Kittie was glad that her mother had thought to get out her warm coat trimmed with fur. It was very comfortable to snuggle down into the soft collar.

Kittie was in a hurry this morning. She could hardly wait to reach school, for carefully placed between the leaves of her school book, was an envelope addressed to Miss Bessie, and Miss Bessie was her teacher.

Kittie felt very important to be trusted with a letter of this kind, and so she hurried along happily, quite sure that whatever was in the letter would please the lovely young lady whom all her pupils loved.

Kittie's father was a member of the Board of Education who hired the teachers for the Martha Washington School, where Kitty attended. "There daughter," he had said that morning, "I am going to entrust you with a letter which I am sure you will deliver just as I tell you before 9 o'clock. It was delayed because of my being away from home.

"There are some other people trying to hire Miss Bessie away from us, and in her letter to the Board, she wrote that if her present contract was renewed by last night, that she would know we wished her to remain with us; otherwise she would feel free to go to this other school where she will get more money. We want to keep her, and we would have told her so had several of us not been out of town. If I send the letter by mail, it will be several hours later reaching her, so you will have to be my little postman."

Kittie went dancing along, holding the book against her very, very tightly, for fear that the letter would fall out. It was going to be splendid to keep Miss Bessie with them, and Kittie loved to be the messenger with the good news.

She hoped that she would not be too late. Everyone would be so sorry if Miss Bessie went to some other school to teach. As Kittie thought of the possibility, she quickened her steps into a run, when suddenly she heard a cry of distress somewhere near.

She paused a moment and listened. Sure enough, it was the voice of a little child, and clearly something was wrong.

Kittie looked about and no one was in sight. Perhaps it was a tiny tot who was in danger somewhere near. She followed the sound of the crying as well as she could, and it led her right along the cement walk which crossed the little park where all the children loved to play in the summer time.

Once or twice Kittie was inclined to turn around and go back, for the cries were leading her directly away in another direction from her school, and possibly the letter her daddy had given her would be too late.

But Kittie could not turn her back on a little child in distress, and a moment later as she passed the twin oak trees in the center of the park, she came upon a forlorn little boy who was sobbing pitifully. He had lost his cap, and his tiny hands were red with the cold.

"I want my mamma," he wailed. "I am losted. Pl-pl-ease take me to my mamma."

Kittie stooped down beside the little fellow and put her arm around him.

"How did you get lost?" she asked gently.

"Why, I just tumed out to play wiv myself, and the pitty leaves would fly in the air when the wind blew. I twied to see how many I tould tatch, and then I didn't know how to go back. I frew the leaves all away. I don't want them. I want my mamma!"

Kittie dried the little chap's tears.

"All right," she smiled. "We will see if we can find her. What is your name, dear?"

"David," replied the little boy gravely.

"And what is your mamma's name?"

"Mamma dear," he beamed. "We'll go find her."

Kittie was puzzled, but she took David by the hand. There were several houses at the other side of the park, and perhaps he lived in one of those. David was so tiny that they had to walk quite slowly, and when they reached the houses Kittie had in mind, David shook his head.

"My mamma doesn't live there," he quavered. " I want my mamma!"

"We will walk along this way," Kittie said as cheerfully as she could, "and perhaps we will find your house."

So the two of them began to walk around the park, for Kittie reasoned that he would not have gone to play in the park if his home had not been somewhere near.

"I don't live here," David burst out at last. "We just tumed to see my gramma and auntie. I'se cold. Please take me home!"

The two of them trudged along and Kittie was almost ready to cry herself, when David gave a glad cry.

"There's my mamma," he burst out, hopping up and down joyfully.

Then without any more ceremony, he broke away and ran up the steps of a pretty white house. Kittie followed. She too had seen a lady in the window, looking up and down the street as though in search of someone. The door opened and a pleasant-faced lady stood there to welcome them.

"Well, well," she exclaimed, " I was getting worried about you, David, and I was just starting out to look for you and to mail a letter for your auntie. Where have you been, and who is your little friend?"

"She bring me home," David said excitedly. "I was losted, and I want to give here one of my candy mice. She's a dood girl."

David's mother smiled.

"Come in, children," she said, "you must be cold. What has become of your cap and mittens, David? And you haven't told me your little friend's name."

"My name is Kittie Graves," the little rescuer said, "and I am on my way to school. I'm in a hurry, please."

"Oh," exclaimed David's mother, "that is too bad! It is after 9 o'clock, and I am afraid bringing David home has made you late. How can I thank you enough! He might have crossed the street somewhere and have been hurt by automobiles. Come in, dear, and I'll telephone your teacher and tell her why you were not on time."

Kittie stepped into the pleasant hall for she didn't wish to seem to be impolite.

"Tum in here," David invited, catching hold of her hand.

And then—Kittie could scarcely believe her eyes, for there sat Miss Bessie herself in a big chair, with something white wrapped about her forehead, and a bottle of smelling salts in her hand.

"Why Kittie," welcomed Miss Bessie, "how glad I am to see you."

Kittie was so excited she could hardly speak, and she lost no time putting the letter into Miss Bessie's hands.

Miss Bessie opened the envelope and read eagerly. Then she did a funny thing—at least, Kittie thought it was strange, for she had never seen a teacher cry before.

"Oh, Kittie," she exclaimed, smiling even although the tears were falling. "I was so disappointed when I did not get a letter last night saying that the Martha Washington School wanted me, that I just made myself sick worrying about it, and I could not go to school this morning. How glad I am you brought me this letter."

"Then you haven't promised you'd go to the other people," Kittie asked anxiously.

"No," she said, "but you were just in time, for David's mother was going out to mail the letter telling them I'd come to their school when the next term began.

And that night when Kittie told her daddy all that had happened that day, and how nearly they came to losing Miss Bessie, her father smiled and patted her on the shoulder and said approvingly,

"Little daughter, you were a good postman —and more than that, a good girl, for you had the courage to do the right thing. Duty never calls but one way, and if we listen, we will know which way that is!"—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

High Point.—The initial service of the Young People's Summer Conference was held in the Auditorium of High Point College Monday evening at 8 o'clock with a large number of adults and young people in attendance. Rev. Lawrence Little, newly elected Secretary of Young People's Work of the denomination, presided in a happy manner. Pres. R. M. Andrews spoke the words of cordial greeting to the visitors, and outlined the seven outstanding achievements of High Point College to the present time as follows: three beautiful buildings, fire proof and substantial have been erected; a good Faculty has been assembled; a fine curriculum has been planned and is being followed, so that the College expects to graduate a class next June; between 5000 and 6000 volumes have been secured for the Library; a student body of 208 young men and young women has been assembled of which 100 are boarding pupils; an annual income of $15,000 has been raised, but an additional $10,000 is needed to make it a class "A" College, and it has secured recognition by Messrs. Allen and Highsmith of the State Board, who have given it a rating equal to the other colleges of the state. We must admitt that this is a wonderful record for a period of only two years. Dr. Andrews' address was followed by a most entertaining illustrated lecture on his trip to Egypt, the Holy Land, and Europe by Rev. E. Lester Ballard of West End church, Greensboro. Rev. Mr. Bethea of Lexington, who accompanied Mr. Ballard on this trip last spring, and who was scheduled to assist with the lecture, was detained at his home by illness. Mr. Ballard wore the costume of an Arab chief, and everybody, the girls included, agreed that he made a fascinating "sheik." At the beginning he sang with pleasing effect, "A son of the desert am I," with piano accompaniment by Miss Ruth Vuncannon. The pictures of the party's itinerary were especially beautiful, and included scenes in Madeira Islands, Rock of Gibraltar, algiers, Alexandria and Cairo in Egypt, the Sphinx and ancient Pyramids, many scenes in the Holy Land, Nazareth, Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Mt. of Olives, a particularly beautiful one of the Garden of Gethsemane, River Jordan, Pilate's Hall, the church in which the tomb of the Saviour was supposed to have been located, many views of the mosques of Constantinople, ancient Athens and Rome including the Colosseum, Pantheon, and noted cathedrals. This lecture was highly interesting, and was greatly enjoyed by the audience.

The Pastors' Conference convened this (Tuesday) morning, and the preachers are comfortably domiciled in McCulloch Hall, the boys' dormitory. They will hold their morning and afternoon sessions at the Children's Home, but the evening sessions will be held jointly with the young people, and the program includes a number of good speakers such as Dr. C. E. Forlines of Westminster, Md., Dr. W. J. Thompson of Drew Theological Seminary, Dr. S. K. Spahr of Greensboro, Mr. D. W. Sims, Supt. N. C. Sunday School Association, Dr. J. H. Straughn of Washington, D. C., Rev. J. S. Eddins, Pres. Alabama Conference, Dr. A. G. Dixon, Rev. N. M. Harrison of Chicago, and others. Rev. P. E. Lindley is President of the Young People's Conference. Rev. Lawrence Little is Director, Dwight L. Fouts is Recreation Director, and Mrs. H. F. Surratt of Charlotte is Chief Chaperone with several assistants, Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Miss Lena Martin, Mrs. P. E. Lindley, and others. Registration on Monday indicated that the attendance will exceed that of any previous year, and it is expected to pass the 250 mark. The Pastors' Conference will close Friday, but the young people will continue their sessions until Monday, July 26.

Mrs. A. M. Rankin left Monday for Chicago with her sister and family, Mr. and Mrs. R. N. Noble and daughter Marguerite who have been here on a visit to Mrs. Rankin and other relatives.

Mrs. Weaver M. Marr, her son Weaver Jr. and daughter Helen, have arrived from their home in Jacksonville, Fla., for a visit to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Geo R. Brown.

Mrs. J. E. Gibson and children and her mother, Mrs. J. E. Perryman, have gone to Norfolk, Va., to visit relatives.

Miss Alice Faulkner of Henderson, a High Point College student, now attending Summer School at N. C. C. W., spent the week-end with Miss Virginia Pickens.

Mr. W. C. Hammond has returned from a trip to Asheville and points in Western N. C. This was his first vacation in seven years.

Master Leonard Hutchison and his little sister, Josephine, of Charlotte are guests of their aunt, Mrs. J. A. Gray.

Rev. and Mrs. T. F. McCulloch of Greensboro, and daughter are guests in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett.

Laurel Hill, Toluca Charge.—Sunday, July 11, we had a very large congregation at Laurel Hill. Our pastor, Rev. J. M. Morgan, delivered us a very impressive sermon.

Our Sunday school continues to hold a good attendance record. Last Sunday, July 11, we had one hundred and ten present. We wish to congratulate our superintendent on the good talks he gives us each Sunday after Sunday school.

Our revival meeting begins at Laurel Hill August 8. We are praying for a mighty outpouring of God's spirit upon the Christian workers around old Laurel Hill during our revival meeting. We hope to see many turn from their way of sin to Jesus.

Rev. E. A. Bingham, of Bess Chapel, will probably assist Rev. J. M. Morgan in the services.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Reporter, L. E. W.

Bethel, Alamance Ct.—Quite a while since Bethel reported. Reporter and family have been sick and not able to attend services, so found it hard to report. Bro. Burgess filled his regular appointment last Sunday. We enjoyed being present and hearing an interesting and instructive sermon on our salvation through God's redeeming love.

There will be an all day service held at Bethel the first Sunday in August. Children's Day program will be rendered in the morning and a Home Coming service in the afternoon with the community choir to conduct the singing. Every one cordially invited to attend. Our special meeting will begin the third Sunday in August. Bro. Edward Suits will be pulpit help. Let every one pray for a glorious out-pouring of God's Holy Spirit and a good meeting. Mr. H. C. Foust of Bethel and Miss Aleane Thompson of Saxapahaw were married July 9th. Rev. S. W. Taylor officiated. Mrs. U. F. Lambe is right sick. Hope she will soon recover.

Mrs. D. A. Bivins died last Sunday and was buried at Bethel the following day. A good woman is gone. The bereaved have our sincere sympathy. Obituary will appear later.

Orange Charge Announcements.

We have arranged to hold revival services as follows:

Uunion Grove, beginning 1st Sunday in August, Rev. W. H. Neese pulpit help.

Hebron, 2nd Sunday in August, Rev. W. F. Kennett pulpit help.

Chestnut Ridge, 4th Sunday in August, Rev. R. A. Hunter to do the preaching.

Each of these brethren will perform his duties well. May we all do our parts and pray that God may give us gracious revivals.

B. M. Williams.

Orange Charge, Efland Church.—The revival meeting began here Sunday night, July 4th and continued until July 13th. Rev. L. W. Gerringer did all the preaching except two sermons by the writer.

Bro. Gerringer gave us a series of splendid sermons which were appreciated by the people of this church and community.

We did not reach the unsaved as we had desired. Only one was converted, and one reclaimed: however we believe much good was accomplished in deepening the spiritual life of the church. B. M. Williams.

Aker.

Little Marion Gaston Aker, only son of Bro. and Sister Marion Aker, of Shelby, past this life Sunday, June the 13th, 1926. Little Marion was born May 25, 1924. He lived here only two years and seventeen days. The Lord saw fit to take him home to live with Him. Little Marion was a bright boy and the pride of the home. His chair is vacant, his voice is still, the sound of his little feet will be heard no more on earth, but some glad day that voice will be heard in praise to our Christ. Marion is gone, the voice is stilled but just waiting on yonder fair shore where Jesus is.

The funeral was conducted from the Methodist Protestant Church by the writer and he was laid to rest in the Shelby cemetery beneath a mound of flowers.

May the Lord of all mercies comfort the bereaved parents and loved ones and friends.

L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Saxapahaw Charge.—It was a great pleasure to the pastor and people to have Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Mrs. Mendenhall, and 15 of the children from the Home visit us the 3rd Sunday, giving programs at Orange Chapel, Salem, and Concord. The people were delighted with the programs, and we hope they will come again some time.

The members of Concord Church have decided to build concrete steps to the church before the revival meeting. Let us hope that this will be just the beginning of improvements at this place.

On Saturday, July 17, about 126 of the friends and relatives of Bro. J. Newlin Thompson gathered at his home to celebrate with him his 69 birthday. People were there from all the nearby towns. It was indeed a happy occasion. Bro. Thompson is one of the pillars of Salem Church. We hope the Lord will add many more years to the life of this good man.

Mr. Adrian Jobe, one of the splendid young men of Salem Church, recently returned home from the Burlington hospital where he was operated on for appendicitis. Mrs. Martha Lewis, widow of the late Bro. Manly Lewis, who spent ten weeks in Long's hospital, is back at home much improved.

The pastor of this charge is grateful to the following: Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Guthrie, 1 doz. eggs and apples; Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Curl, honey; Mrs. J. M. Crutchfield, one hen and 400 potato plants; Mrs. Monroe Smith, one hen; Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Durham, apples; Mr. Geo. Paris, lemons and candy; Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Ferguson, beets, apples, strawberry preserves; Mr. and Mrs. Foust Thompson, apples, potatoes, strawberry preserves; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Coble, apples. H. L. Isley.

Henderson.—At the third quarterly conference, Rev. R. A. Hunter announced that Mr. J. P. Hicks had received the majority of votes as delegate to the annual conference.

Regrets were expressed at the resignation of Miss Sallie Charles Cheatham, who has been our faithful organist for several years. Dr. F. R. Harris was appointed to secure another organist.

We will hold our annual revival the latter part of September. Rev. Mr. Hunter expects to have help, but hasn't decided definitely yet whom he will get.

We are not doing very much. Vacations always break into the work. But we are thankful that we are not losing.

Rev. R. A. Hunter and family have been out of town for the last ten days. Mrs. Hunter and children are visiting relatives in Greensboro, and Rev. R. A. Hunter attending the Summer Conference in High Point. Quite a number of our young people have been attending the Young People's Conference at High Point College. Reporter.

Draper.—Our work here is progressing We have built a new addition to our church this year under the directings of our pastor, Rev. J. S. Riddle, and our church and Sunday school are growing. There have been some 15 or 20 additions to the church in the last few months.

Our pastor brought to us last Sunday a wonderful message at the 11 o'clock hour.

His text was: Behold I set before you an open door. Doors of opportunity for the church, opportunities for the Christians to launch out and do something for God.

It is time for us to awake and do something and to bring the lost to the fold.

W. H. Troxler, Reporter.

Fountain Place Church, Burlington.—Some weeks ago the church was kind enough to vote the pastor a two weeks vacation which he has since spent in Florida visiting his parents and assisting in an evangelistic meeting. The service here was taken care of by Mr. C. L. Jones and Christian Endeavor Society while the pastor was away.

The Sunday school is holding up fine in its attendance during the summer. Not only holding up but is actually growing, new pupils at almost every session. The church services are also well attended and the work on the whole is advancing.

The month of September will be given Sunday nightly to Dramatization Services conducted in turn by the Intermediate C. E. and Y. P. S. of C. E., The Woman's Home Missionary Society and the Choir.

The pastor will be away beginning next Monday assisting Rev. C. L. Spencer in evangelistic services on Halifax Charge.

We are planning to have revival some time in October. Pray for us and drop in to see us when in town.

Denton.—Our revival will begin on next Sunday, August 1. We expect to have our church dedication service at the eleven o'clock hour. Dr. A. G. Dixon will conduct the service, and we are looking forward to that hour as one of the most interesting services we have had in many years. We extend a cordial invitation to everybody, and especially request the presence of our members both far and near.

We are also glad to have Dr. Dixon to preach for us again at the eight o'clock service in the evening. Rev. J. L. Trollinger, pastor of First Church, Thomasville, will be the pulpit help for the remaining services of the week.

MOTHERS AS NATION MAKERS.

When we take off the hat to the American flag, we are taking off the hat to American motherhood. We ascribe high honor to the men who have made and molded our national life, but in almost every instance we may look back of the men and discover a noble mother.

George Washington was only eleven years old when his father died, leaving the widowed mother, Mary Washinbton, with five children to educate and train. In that widowed home the principles of the religion of Christ were taught. Around the mother's knee the children were gathered, and from a little manual, in which she had written her maxims, she taught her children the principles of religion and morality. That manual was preserved as one of George Washington's most valuable treasures.

It is said that a French general, on retiring from the presence of Mary Washington, remarked, "It is not surprising that America should produce great men, since she can boast of such mothers."

By the side of Washington's name stands that of Abraham Lincoln as a great factor in determining our national life.

Down in southern Indiana is a modest granite monument erected to the honor of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, the mother of the great President. All his biographers tell how Lincoln was influenced by the memory of his mother, the patient, care-worn, overworked woman who laid down her life when her son Abraham was but a boy. Before she died, she taught her son his letters and gave him his first lesson in writing. At her death, there in the backwoods country, the boy sought far to find an itinerant preacher who could come and preach a funeral sermon for his mother.

"All that I am and hope to be I owe to my angel mother. Blessings on her memory," are the words of Lincoln, the man. "I can remember her prayers, and they have always followed me. They have clung to me all my life."

Going back to the earlier days of the nation, we find that such men as Andrew Jackson, Thomas Jefferson, and John Quincy Adams had great mothers.

A few days previous to the birth of Andrew Jackson his father died, and the widow and her two little sons rode to the churchyard in the wagon with the coffin. The support of the family fell upon the mother. She went to the home of her brother-in-law and there worked as housekeeper, caring for and educating her sons until they were old enough to care for themselves.

When Andrew Jackson became President, he said of his mother: "One of the last injunctions given me by her was never to institute a suit for assault and battery or for defamation; never to wound the feelings of others nor to suffer my own to be outraged. These were her words of admonition to me. I remember them well, and have never failed to respect them."

Thomas Jefferson was a lad of fourteen when his father died, but up until that time the boy had lived under the influences of his mother more than of his busy father. At the father's death she became the guardian of her children's interests.

John Quincy Adams' home training was largely under the direction of his mother, his father being much away from home while engaged in political activities.

When John Quincy Adams became President, he wrote: "Being taught by my mother to love my country, I did it literally by learning to love the actual hills and rocks and trees and the very birds and animals." He once declared, "All that I am, my mother made me."

When James A. Garfield was on the way to his inauguration as President at Washington, he turned to his mother and said, "It is all because of you, mother."

When the father of James A. Garfield was on his dying bed in a log cabin in the wilderness bordering the Ohio River, he said to his wife: "Eliza, I have brought you four young saplings into these woods. Take care of them."

James was two years old then. The mother was left to fight the battle alone. She worked hard, managed well, and found enough time to give her sons daily lessons in Bible reading. When James was old enough, he drove mules on the towpath on the Ohio Canal, earning money which went to his mother.

When young Garfield was a student, spending a holiday with his classmates on a mountain, as darkness gathered about them at the fall of night, he took a Testament from his pocket and said to his companions: "Boys. I read a chapter every night simultaneously with my mother. If you please, I will read it now."

Mothers made the sacrifices in the Civil War that preserved the Union and abolished slavery.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, a war meeting was held in Poland, Ohio. There was speaking and beating of drums and an appeal for volunteers. The first to step forward was William McKinley.

"No, my son," said his father, seeking to restrain him; "you are too young."

"No, he is not too young. None are too young to carry a light in this dark hour," said the noble mother of the young man who was to play an important part in the direction of his country's affairs.

The most beautiful pictures ever seen at the inauguration of a President was when William McKinley, having taken the oath of office as President of the United States, stepped over to where his mother sat and kissed her.—Exchange.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Mercifulness.

Text: "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." Matt. 5:7.

Mercifulness is more than a merciful disposition or inclination. It is more than good will between man and man. It is even more than condescension to another's social or industrial level. Mercifulness is kindness extended to the unfortunate, the hostile, and the undeserving. It is merciful to care for the widow and the orphan. It is merciful to love and help an enemy. And it is merciful to be kind to those who deserve the penalties of swift justice.

The text presents three lines of thought, the extent, the enjoyment, and the reward of being merciful. Let us consider first.

The Extent of Mercifulness.

Forgiveness is a wide and important field in which this delightful trait can find expression. This form of charity covers a multitude of sins. To be forgiving is to be godlike. Forgivingness is that disposition of soul that passes all wrongdoing. It is the forgiving spirit. Actual forgiveness is extended to those who repent. Jesus laid down the condition of actual forgiveness. "If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." And there must be no end to the exercise of forgiveness. Peter on one occasion put to Jesus this question, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him, till seven times?" And Jesus said unto him, "I say not unto thee, until seven times; but until seventy times seven."

Mercifulness returns good for evil and goes out of the way to do an enemy a kindness. The apostle gives this timely exhortation, "Therefore if thine hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Kindness is the most effective weapon with which to kill an enemy.

Mercifulness stoops to the lowest depths of infamy and picks up the outcasts. The merciful man lifts up the down-and-outs and gives them another start in life. The sinner, lost, dead in trespasses and sins, and with God and hope in the world finds in the merciful man a friend in need and a friend indeed. The merciful man is a soul-winner and leads the lost to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Let us next consider

The Enjoyment of Mercifulness.

"Blessed are the merciful." Happy indeed are they who make others happy by deeds of kindness. Unrequited and unrequitable love is a deep, precious fountain from which flows large streams of contentment and enjoyment. Every unselfish deed confers two blessings. "It blesses him that gives and him that takes." But the blessing that comes to the giver is the greater of the two. It is greater because it is entirely spiritual, while that which the receiver gets may be only material, physical, or mental.

Jesus taught how to reap happiness of this sort. In Luke 14:12-14 we have this recipe of real enjoyment here and larger bliss hereafter: "Then said he to him that bade him, when thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbor; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind. And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

This is the happiness of fellowship with Him who has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." It is the consequence of following in the footsteps of the Son of man, Who went about doing good, and who came to seek and save that which was lost."

Finally let us consider

The Reward of Mercifulness.

"They shall obtain mercy." This is in keeping with one of the most evident and commendable laws that govern the universe: "Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap."

In nature, in intellectual life, and particularly in the moral and spiritual realms does this law operate as surely as the laws of gravitation and growth. Those who dispense mercy will reap mercy in much larger measure. For the harvest is usually much more than the sowing.

Those who forgive will also be forgiven. Hear the dictum of the Son of God: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you."

Many material blessings will come to the merciful. Hear again the words of Jesus: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."

And then there will be the rewards of golden sheaves and the starry crown. The Psalmist tells us of the harvest of merciful sowing in the world to come: "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

O God, grant to each of us a rich harvest in that day!

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—AUGUST 8.

The Giving of the Manna.

Lesson Text: Ex. 16:11-15, 35.

Golden Text: John 6:35.

The Central Truth: "For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." John 6:33.

Scriptural Points.

1. Moses wrote a song of thanksgiving in commemoration of the deliverance at the Red Sea. In this song he ascribed all the glory to the God of Heaven. The people sang this song to the music of timbrels, led by Miriam, the sister of Moses, and the first prophetess of Israel.

2. A three days' journey without water brought the people to Marah, where there was water but it was bitter. Their lack of faith in God led the people to murmur against Moses. But Moses a man of faith, took the matter to God in earnest prayer. And the Lord shewed him a tree that would sweeten the water. Accordingly he cast this tree into the water and it became sweet and wholesome.

3. They next came to Elim, a most delightful camping site,—twelve wells of delicious water and seventy Palm trees. It was a beautiful oasis in the desert.

4. When the Israelites reached the wilderness of Sin the food supply that they had brought with them gave out. Again they displayed a sore lack of faith and raised a complaint against Moses and Aaron. They could not see the providing hand of a miracle-working God. They only saw certain death by starvation awaiting them. They even went so far in their murmurings as to wish that they had died by the hand of the Lord in Egypt when He slew the first born.

5. In answer to Moses' prayer again, the Lord said, "I will rain bread from heaven for you." He also promised quails in abundance. In the late afternoons clouds of quails fell all about the camp, and covered all the region round about. In the morning abundant showers of manna lay on the ground. The Psalmist called manna angels' food, that which the inhabitants of heaven subsisted upon. It was probably a berry that grew upon trees in the Paradise of God.

6. An omer, about three quarts, was allotted to each grown person for each day; a smaller amount, of course, was allowed for the children. Each family gathered their daily supply every morning.

7. The manna melted when the torrid sun beat down upon it. This goes to show that the climate of heaven is mild and salubrious.

8. The manna would not keep overnight. It "bred worms and stank." The daily supply must all be used up during that day.

9. A double supply lay on the ground every Friday morning, to last over the sabbath. No work, not even the gathering of daily food, was allowed on God's holy day. This provision goes to show that the seventh day sabbath was observed by God's people before the commandment was given. It had no doubt been observed by God's faithful ones ever since the creation.

10. The manna fell continuously for forty years. It ceased when the Israelites reached the land of Canaan. In Josh. 5:12 we have this record: "And the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the corn of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year."

Practical Points.

1. Expressed gratitude is a delightful privilege, a paramount duty, and a powerful condition of receiving large blessings from God. "Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God even our own God, shall bless us." Ps. 67:5, 6.

2. Complaining is a prevalent sin of mankind. It is a most grievous sin in the sight of God. It is a common manifestation of the sin of unbelief. It is really a gross insult to the loving kindness of God. "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment, (or correction) of his sins." Sam. 3:39.

3. Contentment and thanksgiving produce a large measure of happiness. We need to pray much "that there be no complaining in our streets. Happy is that people, that is in such a case; yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Ps. 144: 14, 15.

4. "The Lord will provide." He never forgets the cry of the humble. "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." Isa. 49:15.

5. Jesus, by means of His word, His atonement, His intercession, His sacrament, and His presence, is the Manna for the soul. He says to us: "I am the bread of life which came down from heaven: if any man eat this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." John 6:51.

LONG AGO.
By Arthur Eugene Smith.

Yes, they crucified my Saviour
Long ago!
Oh, the thirst and agony
Nailed upon the cruel tree,
And the woe!—
"Father, Oh, forgive!" He cried;
Yielded up His spirit—died,
Long ago!
Yes, they crucified my Saviour!
Cruel tree!
But He broke death's Iron band,
And He now at God's right hand
Pleads for me!
I a prodigal had been,
But He brought me back again
And fed me.
Yes, they crucified my Saviour,
But he lives
With God's power at His command,
Still He loves us sinners and Peace He gives!
Oh, to love Him more and more
Knowing, as we near death's shore,
He forgives!
Yes, they crucified my Saviour
Long ago!
And the winds that kissed His face,
Pitying man's dire disgrace,
Murmured low.
"Father, Oh, forgive!" He cried;
Yielded up His Spirit—died;
Long ago!

BURNING ROOFS COST SOUTH $6,297,930 A YEAR.

There are three elements to consider in figuring the cost of a roof—the first cost, maintenance cost and the cost of burning it up. Burning its roofs cost the South more than SIX MILLION DOLLARS a year! In six southern states, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina, shingle roofs were the leading causes of fires caused by sparks on roofs are not a serious tax on the community. How serious this economic handicap really is can be seen from the following figures, compiled by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, giving the losses by states in 1924 due to sparks on roofs. fires in 1924, the latest year for which figures are available. In all states it was one of the principal causes.

There is not a state in the South in which Alabama, $836,167; Arizona, $28,850; Arkansas, $148,187; Florida, $279,459; Georgia, $636,341; Kentucky, $361,052; Louisina, $422,643; Mississippi, $727,983; Missouri, $895,430; New Mexico, $4,547; N. Carolina, $338,551; S. Carolina, $379,538; Tennessee, $741,421. Texas, $187,699; Virginia, $310,662.

Total, $6,297,930.

These figures take no account of indirect losses from interruption of business, higher insurance rates and other losses that can not be reduced to a dollar and cents basis. Neither do they include the economic losses that result from destruction of life, crippling of men and women and the orphaning of children.

THE LAW.

By Dr. Joseph Parker.

The law is divinely given. Any laws we may make, if they are to be righteous and beneficent, must be of the quality of law which has been revealed from Heaven. Whatever is not of that quality must go down. False worship leads to death; false legislation leads to social dissolution. Taken from end to end, the Bible is charged with righteousness. The Word of God is sharp—sharper than any two-edged sword—piercing to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow. It is a righteous Word. It shakes off the wicked man; it will have no communion with darkness; it strikes the liar on the mouth; it avoids the unholy follower. This is—let me repeat it—the argument of Moses, and it is the eternal argument of Christianity.

THE OIL OF JOY FOR MOURNING.

God does not permit us to be so overborne by our griefs that we cannot find him to share our burdens. In our deepest distress the Comforter is near. When the widow of Nain followed her only son to the tomb, Jesus was not in her horizon, but how soon He was there to pour into her soul the oil of joy for mourning. At the tomb of Lazarus, Mary wept for her lost brother, but the absent Jesus was presently weeping by her side and the next moment giving her the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

Some years ago we were steaming at dusk through the Irish Sea to Liverpool. Heavy clouds hung low over both Welch and Irish shores. Suddenly a shaft of light pierced the mass of gray that almost shrouded the Irish shore and lighted up both sea and ship. So the sun of gladness breaks through our clouds, when in our sadness we catch a vision of the Saviour's face.

"There are days for the field, and days for the landscape," says Hamilton Mabie, but he might have added, There are days, too, thank God, for the farther look that penetrates the normally Unseen.

It is hard to keep our ideals in the midst of the stir of daily occupation. We have to draw the curtains now and then to orient ourselves. So much of business is sordid, so much of life is tarnished by its unholy contacts, so much of the world's awry, that it is good for us when God shuts the door upon it all and gives us a glimpse into another sphere.

Then, restless heart, be still; for peace is God's own smile,
His love can every wrong and sorrow reconcile.
Just love and love and love, and calmly wait awhile.

YEARNINGS THAT STARVE THE SOUL.

"He gave them their request, but sent leanness" (the "wasting-sickness") into their soul. This remarkable statement in the Word of God is made with reference to the Children of Israel, who, after miraculous deliverance from bondage, were being guided toward the Promised Land, but nevertheless lusted after the flesh pots of Egypt. Out there in the desert they tempted God, and cried, "Who shall give us flesh to eat?" Grieved and disappointed, the Lord gave them their desire, and "while the flesh was yet between their teeth He smote the people with a very great plague, and He called the name of that place Kabroth-Hattaava, because there they buried the people that lusted."

Your heart's desire is the test of character. What a man loves shows what he is and what it is that is moulding him. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Christ teaches that the sinful desire is sin. Therefore should we pray, "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults." What are the deepest longings of your life? If God spake to you as He did to Solomon, "Ask what I shall give you," what is it you would really desire? Not what you think you want, not what you try to persuade yourself to believe that you want, but that which, down deep in your heart, you really do want—that is your prayer!—Paul S. Leinbach.

EACH IN HIS PLACE.

A little gold watch was one day crossing Westminster Bridge, London, at the time when Big Ben tolled out the hour of noon from the clock tower on the Parliament Buildings.

The little watch looked up at the big clock and said:

"I do not like you! Your face is too broad, your hands are too big, your voice is too coarse. I do not like you!"

And the big clock said to the gold watch: "Come up here, little sister! Come up here!"

So the little watch toiled painfully up the stone steps, and at last stood by the big clock. Looking out over the surging millions of London, the big clock said to the watch:

"Little sister, there is a man down there on Westminster Bridge who wishes to know the hour. Will you tell him, please?"

The little watch said: "Oh, I could never make him hear! My voice is so small it never could begin to carry in such a whirlwind of noise as this."

The big clock said: "Oh, yes, little sister, I had forgotten! Yet the man wishes to know the time, he requires to know, and you cannot tell him, but I can and will. So let us henceforth not criticise one another! You will not find fault with me, nor I find fault with you, but each of us in our own place, you for your mistress, and I for the great city, will teach men everywhere to redeem the time."—Dr Joseph Parker.

GREENSBORO CAMPAIGN FOR PALESTINE FUND QUOTA ASSIGNED $2000.

"In accordance with instructions received from the Baltimore Headquarters of the Seaboard Region United Palestine Appeal, Greensboro is asked to prepare for an appeal to be launched in the Synagogue on the Jewish New Year, for the purpose of raising funds for Palestine. This is part of a campaign which is now being waged throughout the country for a goal of $7,500,000. The quota adopted for this community is $2000. and it is hoped by all interested in the movement that this amount will be easily subscribed.

Reports received at Regional headquarters from other parts of the State, are very encouraging and indicate the general interest manifested in the forthcoming Palestine Appeal by most of the communities that have already responded, assuring the National officers of the United Palestine Appeal of their cooperation.

A STRANGE BLINDNESS.

Martin Luther said that the doctrine, "The just shall live by faith," was to him "the gate to paradise." Such it has been to discerning, seeking souls in all the ages. The mightiest movements of Christianity have found their origin and inspiration in this great truth. Luther learned it from the writings of Paul, and Wesley from the writings of Luther. The wonder is that the Church should ever have become so obscured that it would have to be re-discovered. But men seem to be more blind to the simple, spiritual truths of Christianity than to anything else. It is not unusual for them to stand in poverty-stricken unbelief the rich glories of the Christian faith, without seeing or appropriating them. —Selected.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

By R. M. Andrews.

There are nearly thirty thousand members of the Methodist Protestant Church in the North Carolina Conference, but potentially there are only a few thousand of us. Militarily we could form many a battallion, but in actual coordination we lack the efficiency of Gideon's three hundred. Historically we extend over a period of nearly one hundred years, but in our growth we are still in the period of adolescence. Socially we may claim to have some members in every stratum of society. As to our wealth, we certainly have enough to finance every project the church has espoused. Educationally our members may take rank without disparagement among the leading citizens of our Commonwealth.

And yet with all of our numbers, with our long history, with our wealth, with our social status, with our culture—with all these things of which we may be justly proud, we are floundering in the slough of despond. In fact, the morale of our church membership is quite low because so many of our members have taken counsel with their fears instead of with their faith. They are like some of the ancient Hebrews, who saw themselves as small as grasshoppers while their enemies were giants of tremendous size. These are languishing in the pit of their own weakness while the clarion notes of duty sound an advance along every line.

What Shall We Do?

This process of underrating our church and our ability to serve has actually undermined the hopes of many that our church may ever function in a normal manner, or may ever be able to do the work Almighty God has laid upon the hearts of her leaders to do. So long as these sustain a normal relationship to the denomination, but in their souls have ceased to fellowship in their plans and labor with it, so long is the church made weaker rather than stronger by this alliance. They are more like the heir who prays for the death of the testator than of the son who labors to prolong his life. They do not quit the church, and yet they are not of the church.

What Shall We Do?

In our membership we have harbored and encouraged those who have misrepresented the status of our college. They have encouraged our own young people to go elsewhere, instilling doubt in their minds as to the standard of the institution. And yet we have been authorized by the State Board of Education to say that any student who completes a course or courses here to the satisfaction of High Point College may receive the same credit on his or her certificate to teach public school as is allowed for the same work done in other colleges. In other words, no student who completes his work at High Point College needs to fear that it will not be recognized by the State Board of Education.

What Shall We Do?

Is it not possible that a program may be proposed, which if followed, would bring us to a worthy goal? We certainly would be poor soldiers to surrender to an enemy, whose strength we had not tried out in battle, and poorer workmen if we should faint at the sight of a task we had never tried to perform. Shall we take heart at the prospect of doing our work which God has laid upon our hearts and gird ourselves for the toils? Or shall we lie down and perish as a church without ever making a sufficient trial of our strength? Shall we follow our leaders, or will we organize a mutiny and leave camp? Will our battle cry be faith, or shall our despairing gasp be failure?

What Shall We Do?

Most assuredly the time has come for definite action; something must be done. A hundred years is a long time for a denomination to live and to be no stronger and no more efficient than ours. And yet our size and our efficiency should not discourage us. It does not take a large body of people to do a great thing, neither does it require superhuman strength to accomplish a good deed. But it does require wisdom on the part of those who plan, and loyal support on the part of those who work to accomplish great things. We believe that our golden age is yet to dawn, that our best work is yet to be done, and we are confident that if loyal support is given to those who lead in these larger activities of our church that there will be no occasion for regret, and certainly none for shame, as the deeds we may do shall be reviewed.

As to High Point College, the two years work which have been done may be considered as prophetic of great work that can be done. For laboring under these disadvantages the college encountered in its beginning has given courage to those who have done the work to believe that when the college can meet on equal footing institutions of like character—that is when endowment shall be found and sufficient buildings erected—that High Point College may then find her place in the hearts, not only of our own people, but in the hearts of other inhabitants of our commonwealth.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH HIGHER CRITICS?

Because the Bible Was Written in Pieces Should It Be Cut to Pieces?

By William E. Barton.

Several things are the matter with the higher criticism. The first is that most of the people who talk about it donot know what it is they are discussing. One can read or hear vehement and even violent discussions and denunciations by men who could not define either higher or lower criticism if the salvation of their immortal souls depended upon it. If people would take pains to learn what these are, there still would be room for profitable discussion, but heated argument and abuse would be at an end. The beginning, and almost the end, of our trouble is that we have so much heat in which there is no light. What is higher criticism and what is lower criticism, and what is the use, and what are the dangers of both?

Criticism Is Not Mere Fault-Finding.

Criticism is the science of correct judgment. It was an important event in my young manhood, just before I went to college, when there fell into my hands an old volume entitled, Kames' Elements of Criticism. Until that time, I think I had assumed that criticism meant small fault-finding. I found in that fine old book, which I still could recommend to almost anyone, that the science of criticism covers that whole field wherein the basis of knowledge is the faculty of sound judgment. There is no field for criticism in the proposition that two and two are four. But if we are to express the opinion that two particularly large sheep, which we see in one field, are about equal in weight and value to three somewhat smaller ones in another field, a wholly new faculty is called into exercise. Then we must exercise judgment criticism. It may call for more than a mere guessing at the weight and bulk of the sheep. It may require some examination of the length and quality of the wool, condition of health, and many other matters. A large part of our education ought to be given over to the science of correct judgment, a much larger part than now is given to that science.

Criticism does not of necessity mean fault-finding. Criticism may be favorable or unfavorable, may involve praise or blame. Criticism is merely the exercising of educated judgment. An amateur photographer may point his camera haphazard in any direction, east, west, north, south, or even up and down, and push the button, The skilled photographer must be a critic and judge the artistic values of objects, groupings and distances, lights and shadows.

Higher and Lower Criticisms

As applied to the study of the Bible, criticism is of two kinds: one called lower and the other higher. Considering that these terms have come into popular use, they are rather unfortunate. They are not intended to mean that one kind of criticism is inferior to the other in value. They are assumed to be equally important, but one is built upon the other. The foundation criticism is called lower because it comes first.

There were once as fierce and bitter fights about the lower criticism as there are now about the higher. These lie pretty well in the past. Practically no one now objects to the lower criticism. The lower crities have won the fight. Some time the same will be true of the higher critics. We shall wonder why there ever was so much fuss about an eminently useful and necessary kind of study.

The books of the Old Testament were mainly written in Hebrew, but it was an earlier form of Hebrew than is now used. All the copies that we have of the Old Testament are very late ones, and the text has been much edited. The older a book is and the oftener it is copied, the more variations there are in the text and the more difficult it is to tell just how the original text read. This is true of Homer's Iliad, and of Plato's Dialogs, and of Julius Caesar's Gallic War, and of Cicero's Oratorios, just as it is true of the Old Testament, and for that matter, though in lesser degree, the New Testament. But the original writings of the Old Testament were older than any of these, and our present texts are later than texts that we have of the New. Before we can have a correct translation of an ancient book into our own language or any other, we must decide what text we are to use

e lower criticism of the Bible began un-he painstaking study of a man now call-saint. His name was Jerome. He knew the Bible texts of his day were very
y. Greek had been the language of the church, but nearly all scholars in Je-
's day were using Latin. Few of them rstood Greek, and almost none of them long years at Bethlehem learning He-and improving his Greek and trying to ts. Two faithful women, a widow and ary, our own English Bible is a sorroweminder of the sufferings and martyrdom

e men who made it. The story of Wyand of Tyndale is not one in which sh-speaking Christians have any right

n which we depend for all our modern lations, has been wrought out in spite of ignorant abuse of our scholars by men hought they were doing God's service. It onestly believed to be a shocking thing erome to translate the scriptures from Hebrew and Greek into the Latin. The higher criticism is of quite another

It has nothing to do with all that com-

The Bible Was Written in Pieces.

v for some, perhaps, it does not make nuch difference when parts of the Bible written, or by whom. If the 23d Psalm ever been published until this morning, ppeared for the first time in the daily
s, it would still be a beautiful and ing composition. If the 13th chapter of I thians could be proved to have been n, not by St. Paul in the First Chrisentury, but by Thomas Carlyle or Ralph Waldo Emerson in the nineteenth, that would not wholly take away the glory or the beauty of its sentences. Nevertheless, it is worth while to know, if we can know, who did write them. There is only one way to find out and that is by the higher criticism.

Higher criticism is a highly specialized science. In a certain sense, anyone who has an opinion concerning the authorship or the date of any book or part of a book in the Bible is a higher critic. If you have read the first Gospel through, and having read it believe it was written by Matthew, and have formed that judgment in any other way than by reading the title of the book, you are a higher critic, and the same if you believe that someone else wrote it. If you read the second Gospel and believe as I do that the Mark who wrote it was the same John Mark who traveled with Paul and Barnabas, you are a higher critic.

You may, if you like, ask what is the use of knowing or inquiring, and the answer is that if you think there is no use you are under no obligation to inquire, but you have no right to forbid other people inquiring and learning the answer if they can.

But someone will say, 'Higher critics cut the Bible to pieces.'

The Bible was written in pieces and distinctly says so. The very first verse of the epistle to the Hebrews says, 'God spoke in old time to the prophets in divers fragments and in divers manners.' We have a perfect right to find out, if we can, in what fragments the prophets spoke and who put the fragments together. We have not only that right. It is our duty to learn if we can.

Fools Not All On One Side.

This process involves the necessity for historical and literary criticism, and of patience and skill. The men who do it do not do it for fame, for there is very little honor and far more abuse in the process. For the most part, they prefer not to have very much said about their work, because the large number of people who know about it know just enough to misunderstand and abuse them. They work diligently, painstakingly and laboriously. Nor do they work for money. Their salaries are small.

Are their results destructive? Do they take pride in finding how much they can throw away? Is there any danger that they will take away from us our Bible?

If the Bible were so feeble and faulty a thing that they could take it away, we should not lose very much by their taking it. They could not take it from us if they wanted to, and they do not want to.

'But they say Moses did not write all the Pentateuch and that the book of Isaiah was written by two men and maybe more.'

If they say that Moses did not write the whole of the Pentateuch, there is at least a chance that they may be more nearly correct about it, after their long study, than the people are who have never studied the question at all. As for the book of Isaiah, anyone who reads it can see that its prophetic parts are in two sections with an historical section in the middle. In the first part, the name of Isaiah is repeatedly mentioned, but his name does not occur in the second part. If these critics believe that Isaiah wrote the part which he says he wrote and did not write the part which he does not say he wrote, it is at least possible that they may be right. It would be better to read the book itself and see what is in it.

It is certainly true that a good many men who have learned something about the higher criticism have talked very wisely and foolishly and sometimes destructively about it. The fools are not all on one side by any means. On both sides, the less people know about it, the more likely they are to talk about it and the more angry they are likely to get.

Not Religion But History.

One certain thing we might well afford to believe is that no discovery of any truth about who wrote the Bible or any part of it can ever take the Bible away from us, or make it any less sacred than it is. And another is that where there is so much to learn, and we know so little, we can all afford to be patient with each other and help each other when that is possible, and wait for larger knowledge.

And yet there is a danger in the higher criticism, and it is one for which those who believe in it are to blame. In many cases they have given us the results of their study in negative instead of constructive form. They have seemed proud of their learning and ruthless in the exercise of it. They have seemed to take delight in shocking sensitive people and in making light of things regarded as sacred. Theirs at times has been the sophomoric type of scholarship that belongs to the medical student when he cannot look upon another human being without thinking how nicely he would cut up.

But the remedy for this is not to close down the dissecting rooms or forbid the Biblical scholars to do their work, but insistence that they should go on through the course to the constructive part. For none of the questions of the higher criticism are religious questions. They are literary and historical questions. For instance, let me use an illustration that belongs to a part of the Bible where no one can think a difference of opinion vital.

Last Chapter of Zechariah's

The Jews were accustomed to write the Old Testament on sheets of skins, arranged as roll's. They wrote habitually the whole of the Pentateuch on one roll, a large one, and the little book of Esther on another, a very small one. To each of the major prophets they usually gave a roll, but they put all the minor prophets on one scroll together. They liked the number twelve, and they grouped those short books of sermons so that there should be twelve. They were thinking less about individual authors than of making a book of a sacred number. They had a little book of prophecies by a very useful though not brilliant prophet named Zechariah, and they had a little book with nobody's name attached to it which lengthened it out nicely, and they added these chapters. Now, just as soon as you read the book that bears the title Zechariah, you see that the first part of it was evidently his, and that the last chapters say nothing about him. Is there any authority that compels you to believe that those anonymous chapters also are by Zechariah? If so, why do they not say so? They might be by him, but whether they are or not is clearly a matter of judgment. Personally, I am confident that those chapters are a separate little book, and a very interesting one. They could add nothing to the fame of Zechariah, and it would puzzle us if we believed that the conditions described existed in Zechariah's day. We know there was a time when just such conditions did exist, and we are glad that God did not leave those times without witness. I certainly believe that the last chapters in that book were written by another man whose name we do not know. If we needed to know it, we should have it.

But this belief of mine is not an article of faith. It is a judgment based on thoughtful and reverent study. But it is not a religious matter. Another man equally religious might have an exactly opposite opinion.—Dearborn Independent.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Sunday, August 1st, was spent at Denton with Bros. Carroll and Madison and their people.

The pastors and the people through special effort have raised the necessary money to pay off all indebtedness. They have also installed a new lighting system. I had the pleasure of preaching to a large congregation and of dedicating the church at the morning hour.

At the evening hour the congregation was still larger, the auditorium being well filled, and I tried to preach a sermon adapted to the opening of revival services. Rev. J. L. Trollinger is to assist in the meeting through this week, and we are trusting they will have a splendid meeting.

The Sunday school is running well, and there is a fine "Departmental" Christian Endeavor Society held at 7:00 o'clock each Sunday evening. The devotional services are held for the entire group, and then they break up into three societies, for about thirty minutes, with a leader for each section.

It works well. This was a happy Sunday for all of us who were permitted to take part in these services at Denton.

Reports.

We have now passed into August, and we are therefore working in the last quarter of the conference year. Up to date twenty-one pastors have sent in reports for third quarter. Because of the nature of this report it is necessary that all pastors get them into my hands as early in August as possible. Please let me have your report at your earliest convenience. I thank you.

A Good Word For Dr. Forlines.

In last week's Methodist Protestant, Dr. W. J. Thompson, who delighted and thrilled us at our recent Summer Conference, has the following to say about our own Dr. C. E. Forlines:—"For the second time I have been a colleague of Professor C. E. Forlines at the Summer Pastors' Conference of the North Carolina Annual Conference.

"His versatility, the research that precedes his conclusions concerning the great themes of Christian Theology, his apt, clear, comprehensive and forceful presentation of theological findings, the Christlike spirit which permeate his utterances—all fire me with an admiration that, by your leave seeks expression in the Columns of the Methodist Protestant.

"Among the theological professors in America his rightful place is in the front row. Fortunate is the Methodist Protestant church and Westminster Theological Seminary in having this guide and counsellor.

"Wm. J. Thompson."

Dr. Forlines belongs to the entire Methodist Protestant Church, but he is the product of the North Carolina Conference, and we are delighted that so great a theologian as Dr. Thompson should speak so favorably of this splendid son of North Carolina.

The Budget.

The rains have come and have so freshened and revived things that all our people should now be heartened to do greater things financially.

Word comes from our Treasurer, Mr. V. W. Idol, this morning that there are not funds in hand to meet current expenses, so please collect and forward to Mr. Idol funds for the A. C. B. There are less than three months now in which to pay up.

Mr. H. C. Staley's report on G. C. B. also came this morning, and shows that during the quarter ending June 30, 1926, the North Carolina Conference sent in from all sources $3901.23 on G. C. B. This makes a total of $6571.25 sent to Mr. Staley during this conference year.

If we round up a good report financially for the entire conference year much remains to be done by Nov. 1st.

Pastors' Salaries.

Counting as one salary the sum paid our pastors who are serving two charges, the average salary promised our pastors for this year is just a bit over $1300.

It takes the larger salaries to bring the average up to that. So many of our men are not promised nearly that much. Last year's records show that there were eighteen pastors who were not paid in full the salary promised. And in nearly every instance this occurred where the promised salary was small. Let Stewards take notice and begin now to endeavor to raise pastors' salaries in full.

Then in many 4th quarterly conferences salaries should be increased for next year.

Think of this, pray about it and plan for it.

Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Cowan.

On last Friday I visited these good people. Bro. Cowan was in bed in a very nervous condition. Mrs. Cowan was by no means well, but working faithfully with her needle to help earn a living. The boys are doing their best to earn money also. Just a few pastors have responded to my last appeal for help for these dear people. Please let me hear from thers. Thank you.

THE SOUTH'S CROWN OF GLOR

By Mrs. Evelyn Baken Dodd.

Often, especially of late, there has fronted us the statement that the Sou the stronghold of unalloyed "Christ gion," and it is called our "Verdun," bracing the deathless legend: "You shal pass." Such a tribute is the South's Cro Glory!

We pause here to pray: "God grant it never be taken away!" And it never w if the Southern people are faithful to priceless possession—but it must be gua and protected.

The South must be ever alert and rea shield and keep her crown, for it is a dem of glory to be called the nation's ci of unadulterated Christianity. What gr shall could a people have than to be designated?

Then, men of the South, stand, each in his place, to defend at any cost this ess crown. Also, we women of the South whose care the youth of our land is prim y given, should with undying courage watchfulness stand by our menaced fir and our precious children to guard against the foes by which they are surr d. The youth of our country has never thrust forward so recklessly into the light a now—so young and unprepa their very adolescence and inexperienc fitting them to cope with obstacles stagger those who should lead and dire piteful and cruel thus to sacrifice our dren. Now as never before the South, e ially the Church here, must be up and

The Young People's Christian Endeavor society has just completed a contest in which visitors, new members etc., scored for each of the two sides into which the society had been divided. The losing side will act as hostess to the winners next Saturday evening at the home of Mr. W. G. Causey.

Our revival will begin the third Sunday in the month with Rev. Mr. Reed as pulpit help. We are praying and hoping for a good meeting. Pray for us.

Mrs. Ned Suits who recently underwent an operation in a Greensboro hospital has returned home much improved, we are glad to say.

We are sorry to hear of the serious illness of Miss Millie Bowman, one of Pleasant Union's oldest members. She has been doing good work at the M. P. Children's Home for some time. We hope for her a speedy recovery. Mrs. J. T. Shoffner, Reporter.

Siler City Charge.—The pastor was glad to attend the Pastors' and Young People's Conference at High Point College with five delegates from our charge. All delegates including the writer brought back certificates and five qualified as Christian Endeavor Experts.

Last Friday the writer was called to conduct the funeral of "Grandmother" Smith of Siler City. We regreted to give her up but we were glad to know that she had lived the Christian life for more than seventy years.

Sunday morning was a wonderful occasion for us at Liberty, the congregation was large and we received into membership our 45th and 46th member of the year. Mrs. Clarence Highfill comes to us from the Baptist Church of Ramseur. She has been a good worker in our church for some time. Little Mozelle Smith was baptised, she is a live worker in our Junior Christian Endeavor.

We held our third quarterly conference Sunday afternoon. A goodly number was present and most all officials had reports. Mr. Wade Siler was elected delegate to conference.

Sunday evening at Liberty the children gave a very interesting program. The church was packed and an offering was taken for Missions.

We are glad that Miss Helen Fogleman who received an injury in an an automobile accident at Beaufort recently, has returned to Liberty and is most well.

Miss Elizabeth Pickett who has been at Long's hospital for months has returned home and is doing nicely.

We regret that Miss Dorothy Curtis and Miss Pauline Frazier had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, we are glad to know that they are getting along nicely.

Best wishes to all, F. L. Gibb, Pastor.

P. S. The Senior C. E. Society enjoyed a Gipsy party Tuesday evening at the Summer home of Mr. W. M. Hanner's, near Kimesville. About fifty enjoyed the games, eats plus a watermelon feast, and group singing during the evening. The invited guest were many prospective members and the new Junior Baraca Class. F. L. G.

Bivins.

About 11o'clock last Sunday, July 18, 1926, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Bivins, wife of Mr. David A. Bivins, went home to God. She was the daughter of Patterson and Sophia Payne and was born and reared near Cedar Cliff Church. She was 68 years six months and 17 days old. She leaves to mourn the loss of one so dear, a husband, two daughters, Mrs. G. A. Foust and Mrs. C. A. McPherson, and two sons, Mr. William Bivins of Burlington, and Mr. John Bivins of Graham, twenty-three grand children, four great grand children, three brothers, and one sister. Many relatives and friends are also sad because of the vacancy left in our church and neighborhood, which no one can fill. But the loss in her home can not be estimated, for she was a devoted wife and mother and they in return were equally devoted to her. Oh, how our hearts go out in sympathy to them in this sad hour. No one can be missed more than a companion and no one take mother's place. Between her and her grand children there was a devotion beautiful to see; how they will miss Grandmother. But there is a silver lining to all dark clouds, for behind them is the sun still shining. God in His goodness and love has called her home and there is rejoicing up in Heaven while we sorrow down here, they sing and shout in the Home Land, because another soul is safe and happy now. "I do not want to get well," she said. "I do not want to suffer so again," for she had suffered much. "I am ready and willing to die." Calling them all by name, she said—"I want you all to live right and meet me in Heaven." Once she said—"Oh, I want to go." Mrs. McPherson said—"Go where, mother." She answered, "To Heaven." When you get there, Mother, tell my loved one, meaning her husband, I am coming." Then Mrs. Bivins began to sing—Won't that be a happy meeting. It will be a glorious happy meeting, dear friends, when we meet again our loved ones over in Father's Home. I for one want to meet her there, for when I used to board in her home, she was a mother to me and I loved her. I know she is happy now, with never a sorrow or care to mar her eternal joy. Many a time she prayed for loved ones here. In my imagination, I see her watching for them over on the other shore. Let's do as she said, be good, and meet her there. For many years she has been a member of Bethel M. P. Church and there in the quiet cemetery, they laid her gently to rest. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Burgess, assisted by Rev. G. W. Holmes. The floral offering was beautiful. Her grand sons acted as pall bearers and grand daughters as flower girls, according to request. How we love to fulfill each little request of those we love. Meet me in Heaven, she said. Don't let us forget that. Amid life's many cares, dear Lord help us to take time to be holy.

"The Lord is coming back to earth some glorious day.
He'll call for you, He'll call for me;
The dead in Christ shall rise, on earth no more to stay,
He'll call for you, He'll call for me.
There'll be singing, there'll be shouting over there,
When the Lord has gathered all the saints at home;
On that bright celestial shore, we'll rejoice for ever more,
Are we ready for that day to come,"

—Calvary Sunday school had a fine time at their picnic yesterday.

The weather was favorable and the place was delightful. There was the large pond for swimming, the creek for fishing, the grassy slopes, the shade trees, a well of cold water, and a gracious host, Bro. J. B. Ogburn. He and his son came out from their mill and shared our supper with us. Mrs. Ogburn and daughter came in their car to see who were there and remained for a while with us. The place seemed to lack but one thing, and that was angle-worms. An extended search discovered but one. Brother Ogburn said we might come every week. Bro. Sullivan said the next time he came he expected to bring plenty of worms. Bro. Ogburn replied that he was not fond of them, that he much preferred fried chicken and cake. We missed our pastor who had not returned from his vacation.

—Miss Mary Ogburn since her graduation at Salem College has been teaching.

—Flat Rock people are still looking forward to the building of a splendid stone church.

Second M. P. Church, Charlotte.—We have missed two or three weeks in our write ups.

Our Sunday school is on the increase in number and there is an increase in interest.

Our third quarterly meeting convened last Satuday at the home of our pastor, Bro. D. A. Braswell, in Concord. There was some important business attended to such as there is always at the third quarterly meeting and Bro. C. C. Thomas was granted license to exhort. Bro. Thomas is a useful and good man and we pray the good Master will bless him and make him a blessing to the world.

Mecklenburg.—On next Sunday (second Sunday in August) is the time for the meeting at the old Antioch camp ground. There will be two services, 11:00 A. M. and 2:30 P. M. This service will be in the charge of THE LITTLE EVANGELISTIC PARTY, Rev. J. B. Little, Evangelist, will preach at the two services. On account of the Union Gospel meeting that is to begin that night at Indian Trail, to last three weeks, Antioch has decided to yield the week at their church for the Indian Trail meeting, and have their meeting later, if it is thought necessary. We are looking forward in expectation of a great work being done, and many souls brought home to God. Mr. Little is a very successful evangelist, rich in Bible knowledge and evangelistic experience. Of course you will want to hear him, so come to Antioch next Sunday, August 8th, then to Indian Trail to the big tent for the next three weeks.

Lebanon, High Point.—Our pastor, Rev. J. R. Hutton, gave us a very interesting and helpful sermon Sunday morning, using as his subject "The Christian's voyage through life." He read Acts 27 and compared the voyage of Paul's with the Christian life.

The church decided to call off the Sunday evening services through the month of August in order to give our pastor a rest.

The third quarterly conference was held Sunday evening at six thirty. J. W. Montgomery has been elected as delegate to the annual conference.

Just after the close of the service last Sunday morning (July 18) a horrible accident occurred. As the small son of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Montgomery was crossing the street to his father's car he was struck by a passing car. He was carried to the High Point Hospital where it was necessary to perform an operation and although he was in a very serious condition and there was little hope of his recovery, he is now improving nicely.

The July meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held with Mrs. Willis Lee. The society decided to study something on India since the worker we are supporting is in India. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. A. J. Payne on August 4th with Mrs. Edward Suits as leader.

Our revival meeting will begin the second Sunday in September with Rev. L. W. Gerringer as pulpit help.

Card of Thanks.

I wish to take this means of expressing my appreciation for the many cheery letters written me during my illness and especially from the young people who expected to be in my class. So glad that Prof. Lindley had that subject, for I have already heard expressions of appreciation of how well it was handled. Thank the preachers, too, for their good letters and for the fifteen that came to see me.

Thankful for the time that was taken from the program to offer special prayer for me. That helped in more ways than one. I am now able to walk about the house and am hoping to go to the mountains for a rest or change next week or by the time this is in print.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

State Street, Lexington.—A new experience has come to this writer since last report and that is being confined to bed and not being able to get out. The first time since six years of age,—a long time ago. Taken with sciatica the night after our Vacation Bible School closed. One month ago, just now hobbling around the house.

Our V. B. School was a great success. We had an enrollment of eighty-seven with an average attendance of sixty-five. Mrs. C. L. Koontz as leader, Miss Maxine Taylor of Halifax together with Mrs. Bethea and myself assisting we had an interesting time. We had fifty three to do the required work and receive certificates. Three of the mills here donated goods and under Mrs. Bethea's direction the little girls cut and made forty seven garments for the Children's Home. We had several yards left over. This will be given the Home to be used as they wish.

Our closing night which was the first Sunday night in July we had a large crowd to witness a demonstration of what the children had done. They did themselves credit as well as their teachers in giving a splendid entertainment. We thank Miss Taylor for her efficient help. She made many friends while here.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is doing good work and the warm weather has not caused them to waver in their faithfulness. One meeting night while the pastor was sick they came in laden with all sorts of good things to eat. They brought so much sugar, nearly one hundred pounds, that I accused them of thinking I was going to be mighty sour when I got up, so they thought they would sweeten me up. I was too sick to watch up with them, so failed to get all the names or the articles brought, but thank them just the same.

Not only in the one company have they come but so many have come bringing flowers and good things to eat and doing so many favors, that it has helped to alleviate the suffering which has been intense at time.

Bro. Ivy Crutchfield has proven himself a great neighbor preacher all along and especially since I have been unable to do anything. Coming to see me two or three times a day, writing letters for me, in fact I do not see how he could have helped me more. I shall not forget his kindness.

Our Sunday school has not lost out any during this hot weather. We are playing around— either above or just below the hundred mark all the time. In fact we are not pressing for more now for we are crowded at present and we are hoping to begin on our Sunday school building soon. We have been delayed in many ways and we are hoping that all obstacles will soon be removed. Our membership have subscribed liberally. In fact many of them have gone beyond their ability.

The Doctor has told me that I must stop for awhile now for the reason this trouble got such a hold upon me. I was in a run down condition and that I need a change. Just as soon as I feel like I can take the trip will hike for the mountains to try the virtues of camping for a while hoping to come back strong and ready for strenuous building campaign.

Please pray for me that strength may be given to do the work that I feel is yet mine. May this revival season be one of great blessing to those who are so engaged and may there be many souls saved. Regret so much to have to cancel so many engagements.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Graham.—There has been no report made from our church for sometime. However, we have been busy.

Our pastor, Brother D. R. Williams, has been very ill this spring but we are very glad to announce that his condition is greatly improved and at the present time he is holding one preaching service each Sunday. During Brother William's illness, his pulpit was filled from time to time by Rev. G. W. Holmes, Rev. E. G. Cowan, Rev. Paul S. Kennett, and Rev. Mr. Adams. We were very glad to have them with us and enjoyed these services very much.

The Children's Day service was held Sunday evening, July 11, and quite a large crowd attended. The children rendered a good program which was enjoyed by all.

All the C. E. societies are doing splendid work. The Senior society, under the leadership of our efficient president, Mr. C. E. Core, is going fine. Some very fine programs have been given recently and the membership is increasing. The district C. E. Union held its second meeting with us Sat., July 17. This is a new organization and the attendance was small but several societies were represented and we had a good meeting.

On Thursday evening, July 22, the Senior C. E. society went to Summer's Mill on a camping trip. There were 21 in the party, not including the visitors we had on Friday night. We came back home Saturday morning, tired and sleepy but everybody reported a splendid time.

With our supt., Bro. P. S. Dixon leading, our Sunday school is doing some very fine work. We have our departments in fine shape and in every department of the school, the attendance is good. We look back with pride over our year's work and hope we may be able to improve on it more in the future.

We held our third quarterly conference July 27. The attendance was fair and the reports very good. Brother S. S. Holt was elected delegate to conference.

Our special meeting will begin the second Sunday in September. We expect to have with us in this meeting Rev. T. M. Johnson of Mebane and Bro. T. O. Pender will assist with the singing. We are looking forward to a good meeting.

THE FISH THAT WORE NIGHT CLOTHES

Jack had been sick for weeks. He was better now, but the days in bed had seemed very long. And now the spring vacation had come, and the boys were going fishing almost every day. Fishing along the lazy Florida streams is fun, and Jack must miss that. But the day when his class went for a sailing trip on the gulf was the hardest day of all.

Jack tried hard to be brave, but all day, it seemed, he could think of nothing but spreading sails and dancing blue waves.

''Anyway, the boys will come in and tell me all about it before bedtime,'' he comforted himself.

Eight o'clock came and went, then nine o'clock, and still no boys. Jack's mother settled him for the night.

''The boys have forgotten all about me,'' he thought as he lay there alone in the dark. And his only reminder of the sea now was several big salty tears that ran down his cheeks.

Just then a crunching sound on the walk, whispers—

''I'm awake yet,'' called Jack, ''ever so wide awake.''

Then steps along the hall, the snapping of the light button, and the boys were with him. Of course they hadn't forgotten him. They were late because they'd had to hunt all through Peter Bell's attic for an old aquarium. They'd brought Jack the greatest catch of the day.

''We got him in the net,'' said Peter proudly.

''What a beauty,'' cried Jack, ''but whatever is it?''

''Guess,'' said the boys.

Jack studied the fish with its brilliant green coloring and its queer hooked bill.

''It looks,'' said Jack slowly, ''it looks—of course you'll laugh—but it looks like a parrot, as much as a fish could.''

''That's just what it is, cried the delighted boys, ''a real parrot fish.''

''It's a dandy,'' declared Jack enthusiastically. ''I'm going to call it Poll.''

''Poll Parrot,'' laughed the boys.

''Of course,'' cried Jack. ''I'll have just lots of fun watching it; I'm going to keep it always.''

After the boys had gone Jack soon fell fast asleep. He did not waken until the gray dawn of early morning, and then his first thought was of his parrot fish.

Peeping from under the covers, he looked at the aquarium, looked carefully, and, gasping with astonishment, looked again. His lovely, green parrot fish was gone—altogether gone!

And stranger yet there was another fish in the aquarium, a dull brownish creature, mottled with a few dark spots.

''Why, whatever!'' cried Jack as he looked at the stranger fish that rested on the pe in the bottom of the globe.

Perhaps there were two fish in the gl after all, he thought, and sitting up, switched on the light to make sure.

Then when he looked again—it does seem hard to believe it—his bright green parrot fish was swimming gracefully about the globe, and the homely, dull colored fish was gone. Yes, there was only one fish there surely, and that was pretty Poll Parrot!

When his mother, who had been awakened by the light, came into the room anxiously, she commenced to shake down the fever thermometer.

''No,'' laughed Jack, ''I'm feeling fine—better than I have for days and days. I'm sure I haven't any fever.''

And indeed he hadn't.

''A dream, of course,'' said the boys when he told them his strange tale in the morning.

''No,'' protested Jack, ''it was too plain for that, and, besides, I pinched myself hard to make sure I was awake.''

''Magic, then,'' suggested Peter; but he laughed as he said it, and so did the other boys, for they all knew better than that.

''Get the nature book for me,'' said Jack, ''the big one.''

The other boys held the heavy book while Jack turned the pages.

''P,'' read Jack, ''P-a, P-a-r.''

''There it is,'' said Peter, ''Parrot fish.''

A moment of silence and then a shout.

''It's true,'' breathed Jack, ''I didn't dream it after all.''

''Well, did you ever!'' exclaimed Peter, who was reading over Jack's shoulder.

And indeed the book told something that made all the boys gasp.

''The parrot fish isn't the only fish that changes its color when it goes to sleep, either,'' said Peter; ''the book says that lots of common fish do the same thing.''

''They must be made that way to protect them from their enemies when they are asleep,'' the boys decided.

''Well,'' said Jack with a happy sigh, ''I thought last night when I saw Poll Parrot for the first time—I thought you'd brought me something pretty fine, and I said I'd keep him always, but I didn't even begin to guess what I'd got—a fish that wears a night-gown!''

With a shout of laughter, the boys caught the words and chanted them like the refrain of some funny song—

''A fish that wears a nightgown! A fish that wears a nightgown!''

''Yes,'' said Jack, ''I'll keep Poll Parrot always and always.''

But after all, Jack changed his mind. The very first day that the little boy was able to go down to the seashore he took the parrot fish along and turned it loose in the water.

''Of course, I'll miss Poll Parrot,'' said Jack, ''but I'm so glad to get out again myself that I can't bear to think of keeping anything shut in. Even a fish ought to be free.''

All the boys agreed that Jack was right. And from the way that the handsome fish flashed its sparkling fins and darted out into the deep water, it was very plain that Poll Parrot thought so, too.—Selected.

IE IMPERATIVE REQUIREMENT.

e who live in this land of plenty, where are equal before the law, where the rights the weakest are safeguarded, where the poorest and most obscure can rise to highest positions of trust, wealth and authority, where a public school system is free to all youth, where religion and its precepts dominate the thought and life of officials, people, numerous organizations and institutions seek to relieve the unfortunate, and where a strong nation-wide sentiment is for order and righteousness, cannot appreciate without actual contact or close study the oppressive conditions under which millions dwell in heathen lands.

Take India for example—it has been called "the brightest gem in England's diadem," referring to political, trade, and kindred advantages which have accrued.

While it is a nation of great age and extent of territory, of teeming population, of wonderful temples and palaces, and glittering pageantry inherent in the East, it is also a land where the most abject poverty exists far and wide, and where the hideous stands in close touch with surpassing beauty, and where there are "mud huts peopled by human beings whose clothing, poor and scanty as it is, serves to distinguish them from the beasts."

But details need not be given of the blight of child marriage, the burden of the caste system, the authority of parents over the life of their children, the degrading religions which foster pandering to the lusts of the flesh, and other strong contrasts with what we have through the Gospel of Christ under our enlighted government.

The obligation of the more favored, the more richly blessed to be interested in and responsive to the condition and needs of those afar cannot be ignored, since the Bible enjoins the duty of the strong to help the weak, of the enriched to share with the impoverished.

Yea, we must be concerned about the heathen, unless we are ready to admit Christ is not a real personal Saviour to us, His Salvation means nothing vital to us.

Moreover, it will not do to raise questions as to the future destiny of the heathen, in seeking to palliate one's unjustifiable course in withholding altogether, or in rendering half-hearted supported to Foreign Missions.

The question which ought to be uppermost is what are the heathen today, of what are they destitute in this life, what are their vital needs for which the Gospel of Christ has provision, and who shall carry unto them God's great gift?

The cruelty, deceitfulness, uncleanness which abound there, the treatment of womanhood as prey of lust and violence, the parental exposure of children to die, the exercise of power to tyrannize and debauch, the propitiation, by cruel, abominal rites, of demons the dread of men's lives, and much else must be of present, weighty concern to all Christians, all of whom are commissioned of God to give all peoples His Word, which is His power unto salvation—deliverance from sin, triumph over death, life eternal to all who will believe in His Son.

It is no excuse to say wickedness abounds in our own so-called Christian land, for it is in spite of the Gospel, and by the frailty of human nature.

It is true that all moral evils in heathendom cannot be charged to their religions, but many such evils result directly from the beliefs and rites of some of them, as impurity and cruelty in Hinduism, and polygamy and slavery in Mohammedanism, etc., and those faiths all prove their inability to develop in their followers the best moral life, and the noblest service to mankind.

Well did that Indian say in Philadelphia some years ago "when your ancestors wore skins and roamed the wilds of Western Europe, my ancestors had then a fine civilization.

Some one took the Bible to your ancestors, and you are the product of Foreign Missions, but no one took the Bible to my ancestors, and my people are heathen still."

Surely no Christian should longer dishonor his Lord by refusing to help to give the heathen the treasures of truth, the riches of His grace, and the blessings of life revealed in God's Word, and experienced by accepting Christ as Saviour.

TOBACCO "BOOBS" AND "SISSIES."

Will H. Brown.

"Hurry-up Yost," the noted champion of football for the past thirty years, says: "I have four all-American stars helping me at Michigan (university). Among those four there is not one who has ever taken a drink, SMOKED, used profanity or told a dirty story. Are they effeminate? Well, the four can take THIRTY of the other type and break them into a number of pieces without straining a musele. They are men of the highest order, and their influence will carry far beyond the football field."

Dr. William Brady, who writes on health topics for a syndicate of daily papers, received a letter from a mother in which was this statement: "I have two sons, aged 16 and 18. Neither of them drinks or smokes, but they are not sissies, by any means."

Dr. Brady comments as follows: "It is a little shocking and rather sad that a mother should feel it necessary to say that her boys in their teens do not drink or smoke. One might imagine that boys who do not begin smoking and drinking in their teens are considered effeminate, weak, wishy-washy, unmanly. Now that is reverse psychology. It is the mental, physical and moral WEAKLING, defective, degenerate, half-baked, treacherous, untrustworthy, lying, thieving, criminal youth that takes to alcohol, TOBACCO AND OTHER drugs in his teens.

"It is ONLY THE SISSY who DOES start smoking or drinking in his teens. A boy who has the MAKING OF A MAN in him has the strength of character to say NO to every invitation, opportunity or temptation to make a fool of himself, to be a 'good fellow,' a 'good sport,' or to avoid being a sap. Only the weakling, the poor sport, the IMITATION good fellow, the veritable BOOB, succumbs to these arguments, taunts or appeals,

WHAT IS THERE IN SILENCE?

Rev. John Leonard Cole.

There is nothing very interesting or att tive in it for the average "man in the stre today, and not very much for the "ma the pew." Silence is rather eschewed. S for a few esoteric sects that make a g deal of black-typed fuss—and probably s money—about "entering the Silence," contemporary Americans of this jazzy, l speaker generation never court silence. T shun it. They flee from it. Any one wh non-loquacious; any thing that is not n (excepts motors), is viewed with suspici if not with alarm. Nothing but emptiness e'se sinister plotting can be thought of back of silence; who or what makes splurge must be a "dead one," or danger No quiet, soft-spoken man plays a lead role, for a very long time, in any popular d ma—not unless he blows up and make racket before the curtain rings down. So people may admire the quiet Quakers w their silent services, but ordinarily they mit, "We'd rather see than be one."

Notwithstanding this general glorificat of noise, the silent things are, when one st to think of it, the most powerful forces heaven and earth. What is there in silen Consider the sunlight, the dawn, the ti electricity, radium, the growing root, and becomes clear that silent things are mightest. There is more than mystery, and beauty; there is resistless power in Some one said that the pauses in the speec of Daniel Webster were tremendous—wei ed a ton. There is more than poetry, there revelation of how God's greatest forces p ceed, in Phillips Brook's sweet lines:

How silently, how silently,
The wondrous Gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of His heaven.
No ear may hear His coming,
But in this world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive Him still,
The dear Christ enters in.

When one begins to think of the quiet a puissant persons of history, of course th comes to mind immediately that Yo brought up over in Nazareth of Palesti whose first thirty years are absolutely " ent years, so far as history is concerned; a must have been rather simply and quie lived, so far as His personal behavior is c cerned. When He did at last enter public l He disappointed many by the undemonst tive manner in which He walked around a spoke simple words to comparatively known people. He used few words, but th He did say were picturesque and effective. never harangued the crowd to incite them rebel against Rome. He preferred to ca likely insurrectionists.

So soft-spoken and gentle was this G ilean Prophet that He reminded people o description in their old Scriptures, "He sh not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to heard in the street. A bruised reed shall not break; and the smoking flax shall he quench." He was master of the rare art keeping still. They brought to Him one an adulteress, and stood round to hear withering rebuke for the guilty woman. But He said absolutely nothing. He merely wrote with His finger on the sand. Then He broke the silence with a pointed invitation to the man without guilt to throw the first stone, and with that the embarrassed audience dispersed. Realizing that He possessed all power in heaven and on earth, this silent, perfectly controlled Seer stood right inside the temple, one day, in the midst of the Holy City—which was, within three days, to crucify Him—and simply "looked around." The same Mighty One had His power so perfectly subordinated to His wisdom and goodness that He actually stood quiet before the authorities while perjurers swore Him to His death and soldiers smote Him. It is not strange that another O'd Testament verse came to the minds of His friends—"As a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."

One turns from contemplating that quiet figure of the Master, who is said to have shouted only twice—when He called His friend Lazarus back from death and when He called to His Father in the bitterness of His own death—convinced there is much in silence—vastly more than this age of sounding brass and clanging cymbals is willing to admit.

Possibly there is a silence of emptiness and ignorance. (Ordinarily, though, empty casks make the most noise.) There may be a silence begotten of bewilderment and indecision.

Certain of the "higher critics" who have been trying to puncture the "Coolidge myth" have done their best to allocate the taciturnity of that silent occupant of the White House under one of these lower brands of silence. The opinion seems to be growing, however, that Mr. Coolidge's quiet uncommunicativeness is not that of emptiness, bewilderment, nor is it a pose, but it is the silence of reserve power. At any rate, the present head of this republic has won a reputation for dignity and resourcefulness through his very refusal to dash into voluble statements.

Whatever we may say of that, the unspoken, deliberate "looking around" of Jesus in the Holy City, where He was just being acclaimed as "son of David" and could have started an uprising with a tone and a gesture; His self-controlled silence before His judges when "all authority in heaven and on earth" was His and He knew it—these things reveal a silence of power.

In Christian lives and in church services the power of silence—or the "silence of power"—has not been realized or utilized as it should have been. The individual Christian is so busy keeping appointments and "expressing himself," in the various laudable philanthropies and speeches and choruses, that he has really lost that power of serene contemplation, the ability to hear the "still, small voice." A prayer much needed by believers who hurry and make frequent and voluble testimonies is that of Matthew Arnold in Kensington Gardens:

The will to neither strive nor cry,
The power to feel with others give!
Calm, calm me more! nor let me die
Before I have begun to live!

As for public worship, it is too bad we were ever labeled "shouting Methodists." For some of us have felt that the tumult and the shouting were part of our distinctive heritage and the secret of our power. Expression has been emphasized too much—"say something," do something, start something. Impression has been cultivated too little. Not enough have we said to our fellow worshipers, "Be something," "Listen," "Hear something."

Bishop Quayle was doubtless orthodox in Methodism, but he perceived this danger six years ago when he wrote: "Save only the withdrawal of the Holy Spirit from the church, nothing is more a menace than noisiness in the church....With no ill intent on the part of anybody there has come into Methodism a lot of hullabaloo."

There is, after all, a good deal in silence. There would be more vital piety in our personal lives and more weighty influence flowing from them if we would follow an old injunction of the Psalmist's, "Be still, and know—." And worshipers would more amply receive the quiet "blessings of His heaven" if, in their sanctuary, they obeyed what they sometimes put on the walls in shouting letters, Habakkuk's "The Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him."—Zions Herald.

THE COW TREE.

One hundred and twenty-six years ago the great traveler and naturalist, Alexander von Humboldt, saw, in Venezuela, a very curious tree which, in his own words, gave "through incisions in the trunk, an abundance of glutinous milk, tolerably thick, without any acridity and of an agreeable smell....The negroes and free people who work in the plantations drank it, dipping into it their bread of maize or cassava....The overseer of the farm told me the negroes grew sensibly fatter during the season when this milk was most abundant."

Humboldt was a trained observer and an honest one. No one would suspect him of drawing the long bow. Yet nothing further was heard of his interesting "cow tree." It cannot have been common in Venezuela, or it would have attracted the attention of later travelers. It may even be extinct there today. Humboldt's own reference to it, more or less buried in the extraordinary mass of his notes and observations, was pretty well forgotten. Even the scientific men of the present day, or most of them, are unfamiliar with it.

But now, after all these years, another explorer, Prof. Samuel J. Record of Yale University, returns from Guatemala and reports the discovery of a tree of a sort hitherto unknown on this continent. The description he gives of it sounds singularly like that of Humboldt's cow tree. It is a very tall tree with a dense canopy of leaves. "At the first stroke of the axe a creamy white latex gushed from the bark. It looked so much like real milk, and was so free from stickiness, that I could not resist the temptation of tasting it. I found it sweet and palatable, and my only regret was that I had no way of carrying a quantity back to camp to try on a dish of bananas. When we left the tree, milk was flowing out of every break in the bark and running on the ground."

The discovery or rediscovery of this milk-giving tree is most interesting. It is too bad that neither Humboldt nor Record had the means of analyzing the milk. We should like to know its constituents, and whether it really resembles cow's milk in anything except appearance and taste. Undoubtedly the tree is suitable only to the tropics. We in the temperate zone can hardly expect to get much benefit from it, though it is just the kind of plant Mr. Henry Ford would like to see cultivated everywhere. He has no high opinion of the efficiency of the cow, we are told, and grudges the time spent on the care and nurture of such animals by men who might otherwise be comfortably engaged at good wages in the manufacture of automobiles.

It may be, however, that the cow tree, if it is abundant enough, and if it gives a really nutritious milk, may form the basis of a canned-milk industry that will make the jungles of Guatemala or Venezuela hum with prosperity. Or perhaps it will under appropriate management produce a vegetable cheese for the delight of epicures. It may even happen that a future Burbank will cross the cow tree with the breadfruit tree and procure from the hybrid delicious bowls of bread and milk!—Youth's Companion.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

We have just closed at High Point College what proved to be the best Young People's Conference ever held in North Carolina. The attendance was fine, the spirit wholesome and the grade of work very high. The entire state will realize the lasting benefits of this week of religious instruction as the young people return and take up the tasks in their many local fields.

A few factors of the conference should receive special attention. First in the list I shall name the growing conception that our religious work must be placed on a sound educational basis. This is the normal and safe course. It is the only logical way to lay the foundation for a substantial church. Poor methods, no system and no efficiency may have been sufficient for the church in her simpler day, but it is altogether hopeless to look for progress in the Kingdom now without thoroughly trained and consecrated leadership. So this recent conference was operated on the above theory. These young people were here seeking the light and the truth which will make of them more capable workers in the Master's service.

The exceptional talent employed by the conference is another phase of the work that deserves comment. Our teachers were themselves trained men and women; experts many in their chosen work. And the platform hours were taken by scholarly orators of power. The evening lectures made a series liken unto the best chataugua programs. A remarkable store of inspiration was given the members of the conference, and fortunately for the small fee the delegates paid.

Now as to the results of the conference: One hundred and fifty-five young people registered for the conference. Of course some of these could not stay the required number of days to receive credit for the courses. But 115 certificates were awarded for courses completed. Four four-year diplomas were also given this year. These represent work completed over a period of four years. Two Gold Seal awards were also made; one however having been due last conference. There were about 35 ministers in attendance during part of the conference. These together with a large number of visitors makes a total attendance of 236.

The grade of work was good. There was little or no failure to attend classes. The lectures also were well attended. Many who had seen several conferences in the past suggested that the attitude on the part of the young delegates was fine indeed.

Mention should be made of the wonderful record made this year again by the Albemarle people. They take off the banner this summer also for the largest registration. This fine church plunges into the interest of the conference and makes it a habit to roll up a powerful registration before the conference opens.

Personally, I take this opportunity to thank every co-worker and delegate who made the conference a success. We feel that the conference accomplished great good. But this victory was not won by any one individual. It came through cooperation.

May the religious work in each local church represented in the conference spring into new life as a result of the inspiration and learning gained at the summer conference.

P. E. Lindley, President.

DOLL MESSENGERS OF FRIENDSHIP.

The Doll Messenger project announced by the Committee on World Friendship among Children of which Mrs. Henry W. Peabody is Chairman, is recommended to the people and children of the United States by the Federal Council of the Churches. This project has a practical significance far deeper than appears on the surface. To see this, one needs to know first of all the fact background in the century old Japanese doll festival known as the Hina Matsuri.

This beautiful festival for exalting the family life and inspiring the daughters with the ideals and habits of home-love and loyalty is universally observed by all families, whatever their social rank. It is perhaps the most attractive of all Japan's interesting national festival days. On this day ancestral doll-treasures are brought out from safe keeping and placed on display with various tiny and typical articles of furniture. The ancient and quaint costumes of the dolls, the revered customs of ancestors, the formal salutations, the receptions and refreshments for neighbors and guests, the details of politeness and courtesy, all lend themselves admirably to sustain interests and to make the three-day festival a valuable asset in the home and in the nation. It gives mothers fine opportunities for instructing their daughters, appealing to the imagination and training the imitative instincts.

The proposal of the Committee (already heartily endorsed by many leading Americans and also by the Japanese Government) is that American children send thousands of American dolls to visit their friends in Japan on Doll Festival Day, March 3, 1927. These visitors from the United States will be heartly welcomed by Japan's girls and mothers. The doll suggested by the Committee is the "Mama Voice" doll. The American dressed will be especially welcomed by the mothers and older sisters, who are now widely adopting western styles of light and airy clothing for their children. The welcome to American dolls will be the more cordial because of the appreciation thus shown in the United States of a beautiful Japanese custom.

But more important than the goodwill toward America promoted in Japan will be the understanding, appreciation and goodwill for Japan created in the hearts and minds of American children. The doll project is psychologically and pedagogically correct. It begins in the right way to generate mutual appreciation and friendship.

This project will help American children to develop an international mind, to look across national and international boundaries and to see something good and beautiful in a foreign land. Exactly this is a paramount need in our day and generation, when the races and nations of the world are being crowded into such close neighborhood by the extraordinary scientific conquest of space and Nature and the developments of universal travel, trade and communication.

This program to get children of different lands into mutual acquaintance is not new. The Junior Red Cross has been doing remarkably fine work along these lines, as have also various women's foreign mission boards, the Child Welfare Association and other groups, societies and popular magazines. This Doll Messenger project, however, is unique in linking the children's world goodwill program with such a national festival as the Hina Matsuri, and in making the program both nation-wide and simultaneous. This gives it special joy and "pep" and drive. Its dramatic possibilities should be utilized. It stirs the imaginaton. It makes a powerful sentimental appeal to children and mothers in both lands. The dainty thank-you letters that will surely come back will also help to create interest and understanding. The Committee invites cooperation of all interested in fostering international goodwill in a practical way.

The question is sometimes asked why the Committee has chosen Japan for this gesture of friendsip. For 72 years, ever since Commodore Perry opened the door of Japan to the outside world, America has been her sincere friend, taking a special interest in Japan's welfare. During the last decade, however, misunderstandings on both sides have crept in to mar these friendly relations. Japan has felt deeply hurt by a succession of what seemed to her unfriendly acts, and she needs to be reassured and brought to feel that the heart of America is sincere in its friendly desire for her welfare.

The Japanese are peculiarly responsive to any act of friendliness, and the Doll Messengers will enter thousands of homes. On the other hand, thousands of American children and their parents will be thinking and talking about Japan in a friendly way.

American citizens of all ages, especially young people and children in day schools, private schools, Sunday schools and individual families, are cordially invited to have a share in this program for friendship.

The Committee (105 East 22nd Street, New York) will welcome leaders in every community to help forward this Peace Maker's Crusade. A beautiful folder in Doll messengers of Friendship and a leaflet of "Suggestions for Leaders, Parents, Teachers and Workers" will be sent on application.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—AUGUST 15.

Jethro's Wise Counsel.

Lesson Text: Ex. 18: 13-24.

Golden Text: Mark 13: 34.

The Central Truth: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. 13:1. All civil rulers should be "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness."

Scriptural Points.

1. Rephidim was the next stop after the giving of the manna and quails. The people again raised a loud complaint because there was no water. They really got mad with Moses as if he was to blame for their misfortune. The most unreasonable of them were ready to stone him to death. How slow were they to learn to trust in God!

2. In answer to Moses' prayer God directed him to smite a rock with his miracle-working rod. He did so and streams of refreshing water gushed out of the rock.

3. Here at Rephidim the Israelites were attacked by the Amalekites. Joshua with a select band went out to meet the enemy. On a hill nearby Moses held up the wonderful rod in supplication to God for victory. While the rod was up Joshua was victorious. When he let it down from sheer weariness Amalek had the advantage. So Aaron and Hur, on either side, held up Moses' hands till the Amalekites were completely routed.

4. Here at Rephidim Moses' fatherinlaw, Jethro, brought his wife and two sons to him. It was a happy meeting. He bowed to and kissed his fatherlaw. Such love and devotion is exceedingly rare.

5. Moses was judge as well as emancipator, teacher, leader and priest. To exercise justice for a million and a half people was no easy task. The impatient and complaining state of mind of the people made this work all the harder.

6. Jethro was quick to see the unwisdom of Moses bearing all this heavy burden alone. Moses was now eighty years old, and such a task would sooner or later crush the strongest of men.

7. Jethro was the first democrat of history. He advocated a distribution of power among the people. He was opposed to a centralized government. He proposed to Moses that he set up a government of "rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens."

8. And he prescribed the qualifications for such rulers. They must be men of unquestioned ability, deeply religious, truthful, and too conscientious to accept bribes.

9. Moses was broad-minded and big-hearted enough to see that this was good [illegible] was glad to share this burden, and even honors attached to it, with others. He accepted this wise counsel and acted accordingly. He himself remained the supreme judge of the embryo nation, and the others were subordinate judges or magistrates, dispensing justice under him.

Practical Points.

1. Capability to give sound advice is a valuable gift from God. Such a "gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning." James 1:17.

2. "Wisdom is the principal thing," better than wealth, honor, or pleasure. Wisdom is knowledge married to goodness. "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peacable, gentle, and easy to be entreated full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. James 3:17.

3. Wisdom is not always taught in the schools. It usually comes in answer to prayer. Solomon's wisdom came from God. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." James 1:5.

4. Not every one is sensible enough to take good advice. Some, more or less conceited, will learn in no school except that of experience. And this is a terribly expensive school. "For wisdom is better than rubies; and all things that may be desired are not to be compared to it." Prov. 8:11.

5. We live in an age which rulers are largely the choice of the people over whom they rule. To make a wise and acceptable choice demands a large share of wisdom on the part of the people. Voting becomes a very important Christian duty. To vote as you pray is the only right way to vote. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." James 4:17.

—The triplets of Bro. Clark Kirkman of Pleasant Garden were at Tabernacle last Sunday and attracted much attention. They are bright, hearty children. Two are girls, one is a boy. There is no close resemblance between any two. Their mother died soon after their birth. Miss Lelia Kirkman, their aunt, is looking carefully and lovingly after them. They seem to have as much promise for the future as average children.

—Tabernacle church is now equipped with a new lighting system. It has beautiful chandeliers and uses acetylene gas for the lights.

—A number came from Grace church to hear Dr. Andrews in Calvary last Sunday.

—In company with Dr. Andrews and Bro A. E. Causey the editor attended a service at Tabernacle last Sunday afternoon. Bro. Suits, the pastor, was the preacher of the hour, and he preached a very earnest and searching sermon on Backsliding. We were glad to hear him contradict that unworthy charge that Methodists believe in backsliding. Even those that practice it do not believe in it.

—Brother W. J. Williams is recovering from his illness slowly, but he has been protected by his physician from the coming of his friends to see him.

PIE PLATES.

For two years Alice Henderson had sold kitchen ware in the dingy basement of Heath & Warner's General Emporium. She could tell without glancing at the tags the price of practically everything in the basement from an egg beater to a washtub. The other two girls who worked with her in the basement had grown to rely upon her knowledge of the stock as much as on that of Mr. Keath, who was the nominal head of the kitchen ware department, but who was usually busy upstairs somewhere.

"I do not blame him," said Maud Holden one day dismally after she and Alice had recovered from a fit of coughing and sneezing brought on by an attempt to find a particular kind of tea canister that an old lady with black mitts and a black cotton veil tied over her rusty black bonnet had insisted must be somewhere in the basement "because she had bought one there forty years before when she was married" and an exact duplicate of which finally turned up in a dark corner behind a stack of pie plates. "I'd make up almost any kind of an excuse to get out of this dusty, cobwebby hole."

Alice, who had found a cloth and was dusting the red canister, laughed. "Sometimes a battle with the spiders does me good," she confessed. "It keeps me from thinking too much about being a clerk in the basement. But the spider that inhabits that corner is a little too industrious to suit me. I have swept down his web fifty times at least, and he just spins it over again."

"Ugly things!" exclaimed Verna Ellison nervously, as Alice suddenly dropped the canister and chased the persistent spider around a saucepan and behind a chopping tray only to lose him in a crack in the wall at last. "They make me shiver. I cannot see why Heath & Warner should not invest in a little whitewash and brighten up this gloomy old dugout."

"They are too stingy!" snapped Maud, forgetting the little old lady, who looked mildly surprised as she paid for the canister and turned away. "It would kill them to put out an extra dollar. If ever there were two old crabs it is Heath & Warner! O, they are kind if anybody is sick, and they give us a five-dollar gold piece every Christmas," she acknowledged, "but there is not the slightest chance for advancement. Look at yourself, Alice Henderson," she went on, now thoroughly aroused. "Here you have been in this dingy, musty old hole two mortal years; you have sold hundreds of dollars worth of kitchen ware in that time, but you are still here in the basement. Have you got any chance to get ahead? You know you have not; you can go on working for twenty years more, and you will still be here in the basement along with these old pie plates."

In spite of the fact that Maud's words had cut deeper than she knew, Alice laughed. The tin pie plates represented another streak of Heath & Warner's conservatism. Tin pie plates had been good enough for their mothers and grandmothers, therefore they had bought a generous stock of them. To the girls who were always grumbling about them because they seemed to be perpetually in the way, the stock of pie plates appeared to be inexhaustible.

"If they were only agate they would sell, and we could get them out of the way; but tin!" sniffed Verna. "Who wants to buy tin pie plates nowadays?"

Alice took up one of the despised plates and ran her fingers thoughtful along its smooth, well-finished edge. "They're better than many of the cheap agate pie plates," she remarked. "They are made of the best tin, such tin as you won't find on the market today, and they are smooth and perfect. There isn't a poor one among them."

"Hear! hear!" cried Maud. "You ought to be a demonstrator instead of a fifteen-dollar-a-week clerk."

Alice sighed. "There are reasons why I can't fill my brains with any will-o'-the-wisp-idea," she said frankly. "I've just got to hold onto my job and my fifteen dollars a week and be as thankful as I can."

The girls said no more, for Alice's "reasons," a widowed mother and several younger brothers and sisters, were well known to those who knew her.

"But it's bitterly hard never to have a chance to prove what I can do," thought Alice as she left the basement and went out into the crowded street that afternoon. "As Maud says, there isn't the slightest hope of my ever being anything but a clerk in the basement as long as I stay with Heath & Warner, no matter how hard I try. Opportunity must shun emporium basements."

As she paused on the street corner to wait for an uptown car, her attention was suddenly attracted by a huge poster in the window of a grocery store. "Apple Week," it announced in flaring red letters. "Buy your apples here. Pie apples, eating apples, all kinds of apples. Come in and look at them." On the opposite corner a fruit store had a window showing a doll dressed as a cook rolling out a bit of pie crust on a toy rolling board while back of her was a glorious wall of red apples.

On the ride up town Alice saw several more posters announcing that it was "Apple Week." And she was suddenly aware of a new and novel idea. "I wonder"—she ejaculated and stopped.

"I beg your pardon. Did you speak to me?" asked her nearest neighbor, a pleasant-faced elderly lady.

Alice laughed. "I was talking to myself, I guess," she admitted.

The next morning Alice went to work unusually early. Her cheeks were flushed and her knees trembled as she approached the door marked "Office." Mr. Heath, the senior partner, gray-haired and spectacled, looked up in surprise as she paused in front of his desk.

"If you please, Mr Heath, could I speak to you a few moments?" she asked.

"Why—er—yes, if it's anything important," acknowledged Mr. Heath.

"It's Apple Week," explained Alice, "and I thought it would be a good time to get rid of those pie plates we have had so long. And then we have some really fine molding boards and rolling pins made of hardwood and not a bit like the cheap splintery ones too many department stores are selling. And our paring knives are made of the best steel. Our kitchen ware would have sold faster only"—

She paused in sudden embarrassment afraid she had said too much.

"Only we haven't blown our own horn as loud as some of the stores, eh?" queried Mr. Heath, a twinkle in his eyes.

"Of course I don't believe in boasting," stammered Alice, "but an honest toot now and then would not do any harm, would it?"

The old man chuckled. "How many pie plates have we got on hand?" he asked.

"Forty-six dozen and eight," answered Alice. "I counted them yesterday."

"How many rolling pins and molding boards and paring knives?" he went on. He chuckled again as Alice gave him the exact number.

"Well, it does seem to me as if we have rather a surplus of tin pie plates," he agreed. "Go ahead and write your ad, just as you want it, and I'll have it put in the "Times" right away and speak to the window trimmer and tell him you want one window at least filled with a display of kitchen ware. You've started this thing, and I'll let you carry it out unhindered."

"Thank you," said Alice quickly and hurried away, afraid that he would retract his promise if she stayed and talked.

Ten minutes later Maud and Verna were amazed to find Alice busily rearranging the basement and giving the stacks of tin pie plates the place of honor.

"What in the world is going on here?" demanded Maud. "Do my eyes deceive me, or is that red crepe paper on that counter?"

"Your eyes are perfectly trustworthy," Alice assured her, holding out a pair of scissors, "so trustworthy that I want you to cut out the biggest, brightest 'Welcome' you know how to make. I want to hang it at the head of the basement stairway. Verna, you can make some garlands and wreaths if you will please."

Verna rubbed her eyes. "If I please," she repeated. "If I please, did you say? I'll please to tie a red bow on the handle of every saucepan and hang a wreath on every wringer and washtub if you'll let me. I love to make crepe paper decorations."

With such willing workers it was not long before the dingy basement began to assume a most unusual holiday-like appearance. The window trimmer, too, did his best, and before night the largest number of shoppers the clerks had seen in a month had found their way down into the basement.

"All the world loves a bargain," quoted Alice gayly. "Girls, there're only twenty dozen pie plates left. Before to-morrow night they'll all be gone, and how we shall miss them!"

"It's terrible to think about," lamented Maud mockingly. "That spider you are always chasing will be left defenseless if he can't hide behind those stacks of pie plates."

The next day it seemed to the girls as nearly every customer must have gone home and told her friends and relatives about the bargain sale at the emporium, for ten dozen more pie plates, besides a surprising assortment of other articles, had been taken away or marked "Sold" before noon. Although the girls, accustomed to the semi-gloom of the basement and the infrequent coming of customers, had enjoyed the sale almost as much as the busy horde of shoppers intent upon finding a "bargain," they were beginning to grow tired when the noon whistles set up their shrill clamor.

"There usually comes a lull about noon," Alice told Maud. "You and Verna go out and get a hot dinner. I have my lunch with me, and I won't have to go out, and to-morrow the sale will be over."

A plump, fussy woman looking for gem pans took up Alice's attention for some moments after Maud and Verna had gone out. when at last she finally found what she wanted and departed, Alice sat down in a corner of the basement and spread a newspaper on the corner of a wash bench to eat her lunch. She had finished her sandwich and begun on a mince turnover when she was suddenly surprised to see a tall, slim man, shabbily dressed, approach the cash register. The cash register, an old-fashioned, bronze-and-wood affair with a deep till, was the only one used in the basement. Knowing that there must be now a considerable sum of money in the drawer, Alice felt vaguely uneasy as the man paused and appeared to be looking at the register. Her uneasiness was increased by the queer fact that she had not seen the man come down the basement stairs, although she sat directly facing them. Back of the kitchen ware department was the main part of the cellar, now used as a storeroom. The windows were flush with the sidewalk, and Alice knew that if one of them should be open it would be comparatively an easy matter for a man as slight as the one before her to slip into the storeroom and remain for some time unnoticed. The very thought of such a thing gave her a cold chill, but she was naturally brave, and she put the thought away as absurd and unwarranted, as she came out of her corner to wait on the man. He gave a little start of surprise as he heard her cross the floor, and his black eyes swept her slender figure with what Alice imagined was a glance of relief.

"Mr. Heath asked me to look at the register," he explained politely. "It needs some repairs, I believe. My name is Brophy, Peter Brophy, and my business is fixing cash registers. Here is my card."

As he spoke he fumbled in his pocket and gave Alice a plain white business card bearing the name Peter Brophy. But instead of being quieted, Alice's suspicions had been intensified by the man's manner. He was too polite; it was as if he were trying to spread a veil of plausibility over his sudden appearance. The next instant she gave a start of alarm as a swift memory flashed through her mind. She had seen Peter Brophy, and he was a short, plump, blonde man; the man before her was slim and lithe and black-eyed and looked more like a tramp than a mechanic. Moved by some strange instinct of protection, she had stepped back behind the counter as she glanced at the card. Now, for the moment, she forgot her own danger and turned upon the impostor indignantly. "You are not Peter Brophy," she told him. "I have seen him, and I know. Get away from that cash register at once. You shall not touch it."

But as her expression changed, the man turned quickly and glared at her. "Shut up," he told her roughly. "Not another word out of you."

As he spoke he swiftly opened the sloping till and groped for the money that he knew must be in the various compartments. But as he did so he shifted his gaze from Alice to the money. That second of time, brief as it was, was long enough for Alice to drop behind the counter. Within reach of her hand was the stack of pie plates, all that remained of the forty dozen. Snatching up one of them, Alice sent it hurling toward the impostor. She knew nothing of discus throwing, but her aim was good, and the pie plate struck his face and seemed to blind him. She followed the first pie plate with another and another, throwing them as rapidly as possible. The whirlwind of pie plates confused the man so that he could not grab the money and run.

As Alice's shrieks for help mingled with the clatter of tin plates, there came an answering chorus of shouts and the tramp of heavy feet overhead. Alice caught a glimpse of Patsy Lowther, the big porter, fairly tumbling downstairs in his haste to get to the bottom, while behind him came Mr. Evans, the store detective, Mr. Heath, and several others.

"Try to steal the money, will you?" demanded Patsy wrathfully, as the man made a futile attempt to break the big porter's grip. "I'll teach you better than that."

As the store detective and Patsy led the impostor away Alice saw Mr. Heath coming toward her, striding unheedingly over the litter of tin plates. "Are you hurt, Miss Henderson?" he asked anxiously.

"No," said Alice, "thanks to the pie plates. He couldn't get near me. I never knew before that pie plates could be so useful as ammunition."

Mr. Heath's eyes twinkled. "They certainly made a clatter that attracted our attention," he remarked, "but the agate ones will probably sell better."

Alice glanced at him inquiringly. "Are we going to have some new pie plates, Mr. Heath." she asked.

Mr. Heath nodded. "Our kitchen ware department is to be entirely remodeled and brought up to date," he told her. "And we are going to have a new manager. Mr. Keath has asked to be transferred to the men's wear department."

It was on the tip of Alice's tongue to say that they would miss him, but she did not say it. Mr. Keath had been so little in the basement for some weeks that his continued absence would not disturb them greatly, she thought.

Mr. Heath was watching her keenly. "You haven't asked who the new manager of the kitchen ware department is to be," he reminded her with a chuckle. "Her name is Miss Alice Henderson."

Alice caught at the counter. Dazedly she stared at him. "But I—do you think I can do it?" she stammered.

"I think you are quite capable of managing the department, Miss Henderson," he assured her. "In fact, Mr. Warner and I have had you in mind for some time, but we are a little conservative you know and don't believe in jumping at conclusions, and we have been gradually testing you. That morning when I found you knew even the number of pie plates and paringknives in stock, I made up my mind we had chosen well. You will begin your new duties at once."

Maud stared at her. "What do you want of those old pie plates?" she demanded. "Haven't you seen enough of them?"

"No," returned Alice mischievously, "I haven't. I want them to look at, to remind me that opportunity can find its way into a bargain basement as well as anywhere else." —Lillian E. Andrews, in Presbyterian of the South. z

SELF-RELIANCE.

One of the first lessons a mother should teach her child is that of self-helpfulness—to accept no service of another which it can perform for itself; to ask no favor, or expect others to sacrifice their own ease to satisfy its individual wants. Teach it always to use is own resources from which to supply deficiences and bridge over emergencies.

Self-reliant people are rarely selfish people rarely ready to accuse others of being selfish but are generally possessed of ability with which to assist less fortunate associates. Being concious of their own strength, they need no prop, they know the limits of their own power, and the amount of reserve force they may count upon, and can thus calculate to some purpose, not only in directing their own energies, but infusing strength in others.

The self-reliant person, knowing his own worth, and acting upon this knowledge, rarely fails to succeed in whatever line he undertakes

The child should be taught from its earliest years, not only to wait upon itself, but to be watchful for little services that may be rendered to another—not for reward, but because it is right, and because this watchfulness will create a habit of observation and thought that will be of great service to him in the years to come, making him a blessing to his companions, as well a comfort to himself. A selfish person is the most wretched thing on earth—and the most unloved.—Selected.

—Registration of students for High Point college is in advance of last year, President Andrews states. An increased attendance is expected this year. Adrian College ran for nearly fifty years we believe before it had as many students as High Point College had the first year.

—That is a shocking accident reported from Lebanon church. The little boy will have the sympathy of all who read of his injury.

Carolina Church, Fairview Circuit.—One of the most interesting meetings held in recent years at this church was the one just closed. It began Sunday, June 27th, and continued for ten days. Rev. H. L. Isley did the preaching under which twelve people were converted four of which united with our church. The singing was in charge of Wayne Curtis. The spiritual condition of our church seems to be growing now and our forty members are looking forward to the time when they shall have a church building of their own in which to worship. C. G. Isley.

Orange Charge.—The third quarterly conference convened at Chestnut Ridge Saturday, July 31st. Each church was represented. The reports were encouraging.

The usual business was transacted. M. P. Efland was declared delegate elected to represent this charge in the next annual conference.

Only three more months of this conference year. Much yet to be done if we are able to take up a good report to conference.

B. M. Williams.

High Point.—Many friends through this section will be grieved to learn that the condition of Miss Millie Bowman is critical, and her physician, Dr. Taylor, gives scant hope for her recovery. Miss Bowman is at the Children's Home, where she has been a faithful worker and Bible teacher for several years. She has been patient and pains taking in drilling the children in Bible verses, and the Home and its family have never had a more loyal friend and helper than Miss Bowman. Her health for more than a year has not been robust, but for the past few months has seemed better, and she has been attending church services. On last Sunday she was evidently taken much worse, and her condition since then has been very grave. Mrs. Robert Brooks the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hal Bencini, is also critically ill at the High Point Hospital. Numbers of friends will join in earnest prayers for the recovery of these dear women, who are greatly loved.

On Sunday morning the pastor, Dr. Brown, delivered a fine sermon from the text, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Dr. Brown has the happy faculty of preaching short and pithy sermons of a few minutes duration. He said that many people are today fishing for pleasure. Thousands drive in their automobiles every Sunday to the Mountains or seashore in pursuit of pleasure, only to return at nightfall disappointed and unhappy. The only way to acquire a calm and contented spirit is to accept Christ and to follow His teachings. The pastor begged his flock here never to forget, even after he has passed on to another world and if all else that he has spoken from this pulpit be effaced from their memory, that his greatest joy has been to uphold Jesus Christ as the guide and Savior of men and the "one altogether lovely."

A most interesting feature of the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies on Monday afternoon was the program rendered by the members of the Junior Mission Circle. These ten children sang hymns and repeated a Psalm. Then each one represented a missionary in either the foreign or home field and gave a short account of his or her life and service. This is a splendid way in which to teach the children the names of our missionaries, and their fields of service. These children are ably trained by their leader, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, who is giving much time and thought to her work with them.

The pastor took occasion to commend the fine work of the Christian Endeavor Society on the bulletin last Sunday. These young people are faithful and exemplary.

Miss Mary Wills McCulloch of Greensboro is the guest of her sister, Mrs. H. A. Garrett.

Mrs. A.M. Rankin returned yesterday from a visit of three weeks to her sister, Mrs. R. N. Noble of Chicago.

Notes From Cleveland Circuit.

Hope the Herald readers have not forgotten us. We are still alive. You haven't seen much in print from our circuit lately, but we are still doing some fine work. Our Sunday schools all are in fine shape and having a good attendance. Our Sunday school rally met with Mt. Moriah the 2nd Sunday in July, with a splendid program, with each school taking a part in the program. Brother E. M. Ivester and our pastor made two short talks in the morning and Brother E. A. Bingham also made a fine talk to our young people in the afternoon.

Our collection for missions was $8.69.

The revival meeting at Mt. Pleasant closed August 15th with much success. The pulpit help was Brother E. A. Bingham of Bess Chapel.

A fine program was rendered by the Christian Endeavor Society at Oak Grove Sunday night, July 18th. A large congregation was present. A missionary collection was taken which was $7.25.

The revival meeting at Oak Grove closed August 1st with a good number of professions, with several additions to the church. Our pulpit help was J. M. Morgan. We appreciate the faithful work Brother Morgan did for us.

Our pastor is holding a meeting at Kistlers this week with Brother W. L. Carson of Lincolnton, N. C., to help him. We hope and pray they will have a good meeting there.

May the Lord bless the Herald and its many readers. Charlie Grant.

Shiloh, North Davidson Ct.—There will be a consecration prayer meeting held at Shiloh church on Sunday night of August 8th, that being next Sunday night. Doubtless we all need to confess our faults and mistakes and come into closer communion with the Master that we may be more efficient workers in His vineyard. We hope every one who possibly can will be at the prayer meeting next Sunday night.

Denton.—The church here was dedicated today, Rev. A. G. Dixon, President, preached the dedication sermon at 11 o'clock, also preached at night.

Today is the beginning of a series of revival meetings which will continue for ten days, Rev. J. L. Trollinger of the First M. P. Church of Thomasville will preach, Bro. Trollinger will be here tomorrow, Monday.

At the dedication services a brief history of the M. P. Church was given by Mr. J. M. Daniel, Sr.

History.

The M. P. Church of Denton, was organized A. D., 1901. From this date church services were held in the auditorium of the M. P. school building, which at that time belonged to the North Carolina M. P. Conference. In the year 1911 the first M. P. Church was built, located on West Salisbury St. On November the 23, 1915, the church building was destroyed by fire, yet the church (the church membership) was not destroyed and continuing to exist, going back to school auditorium and worshiping there until they could build another house in which to worship. So in the year 1917 a church building was planned, after having had a great loss, with about $700. indebtedness on the church which was burned, with no insurance on the building that was burned it was a great undertaking. The building is now complete and all indebtedness paid, it is a glad day to have part in this service.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Our Sunday school held its annual picnic on the church grounds last Saturday. The program for the morning (beginning at 10:30) was as follows: Song period by the choir and congregation. Devotional exercise by Bro. Millaway, and then some remarks by him about the singing. Announcements by the superintendent, H. F. Amick. Debate: query, Resolved, that the church is losing ground. Affirmative, W. L. Spoon. Negative, J. E. Stafford.

Remarks by the chairman of the program committee, S. A. Alexander.

A short time was given then for recreation.

At 12:30 a most bountiful and delicious lunch was spread on a long table in the grove, and every one did their best in trying to dispose of all the good eats, but this was impossible, for we had left over to take home.

We had visitors, too; glad to have you. Come again next year.

The afternoon was given over entirely to recreation and conversation. During this time various games were played, and everyone present went home, feeling, we trust, that the day had been well-spent and feeling more interested in the Sunday school and its work.

Saturday afternoon the third quarterly conference convened at Mt. Pleasant church. Messrs Charley Sheppard and Charley Coble were the nominees for the annual conference. Charley Sheppard was elected.

ere quietly married at the M. P. Parsonage, ednesday moning, July 28, Rev. D. R. Wilams, pastor of the bride, officiated. Only embers of the family and a few intimate iends were present. The wedding came as a mplete surprise to the many friends of the ung couple.

DIED.

Mrs. Dorthula Virginia Smith.

Dorthula Virginia McPherson, born September 28, 1850, died July 22,1926. She was married to J. C. Smith March 20, 1871. To this union were born nine children of which seven are still living as follows: Mrs. W. B. Cooper, J. A. Cooper, B. E. Fox and Miss Sallie Smith of Siler City, T. R. Smith of Siler City, Willie Smith of Liberty, and Leopold Smith of Greensboro. She has 25 grandchildren, and seven great grand children. She has only one living brother, J. P. McPherson of Siler City, Route 1. She joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Piney Grove in early girlhood, and has been a faithful member all her life.

Memoir.

Thomas Wesley Long, born Dec. 1, 1850, died July 24, 1926. The deceased had been in declining health several years. Was confined to his bed forty-five weeks. He bore his affliction without murmuring or complaint.

He is survived by his wife, and six children, seventeen grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

His sons are Dr. S. W., Jesse L, Grady H., and Emory R. His daughters are Carrie E. and Mrs. Mamie L. Tate. One daughter and two grandchildren preceded him to the "Bright Beyond" some years ago.

He had five sisters and four brothers. Two brothers and two sisters survive him.

He was converted in early boyhood and joined the church at Pleasant Hill and has lived a consecrated Christian life. He was an affectionate husband and father, ever ready to lend a helping hand, and do any labor he could do. He enjoyed having his friends and neighbors visit him, especially so during his long illness. Indeed his friends seemed almost numberless. He will be missed in the home he loved so well; in his children's homes; and in the community.

All that loving hands, and the skill of physicians could do could not stay the hand of death.

In memory's love we see you
While in sorrow we are alone,
We saw you suffer,
Heard you sigh,
Sweetest thought
Shall ever linger,
And in Heaven
We will meet you
Some bright sweet day.
The Golden Gates were opened wide
A gentle voice said, Come,
And Angels from the other side
Welcomed Father home.

"WHERE ARE THE NINE?"

With a sad heart, the Healer of bodies and Savior of souls made this inquiry in regard to the nine ungrateful lepers whom He had healed. How quickly they forgot the Source of their greatest physical benefit. How short their acquaintance with this wonderful man of Gallilee! How slight the impression He made upon their hearts! And how vain and empty would be their renewed lives without Him!

And is not this wail of sore disappointment ringing from the mediatorial throne today? Where are the nine that took the sacred vow "to renounce the devil and all his works," and have not kept it? Where are the nine who promised to go and work in the Lord's vineyard, and have remained all the day idle? Where are the nine who resolved to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," and are still sitting at ease in Zion. And where are the nine who started out so auspiciously to love God with all their heart, mind, soul and strength, and have gone back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world?

Does not such recreancy crucify the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame? Does not such ingratitude, disobedience, and unfaithfulness bring tears of shame to the eyes of the Savior of men?

Let us repent of our lack of loyalty. Let us hunger and thirst after more righteousness. Let us seek the heavenly places of fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." Let us get on higher ground of Christly living. Let us plunge boldly, delightedly, and confidently into the field of holy service. And let us meet in the full the prophetic requirement "to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

—On account of rain Calvary church had to postpone its Sunday school picnic last week. The time fixed upon was Wednesday of this week. If rain interferes again, it is understood that Saturday will be the day.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Peacemakers.

Text: "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 5:9.

Peace is a cardinal trait of Christian character. The Prince of peace is the Author and Source of this peace that passeth all understanding." It comes through the experience of justification by faith. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The peace with God makes it imperative that we live in peace with our neighbor and the entire world. Lack of brotherly harmony with our fellowman is destructive of any peace with God. In fact hatred of our brother makes peace with God impossible. "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you." Let us first consider

The Peace With God.

Lost, sinful man is at enmity with God. He lives, moves, and has his being in open rebellion against the Almighty Sovereign of the universe. He defies divine authority by disobediance. He insults divine mercy by unbelief. And he invites the retribution of divine justice by reckless continuance in sin.

This enmity is all the worse because it is directed against a Friend, the best possible Friend, the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, the Friend of sinners. For this Friend is kind and good to every one. "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

Jesus Christ is the Mediator between God and man to bring about peace and good will. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us....For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."

The Scriptures nowhere speak of God being reconciled to man. He is already reconciled in the exercise of infinite mercy. The claims of justice must needs be met by the sacrifice of Jesus Christ on the cross. Man is the offender, He must needs be reconciled. "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ stead, be ye reconciled to God."

To thus make peace with God through faith in Jesus Christ, admits us unto the family of God Almighty. There is given unto us "the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." Blessed are they that make peace with God, for they shall be called the children of God.

In the next place let us consider

The Peace With Our Neighbor.

The apostle exhorts us to "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." There must be the peace of actual friendliness between man and man. Disagreements are unavoidable. People don't think alike; and they can't think alike. But there is no variation in the procedure of love. "He fashioneth all their hearts alike." We all love in the same way. We can and should, love everybody. "The love of Christ constraineth us" so to do.

Hate and malice are destructive of childhood in the Kingdom of God. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." To be right with God one needs to be right also with his fellowmen. "Is thine heart right, even as my heart is with thine heart? If it be, give me thine hand."

It is not enough to be right and loving ourselves; we must see to it that our neighbors are at peace with each other. It is Christlike to seek to reconcile warring factions and unfriendly individuals. A Christian's responsibility does not end at his own front door. In fact there is where it begins. The charity that makes peace, to be sure, begins at home, but its real mission extends to the entire community and throughout the world. Blessed are they that make peace between man and man; for the heavenly Father will recognize them as His own beloved children.

In the last place let us consider

The Peace With The Entire World.

War is entirely too common. War is entirely repugnant to the sensibilities of the Most High. War is hell. It is the devil's most gigantic and shameful method of destruction. Into this maelstrom of iniquity go thousands of precious lives, millions of property, the virtue of countless men and women, and a loud-mouthed defiance of the authority, goodness, and love of God. O for a holy crusade to end all war!

Treaties, Leagues, and World Courts will not end war. They can't. Nothing short of the rule of the Prince of Peace will end war. The depravity of the human heart must be displaced by the love of God that impels a love for all mankind. A regenerated world will produce a warless world, and nothing else will.

The issue of world peace in its ultimate bearing is not a political issue. It cannot legislated into existence. It cannot be reali by a mutual agreement of the nations. I a religious issue. The power of the gospel Jesus Christ can and will bring it about. T blessed gospel will eventually compel warr nations to "beat their swords into plowsha and their spears into pruning-hooks: na shall not lift up sword against nation, neit shall they learn war anymore." In this mil nial age "the wolf also shall dwell with lamb and the leopard shall lie down with kid; and the calf and the young lion and fatling together; and a little child shall l them."

Let us hasten that happy day. Let us g Jesus Christ the entire right of way into hearts, and into our civil life, and into ev national and international relationship. us pray for the coming Kingdom of pe love, and Christian fellowship. And let count most earnestly the distinguished ho of this beastitude: "Blessed are the pe makers; for they shall be called the child of God."

—The meeting at Tabernacle is still go on with increasing interesting. Rev. S. Taylor is preaching there.

DEATH AND BURIAL OF REV. J. H. BOWMAN.

Miss Millie Bowman was buried at Pleasant Union Church on Thursday of last week. Little did any one expect that another of the family would follow in less than a week. But such was to be the case. Last Sunday the report spread with great rapidly that Rev. J. H. Bowman, brother of Miss Millie, had been killed in an auto accident on the way to the church (Bonlee) where he was to begin a special meeting. Later the report was corrected and made to read that he had suddenly died in his car and as a result his car had swerved from the road and plunged over an embankment. Both apoplexy and heart failure have been assigned as the cause of his death. The report of his death was a startling one. He had seemed so strong.

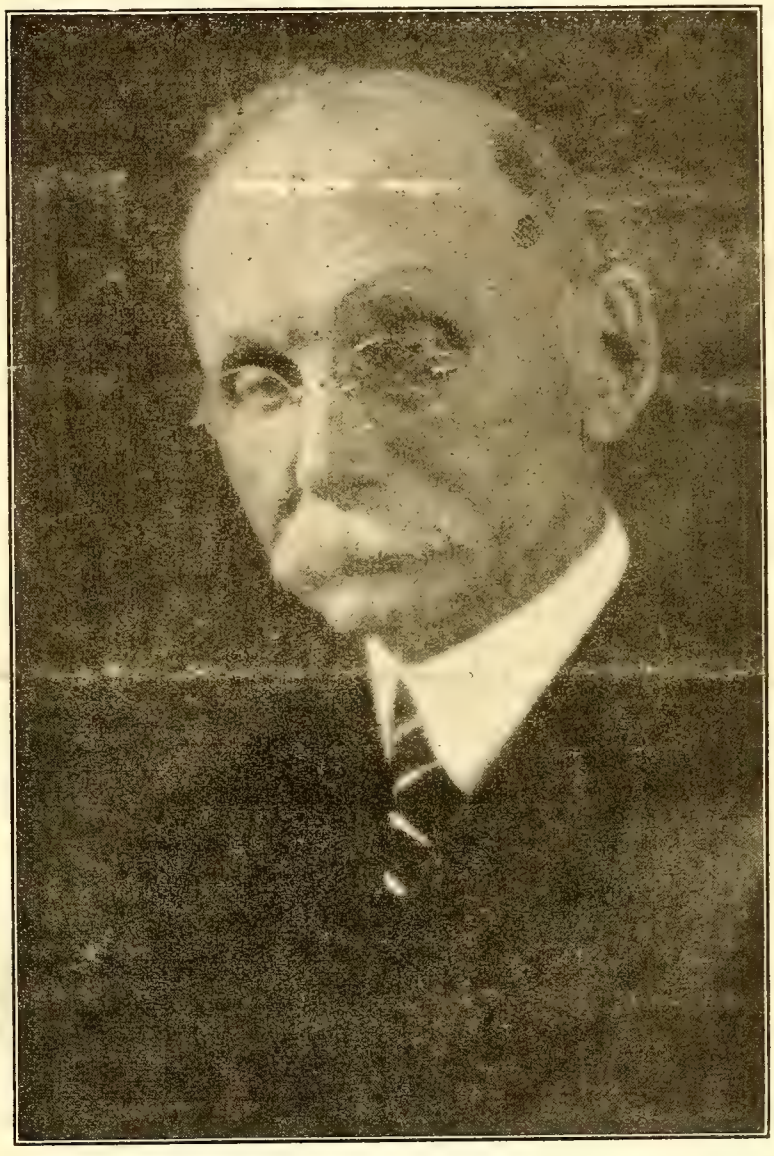
A great throng gathered at Pleasant Union on Monday at three o'clock to attend the funeral service. Dr. A. G. Dixon, president of the Annual Conference, conducted the service. Parts were taken by Rev. J. D. Williams, Rev. G. F. Millaway, Rev. J. A. Burgess, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Dr. R. M. Andrews, and Dr. George R. Brown. The following ministers and perhaps others were present also: Highfill, Dosier, Neese, Taylor, H. L. Isley, T. F. McCulloch, Gibbs, Johnson, Lowdermilk, A. O. Lindley, Hendren, L. W. Gerringer, and the pastor of the M. E. Church in Siler City.

Bro. Millaway as pastor gave a sketch of the character and labors of Bro. Bowman, referring to him as one of the noblest of the community. Bro. Pritchard spoke of the deceased as his father in the ministry and expressed great obligation for personal help and encouragement received at various times and in various ways. Bro. Burgess spoke of the fruitfulness of Bro. Bowman's labors as a minister, and declared that only eternity can reveal fully the good his life has wrought.

When the coffin was opened to view the body for the last time, it required much time for all to pass by, so many were there. How natural he appeared. He seemed to be only sleeping. And to the Christian death is only a sleep.

The songs for the occasion were sung by Rev. Mr. Ballard, and Mr. and Mrs. Teague and Miss Annie Jobe, of Grace Church, Greensboro. Many beautiful flowers were contributed by friends.

What a difference the death will make in Pleasant Union community. Not only will the family miss Bro. Bowman but his neighbors and friends will be conscious of a great loss. We read that Enoch walked with God, and was not, for God took him. We may say of Brother Bowman that he was not for God took him—took him in the midst of his labors, took him to the rest that remains for the people of God.



REV. F. C. KLEIN, SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The morning after Brother Bowman's death our mail brought us a letter from him. We recognized his familiar handwriting and saw his name on the envelope. We hesitated to open the letter. We wondered what it contained. Was he writing his farewell to the church? Was he communicating to us some premonition of the near approach of death? No, he seemed not to suspect that the end was near. It was simply a short business letter such as he had written many times before. Had he known that death was near, would he not have gone on as he did—in the way of duty? He died in service. He fell with his face to the enemy.

—Have you taken your vacation? We are beginning to wonder when we can take ours.

THE MINISTER AS PRIEST.

By Rev. S. W. Taylor.

(This address was delivered at the recent Pastor's Summer Conference at High Point College, and is published in Herald by request of the Conference.)

In dealing with this side of the "FOUR-SQUARE MINISTER," the program committee had in mind, they tell me, the place of prayer, both public and private, in the life of a minister. And our discussion may be widened, they say, so as to include in its scope the relation of the minister to the entire program of public worship.

With the ground cleared by this statement, as to what is implied in our subject, we are now ready for our discussion.

I.

The Private Prayer-Life of the Priest of God.

If, as James Montgomery sings,

"Prayer is the christian's vital breath,
The christian's native air,"

then the minister of God, of all other men should be a man of prayer. In fact, it seems impossible to think of God's ambassador, charged with responsibilities that no man is equal to in his own strength, not being found frequently in the place of prayer. For priest and prophet, who have prevailed with God and with men, prayer has always been a sure retreat. We do not have to surmise this; the records are open to us, and by these we know that priest and prophet of old, who were not disappointing to God, were all men of prayer. Abraham is known as the "Altar Builder;" Jacob wrestled with God all night, and would not let him go until the blessing came. Such statements as the following are significant:—"Moses prayed for the people;" "Samuel prayed to the Lord;" "Elisha prayed to the Lord;" "Now when Ezra had prayed;" "Jeremiah prayed;" "Isaiah prayed;" Daniel kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed, and gave thanks unto God. Many like references might be cited, but these will suffice. And it should be said that these detached expressions are not descriptive of what was casual in the lives of these men of God; they are indicative, rather, of their habitual spirit and practice. They were all men who lived close to God in prayer.

And what was true of these Old Testament characters, is likewise true of God's later priests and prophets, even the latest. The Apostles and the men who labored with them, relied on prayer. They knew the "Place where Jesus shed

The oil of gladness on their heads;
A place than all besides more sweet—
The blood-bought mercy seat."

Paul, the chief of all God's latest priests, was speaking out of his own experience when he exhorted the Thessalonians to "pray without ceasing;" the Romans to "continue instant in prayer;" the Colossians to "continue in prayer and to watch in the same." Peter was on the house top in prayer when the vision came that set him right in his understanding of God's purposes toward the Gentiles.

And what shall we say of the great hosts of God's ministers, even down to this hour, who have stood, each in his place, whether in the world's glare, or humble and unknown, what shall we say of them but that they have been, and are, men of prayer? Unfortunately this may not be true of every one whom God has called. Some, alas! neglect prayer, and fall out by the way. It is true, however, and must ever be of every one who ministers for God in holy things, and who remains steadfast unto the end.

Three facts of his high calling make prayer inevitable for God's Priests.

1. Prayer Is The Natural Expression Of His Soul.

For the true priest of God, nothing can be more natural than prayer. By the very nature of his calling he walks and talks with God. The Holy of Holies is his privilege and his imperative necessity. The natural outgoings of his soul are heavenward. His "delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

Habakkuk, God's ancient and faithful prophet of Judah, expresses for us what is the natural and loving attitude of the true priest of God. Hear him in his prayer, recorded in the last chapter of his prophecy:

"Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls;

Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

The Lord God is my strength, and he will make my feet like hind's feet, and he will make me to walk upon mine high places.

To this prophet, communion with God in prayer was his joy and his crown—the natural, joyful, confident expression of his soul. And so it is, and so it must ever be with God's true priests.

"Lord, till I reach that blissful shore,
No privilege so dear shall be,
As thus my inmost soul to pour
In prayer to thee."

2. The Nourishing Of His Own Soul Demands It.

The doctor who keeps others well may himself get sick. Likewise the priest of God who ministers in spiritual things to others may find his own soul impoverished.

A prominent and able minister of a large city church said, with regret, "I do not have time to be spiritual." So many demands were being made on his time that none seemed left for the nourishing of his own soul. But of all men, the priest of God MUST "Take time to be holy."

When Doctor Jowett, the late and lamented prince of preachers, went to New York to become pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, he was heralded in big type by the large dailies of the country. And of course a man who was a towering preacher on two continents would be much in demand by the public. Mr. Jowett knew the danger to which these demands would subject his own soul, and promptly and resolutely he refused to be drawn away from his ministry. To him, preaching the Gospel was preeminently the "one thing," and to it he persistently gave first place. Like the great Apostle, he would "finish his course with joy," and the minist which he had received of the Lord Jesus. A to do this, he felt that he must, of all thing KEEP HIS SOUL FIT.

Togo, the great Japan Admiral, who di tinguished himself in the war between Jap and Russia, furnishes us an example in att tude and purpose that must characteri every minister of Jesus Christ.

When he was sent by his government destroy the Russian fleet many disparagin thoughts engaged his mind. "Where is t Russian fleet?" "Can I overtake it?" "If find it, can I destroy it?" "If I win the vi tory, what will be the price in human lives? These, and many other deterring thought were constantly present to the mind of t great Admiral. But this is the way he m them all: "A THOUSAND CONFLICTIN THOUGHTS, BUT ONE FIXED PU POSE." And all the world knows the resul

As the priest of God goes forth on his Go given mission, not to kill but to save lif there will likewise be for him a "Thousan conflicting thoughts, but always there mus be "One fixed purpose"—he MUST kee himself SPIRITUALLY FIT. He can n more perform the duties of his high callin with a withered soul than he can labor wit a withered hand. If he is to blow with th trumpet and give forth no uncertain soun he must, above everything else, be SPIRIT UALLY FIT.

To this necessary end, prayer is indispens able. Over and over again Jesus was sayin to the Twelve, "Pray." Both by precept an example he burned into their souls the neces sity of prayer. His life and his teaching taught them that they could no more liv spiritually without prayer than they coul live physically without bread. He prayed fo them and with them until their minds wer charged with the necessity of prayer as means of keeping their own souls fit for th mighty work committed to their hands.

Charles Wesley, the sweet singer of Meth odism, knew the value of prayer to a minis ter's own soul, when he wrote,

"Pray without ceasing, pray;
Your Captain gives the word;
His summons cheerfully obey,
And call upon the Lord.
"To God your every want
In instant prayer display;
Pray always; pray, and never faint;
Pray without ceasing, pray."

3. The Problems Of The Parish Make I Necessary For The Priest Of God To Pray.

No other class of persons in the whol world are charged with such tremendous re sponsibilities, and stimulated by such abound ing opportunities as is the priest of God. His business always and every where is to giv deliverance to those who are in bondage. The true minister of God feels, as did his grea High Priest,

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, be cause he hath anointed me to preach th gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to hea the broken hearted; to preach deliverance t the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

From Paul, down to the most obscure minister upon whom God has laid his hands for priestly service, there is the feeling, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

Such a privilege, such a task, such a responsibility, is too overwhelming for human strength. Only the power that is from above makes any man equal to it. The greatest of all preachers drew constantly upon this source of unfailing power. When he had a great decision to make, as the choosing of his twelve disciples, he spent the entire night in prayer. When his humanity was flattered, and he felt the need of keeping humble, as when the people wanted to make him their king, he retired alone to the mountain side and in the silence of the night communed long hours with the Father. When his work was heavy upon him and, his opportunities great, as in Capernaum on the first Sabbath in his adopted city, he arose a great while before day and went out alone to pray. Our Great High Priest could not carry the tremendous responsibilities of his ministry and finish the work that was committed to him without spending much time in prayer. Over and over again he sought the secret place of the Most High, and from there he went forth with clearer light and quickened powers to accomplish the great mission that the Father had given to him. From the day that he said, "I must be about my Father's business" until that moment of triumph on the cross, when, in the consciousness of a completed task, he cried, "It is finished," his life was permeated with prayer.

And this practice, so real and so constant in the life of our Lord, he enjoins upon those whom he calls to be his ministers. Again and again he talked to his disciples about prayer. They themselves felt the need of it, and asked him to teach them to pray. His reply was the matchless formula that the world has repeated ever since. And listen further how he talked to them:

"Whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive it, and ye shall have it."

"If ye ask anything in my name, it shall be done for you of my Father."

And again: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."'

There can be no doubt that Jesus felt that these men who were to preach his gospel to a hostile and sin-cursed world must of necessity be men of prayer. They took up their work imbued with that spirit, and to the end of their ministry, prayer was their vital breath.

It must be so with God's priest today. Prayer alone will bring him light; prayer alone will make him strong; prayer alone will solve his problems; prayer alone will give power to his message and testimony to his life.

Above everything else, the minister of Christ is to be a soul-winner. This is the ultimate end of all that he does. If he succeeds in this, his life must be permeated with the prayer-spirit. He can not succeed with the inner until he has first had success with God.

Doctor Wilbur H. Chapman, the great Presbyterian evangelist, tells of receiving a letter from an interested person in which he was asked to state on a postal card how to win souls. Doctor Chapman knew that the best thought of the christian world had been given to that subject. Volume after volume had been written upon it, many of which he had read; and yet here came the strange request that he state on a postal card the secret of soul-winning. After renewed reflection he said that he came to the conclusion that the secret of soul-winning could be stated on a postal card, and in one word, and that word is PRAYER.

I shall raise no issue with him in the matter. He may or may not be correct. One thing, however, is certain: there is no soul-winning where there is no prayer. A passion for souls is born of a spirit of prayer, and where this spirit is lacking the people perish. In fact, I doubt if I am very far afield when I say that every spiritual weakness in the church, and in the ministry of the church, is traceable to a lack of the prayer spirit. There is no spiritual weakness that hedges about the minister of the Lord Jesus from which prayer will not deliver him. I am convinced that no minister of Christ is under any necessity of doing his work in spiritual weakness, or any other weakness, as to that matter, that prevents him from filling up the full measure of service that God expects of him.

Paul is a striking illustration of this statement. Three times he prayed, and the answer was, "My grace will be sufficient for Thee." For his physical infirmities God will make grace abound toward the man upon whom he causes holy hands to be laid. And for his spiritual necessities there is always abounding grace. This is the meaning of Paul when he said, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Brethren, we may do our work in weakness, but I doubt if we can justify it. It is the privilege of every child of God to be "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," how much more, then, must this be the privilege of those who are the ministers of light? God has never yet called a man to do a work without making available the power necessary to do it. To his disciples the Master said,

"If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye may say to this mountain, be thou removed, and cast into yonder sea, and it shall be done."

He wanted them to know that as his ministers there should be for them individually, and for their work, no insurmountable difficulties. But that was not enough for his love and complete appreciation of their needs. His final parting words must be an assurance to them that all of their needs would be supplied. Standing with them on the mountain side, just as the heavens opened to receive him out of their sight, he said to them.

"Lo I am with you, even unto the end of the world."

What blessed assurance; and how unfailing it was fulfilled in them! And not only in them, but in us also. There is for our feet a path that leads straight to the source of all power, and all wisdom, and all light; and we are bidden to "come boldly that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need." The man whom God calls to take upon himself divine orders is set apart for a divinely appointed work, and everything that he needs to do that work to the glory of God, God will graciously and unfailingly supply. The only condition is that he keep in range with the power. And to keep himself there he must be often on his knees.

O Brethren, let us see to it that we know for ourselves the power of prayer!

"Take time to be holy; speak oft with thy Lord
Spend much time in secret with Jesus alone,
Thus led by his Spirit to fountains of love
Thou soon shalt be fitted for service above." (Continued next week.)

THE CONFESSIONS OF A YOUNG PREACHER.

Rev. A. Ritchie Low.

It is unusual for a mere youth in his first pastorate to put into writing his confessions. Not infrequently they belong to the posthumous period. Perhaps that is the wiser method. I am situated in a very quiet, remote village, one that is nestled and secluded among the tall trees of the quaint hills of northern Vermont. The Baptists have the only Protestant church in town, so that, ecclesiastically speaking, we are monarch of all we survey.

Notwithstanding our very extensive church program, I find time hangs heavily upon my hands. To be frank, since settling in the pastorate I have suffered keenly from loneliness. Those of my readers who are seasoned veterans will not fail to understand me. A man may be surrounded by people and yet be lonely. The fact that I have hitherto lived in the city enhances this feeling.

Every now and then the spirit of introspection and reminiscence overtakes me. It is only old men who are supposed to have these spells. It depends on the man. Some men are older at twenty-five than others at forty. It is not the years but what takes place between them that counts. Frequently I sit in the old chair that adorns my study, look out toward the picturesque hills that surround us, and ask myself a few pertinent questions: Am I really amounting to anything? Is this town a better place to live in because of my being here? Would Jesus of Nazareth put His stamp of approval upon my feeble efforts? These and other queries come into my mind as I brood over my life's work.

I have even gone so far as to question my loyalty to my Master. Certain specific experiences have led to this spirit of distrust in my own consecration. A few years ago I was listening intently to a street-corner meeting. A few zealous souls from a near-by mission were braving the criticism of a none-too-sympathetic gathering and were fervently setting forth the advantages of accepting Christ as the Way of Life.

I wanted to be near enough to be able to hear, yet desired to be far enough away so as not to be too conspicuous. I did not wish the onlookers to consider me as one of the "nut"—and I a theological student and a supposed follower of Him who did most of His preaching in the open air!

Speaker after speaker mounted the platform, and I listened with manifest approval to their denunciation of sin and their declaration of the nearness of the approach of the Lord. Their ardor, their tremendous earnestness, and their evident sincerity enthralled me. As I stood on the corner taking it all in, I spied one of the speakers making his way toward me. I had misgivings as to his motives. Maybe he was coming to convert me—a student of theology!

To my utter surprise, he turned out to be an old friend, who said he saw me among the crowd as he was speaking, and had come to invite me to "say a word." I protested vigorously, made every excuse imaginable—reminded him that I was only a student, that while I preached a little, it had been in either a hall or a church. My voice, I went on to say, was weak, was utterly useless for open-air preaching. Besides, I was wholly unaccustomed to that sort of gathering. But deep down in my heart I was asking myself the question: "Suppose my friends or chums should see me, what would they think and say?" This partly accounted for my reluctance.

But my good friend was not to be got rid of so easily. He realized my apparent embarrassment and all that, said that he too had had similar experiences, but then added, "You'll get along all right." He made his way toward the little band of zealots, mounted the box that served as a platform, and, as boldly as Paul on Mar's Hill, declared, "There is a young fellow in the crowd who is going to say a word," and invited me to the ring. My heart palpitated. I panted for breath. I felt as if I was going to meet my Waterloo.

It was with diffidence and a deep sense of embarrassment that I got up on that "platform." I cannot recall what I said, but what I did say cost me intense agony.

I had served in the army during the war, and I knew something of the danger of dodging lurking submarines, had experienced the pangs of hunger, knew what it was to be "strafed" by the enemy artillery, had endured the excruciating sensation of being in the proximity of bombing planes; but I have to confess that none of these things caused me the mental anguish that the mere attempt to proclaim the Master did as I stood on that box on that never-to-be-forgotten day.

What was the reason? I cannot say, Why is it that I was willing to do for my country what I was not prepared to do for Him whom I call my Savior? What was it that made me anxious to die, if need be, for the things that are seen and are temporal, while afraid to say even a word for the things that are unseen and eternal? These are some of the things I am asking myself as I sit here in my study. This is confession number one.

When I first began preaching as a student pastor, I had a similar experience. While out calling one day I had occasion to visit one of the poorer homes of the community. The couple had been married by me only a little while previous, but notwithstanding this the wife was nursing a month-old baby. She was a divorcee, an American, a nominal Protestant, while her newly acquired husband was a widower, a foreigner, and a Roman Catholic, who, because of his reluctance to separate from his newly found companion, was forced to leave his church. The attitude of the priest was justified, as the subsequent arrival and the inevitable marriage proved.

My reception was warm and cordial. I was led through a dark, dingy kitchen into what the woman called her sitting-room. The place had the appearance of a second-hand store, the sort one finds in the poor districts of a large city. It was the old, old combination of poverty, dirt, and children, that sad trinity of the slums.

There were two chairs in the room—a rocker and an old kitchen chair minus a back. I was invited to sit in the rocker but declined and insisted that my hostess accept it, while I busied myself removing the old cloths that clung to the other chair. I made the best of a disagreeable job without showing too much embarrassment.

What should I say? What could I say? What ought I to say under such circumstances? My hand went into my overcoat pocket and the tips of my fingers touched the edge of my little "Weymouth." I instinctively knew what I ought to say, but the same strange feeling that overtook me before, again made its presence felt. While outwardly I was serene and calm and was engaging in pleasant platitudes about the weather and the children, within a tempest was raging.

I said to myself: "Ritchie Low, you are a coward. You are afraid! What? I, who have faced the ordeals of the great conflict of nations, afraid of a poor, ignorant, sinful woman? Never. I will be brave and speak my mind." And I did. I pulled out my New Testament, read an appropriate passage or two, and had a quiet, earnest talk about her soul's welfare, telling her about One who came that she might have life and have it more abundantly.

She listened very attentively. The story seemed to be familiar. Finally, we both knelt down. I asked her to pray, but she intimated that as she was not accustomed to praying, she would prefer that I pray on her behalf. My prayer was short but earnest. If ever I realized I was an ambassador of God, it was at that moment.

When we got up from our knees she promised to make a new start. Was she converted? I do not know. But when I left that little home I was conscious of an inconceivable intimacy with the Master. The knowledge that I had fully done what I considered my duty no doubt accounted for my exuberant spirits.

Quite recently I have been asking myself: What is it that enables us to prate against sinners from the pulpit, but makes cowards of us when we meet them face to face?

Can it be that too many of us resemble Stevenson's story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. We are heroic in public speaking but pusillanimous in private conversation. It was only this morning that I came across the following quotation found in "The Reformed Pastor": "We have no hesitation in saying that the most of preachers whom we have known, were essentially defective in the grand and primary object of the Christian ministry—laboring for the conversion of souls."

What a coincidence and what an in ment. Still, like Paul, I am perplexed bu in despair. It is my determination to f the things that are behind—my mistakes pusillanimity, my lack of consecration, press on toward the mark for the prize o high calling of God in Christ Jesus. So me God!

"I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Shouldst lead me on;
I loved to choose and see my path; but
Lead Thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fear
Pride ruled my will. Remember not years!"

COLLEGE ASSESSMENT.

n the 1925 Conference Journal, under "Ta-men on all charges, which have not al-

Concord.—A large congregation greeted the stor at both services yesterday. The sermon hich Mr. Fogleman preached at the eleven clock service was a very interesting and lpful one. At the evening service he took s text from the book of Psalms. "No man reth for my soul." The subject for the ev-ing was "A Prisoner's Defense."

Since the last report has been made the ildren from the Home visited our church at e evening worship and rendered a fine pro-am. About fifteen children came, and also
r. Lowdermilk and one of his assistants.
e are always glad when the children come, ey are always welcome. We want them to me again.

The third Sunday evening in July, our hildren's Day program as rendered. The hildren rendered the program in a very ap-ealing manner. At the close an offering was ken for missions. It was a very liberal ofering.

We had a fine delegation at our Young Peo-le's Summer Conference. The Sunday school ent two delegates. They were Misses Nola elms, and Blanche Newton. The Senior hristian Endeavor Society sent their President. Two girls, Misses Nina and Dessie Lee Little, went on their own expense. In all there were five of our young people attended and received credit. The delegates all gave excellent reports. It seems that they can't get through talking of the wonderful time they had while there. We are hoping that more of our young people will attend next year. On Sunday of the conference about thirty or more of our folks drove to High Point for the Sunday sessions of the conference.

The annual Sunday school picnic is to be held Thursday of this week at Bost's Mill.
We are looking forward with eagerness to the picnic, because we always have such a good time. We are expecting about 200 or more to go.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Sides are to move in their beautiful new home, on North Union Street, this week.

Miss Gatha Sides became the bride of Mr.
Grover Honeycutt, July 19. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman. After the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Honeycutt left for a few days' visit with Mr. Honeycutt's parents. Mrs. Honeycutt was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. H.
Sides. The young married couple are making their home with Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Litaker.
Mrs. Litaker is a sister of the bride.

Orange Charge, Union Grove Church.—The revival meeting began here 1st Sunday in August and closed the following Thursday.

Rev. W. H. Neese was on hand for the opening service and remained until the close, doing all the preaching.

His preaching was clear and to the point.
Many favorable comments were heard. We believe the hearers were deeply stirred.

As a result of the services three were converted, two reclaimed, the church revived and one new member. To God be all the praise.

Bro. Neese preached at Efland 1st Sunday night a splendid sermon, enjoyed by all. Come this way again, Bro. Neese. B. M. Williams

Haw River Ct. A partial report

Our meeting was held at Fair Grove 2nd
Sunday in July. Bro. Pike was the efficient help. His messages were fine and the meeting was good. Two additions to the church.

The third Sunday we were at Friendship.
Bro. E. O. Pritchett, of Bethel Com. was our help. This was Bro. Pritchett's old home church and his return was an occasion of mutual joy. The people were delighted with his messages and they feel a just pride in one of their noble sons.

Bro. Pritchett is one of our growing young men and we predict for him a bright future.

Two joined the church. W. D. Reed.

Union Grove, Orange Ct.—We are not heard from so much, but we are still alive.
Rev. W. H. Neese was with us last week and gave such good gospel sermons which were so helpful to ones who heard themand we hope he may come again. Did not have the attendance which should have been and failed to reach ones had hoped for. Floyd Riley, one of our Sunday school students, was converted and joined the church. We are always happy for our children to come into the fold.

Mrs. Caroline Dodson, our oldest member, is very feeble. Her son, Mr. Luther Dodson, once a member of our church, was killed by lightning in his home on May the 3rd which was a great shock to her and his own family.

Mrs. R. P. Blackwood, sister-in-law of Mrs.
J. M. Lloyd and Mr. H. N. Blackwood, died July 31. God is reminding us that we do not remain here, but must pass on.

Rev. B. M. Williams is doing a good work here, is much liked by the people.

The road to the church has been improved, which is quite a help.

We don't know what other M. P.s think about it, but our Sunday school is very much disgusted with some of the writing in our quarterlies and there is nothing to the Primary papers. If our church wants to make progress for the Lord and teach our children the truth, they must do better than now, instil in their young minds God's Holy truths, away with man's suppositions and fairy tales.
This is a serious matter and needs the attention of our annual conference. And we hope and pray it will look after it. N. B. L.

Toluca Charge.—In the past few months we the members of Hebron church have launched a program never before equaled for the members of this church: We have improved our Sunday school wonderfully.

The young are getting more interested in Sunday school and church work. The young have secured a nice piano for our church.
They have taken it on themselves to get up a play and present it several places in order to pay for our new instrument. We are proud of our young people.

Several new members have joined our Sunday school and have already proven to be live wires in church work.

Rev. J. M. Morgan, the pastor of our church, was unable to fill his appointment at our church the last first Sunday. Fortunately he was able to secure Rev. Mr. Dalthit, the evangelist, to fill his appointment. The house was well filled to hear him. He delivered a wonderful sermon. We know he is a God-sent man that preaches Bible. He is now in West Virginia holding a tent meeting.

The revival starts at our church the last Sunday in this month. We are looking forward to this meeting because we feel that there is yet much to be done. Rev. J. M. Morris is to assist in this meeting.

Frank Houser.

—In the death of Rev. J. H. Bowman our Conference loses one of its best church builders. He is to be given credit for improving quite a number of the churches he served. His agitation for improvement in some cases resulted in improvement after he had left the charge, but in most instances he succeeded in getting improvements made when he was on the ground. He had the ability to unite the people in efforts to improve their houses of worship as well as in other efforts.

—Rev. H. F. Surratt went last week to Shelby to assist Rev. L. S. Helms in a meeting and Mrs. Surratt came to Greensboro to visit her mother, sisters and brothers.

IT IS GREATLY NEEDED.

Every Children's Day offering ought to be in the hands of the annual conference treasurer a few days after the service is held.

It ought to be plainly stated to him when it is sent that "this is the Children's Day offering for Foreign Missions."

If he is told "this is a payment on our church's budget," or anything akin thereto, then the Union Board will receive only 25 per cent of that offering, whereas every cent was given for Foreign Missions, and the General Conference decreed that the Union Board should receive it.

Pastors and Sunday school superintendents will, therefore, help in carrying out the will of the General Conference, and will render a real service to the Union Board by seeing that the Children's Day offering is sent at once, if not already forwarded, to the annual conference treasurer.

Annual conference treasurers will also render a distinct service to the Union Board if they will see, as far as possible, that all Children's Day offerings are duly credited to the Union Board, and that all the funds in hand for the Union Board are promptly forwarded to the treasurer, Mr. H. C. Staley, 516 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

Special demands upon the Board at this time make this request very necessary, and compliance therewith will be greatly appreciated.

It is also hoped that, with the sending of every Children's Day offering to the annual conference treasurer, a clear statement as to the membership of the Sunday school has been, or willl be sent.

If this is done it will greatly aid the committee in awarding the beautifully embroidered Japanese banner which is to go to the Sunday school sending in the largest offering for Foreign Missions this year in proportion to membership.

The other banner will be awarded to the Sunday school sending in the largest offering without regard to membership.

The former banners were awarded with the understanding that the Sunday school which received a banner three years in succession would become the owner of that banner, but, with these new banners, the plan was changed so that they are now awarded annually with the understanding that they are retained by the two schools for one year, and thus are to be awarded each year on the same conditions as heretofore.

It will be quite impossible to award the banners before the fall, as a few orders for the Children's Day supplies are still reaching us, and all the offerings will not be in hand until then, but as soon as the awards can be made the names of the Sunday schools receiving the banners will be announced in the church papers.

We are quite anxious to send the two large illustrated posters, which were sent to the schools with the Children's Day supplies last year, to the school that did not receive them, so long as the supply on hand lasts.

They have the pictures of all our missionaries, native workers, buildings, etc. Just drop me a card, Berwyn, Md.

We have received the printed report of the Union Board, and they will be sent to the pastors. Extra copies are here, and if you wish one drop me a card. It supplies the latest information of our foreign missionary work in Japan, China and India, and so arranged under titles that needed information can readily be found. Fred C. Klein.

ALL BIBLE LANDS IN ONE TRIP.

After Thrilling Adventures Amidst Scripture Scenes on an Unprecedented Journey, Dr. William T. Ellis Returns with New Tribute To The Old Book.

Newspapers report the return to America of Dr. William T. Ellis of Swarthmore, Pa., from a ten months' tour of Bible Lands, wherein he has covered every geographical region mentioned in the Scripture.

Dr. Ellis says that, so far as he can learn, this comprehensive trip over all Bible Lands has never before been made by one man, in either ancient or modern times. So accustomed are even church folk to consider simply Palestine as the Holy Land that it is with a measure of surprise that we learn how vast is the area comprehended by the Bible Story.

His travels took Dr. Ellis from Paul's Rome, down the Appian Way to Rhegium and Syracuse, in Sicily; throughout Greece and Macedonia; over Paul's route in Turkey and to St. John's "Seven Churches of Asia;" from Antioch, in Syria, where the disciples were first called Christians, throughout all of Bible-marked Syria and Palestine, (he was under fire in Damascus) and into the untravelled recesses of the Sinai desert; then, over all the way that Moses knew, through the length and breadth of Egypt, and across into Arabia, where he got within fourteen miles of Mecca, nearer than any undisguished Christian has ever before gone; afterward he traversed the Trans-Jordan region, with its still-standing ruins of cities where Jesus doubtless preached; subsequently he followed the route of Abraham and of the Hebrew exiles and of the Magi down into Babylon and into Ur of the Chaldees. This arduous search for Scripture sites ended in Persia, with a visit to Shushan, and its memories of Queen Esther and of Daniel and of Nehemiah; to Persepolis and to the ancient Jewish tombs of Esther and Mordecai in Hamadan.

Once in Arabia Dr. Ellis and Mrs. Ellis barely escaped with their lives, after a fight with the Arabs. "More interesting, and far more important, than any of our adventures is the mass of confirmatory and corroborative evidence we have gathered attesting the historicity of the Bible," said Dr. Ellis, after his return. "This expedition has fairly opened up a new field of Chrstian apologetics. To trace the entire geographical course of the Scripture story is to demonstrate in a compelling fashion that the Bible is a place book; and that its authenticity is supported by the extraordinary accuracy and reasonableness and unity of its geographical allusions. I have written a book for Appletons, 'Bible Lands Today,' covering our travels; but there is not space between its covers for the whole thrilling tale of the new light which old lands shed upon the inspired record. Something like a revival of religion would ensue were the churches to give themselves to intelligent study of all the Bible back-grounds; and of Bible lands as a testimony to the Book."

CROSSNORE'S QUANDARY.

More boarders than beds!
More buyers than clothes!

Our 1926-27 school year is opening—will have opened before you see this. We have prayed to be shown that our school is needed, and have it proven that there are children in our mountains who want a High School education and cannot get it unless they are given a chance to work their way in a boarding school. So we have persistently refused admission to those that we felt could go elsewhere, and have blindly accepted those who had no "chance" but ours. Today the list numbers 92 boarders that have engaged space. What about those that neglect that ceremony? We have beds and cots for 47. We have sold our three old double beds that held three each and have ordered 24 double deckers from an Army store. The Army Salvage prices no longer exist and these beds with straw ticks on them cost us $13.25. There's not a penny in sight to pay for them, but, maybe you would like to settle for one anyway.

Our dining room has 80 seats. By moving the serving tables out, we can seat 96. Until we need the stove there's place for a small table to seat 8. We must seat our boarders and six teachers and housemothers, 104 in a room 20 by 30 ft. Can you beat it?

We have four girls, sleeping on two double deckers, in each room 12 ft. square. In the hall double deckers are put as close as they can stand. This means five or six girls to room and dress in each room. The boys are just as crowded. Surely if the Lord has sent these children in answer to our prayer He means for us to do our best for them, and our prayer is that He will make them so strong that the unhygienic crowding will not make them sick. What would you do with sick children in such quarters? There's not a room on the place that can be spared for an Infirmary. Isn't that food for thought? We hope you are thoughtful. And remember, more pupils call for more scholarships, that they may earn their way. And also, it calls for more money for running expenses. That means more clothes for the sales. We have far more buyers than clothes and buyers who want better clothes, buyers who come many miles and bring money. We want that money. Oh, how we need it! And we can get it if you send the clothes. Please, be quick.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

The above term sounds good to the unsophisticated. But it may mean nearly anything from sound instruction in orthodox, evangelical Christianity to what used to be called infidelity. There is a class of instructors or propagandists, who have insinuated themselves into our higher institutions of learning, using the old orthodox terms of religion and theology, with a meaning altogether foreign to that attached to these terms by orthodox christians all down the ages, since Christianity had a beginning. So you cannot be sure what your son or daughter is being taught under the cover, or camouflage, of "religious education," unless you have personal knowledge of the religious views of his or her instructor, or knowledge through some other reliable person who knows. So your son or daughter is liable to be educated away from real religion, as you believe it, and understand it, and as the true church of Jesus Christ understands and knows it to be. So when that son or daughter returns from college and manifests little or no interest in the church, Sunday school, or the Bible, you need not be surprised, for it is often the case. And how can it be otherwise? A few weather the storm and come out unscathed, but the many are bruised and crippled—and some for life. This is no exaggeration, but what is happening continually.

Take up a catalogue of a college, and scan the courses of study, and see, among other things, "Religious Education." This appeals to the godly parent or guardian. He says to himself, "That suits me." "That's what I want." "That's the school for Fannie or Jimmie." But if he could be behind the walls of the class-room, unobserved, and hear some of the things said in the name of religion, and about the Bible, he would be astounded, grieved, and indignant. The whole thing would appear to him as the basest treachery and treason. And so it is. What right has a man to profess to teach the Bible who does not believe the Bible? None! He's a traitor, and deserves to be branded as such. Worse than Benedict Arnold. His was political treachery, having to do with civil affairs, in this life; while the false teacher of religion and the Bible is guilty of a treachery that has to do with the soul, the spirit, the immortal part—for time and eternity. The latter as much more base than the former, as the spirit is superior to the body, and as eternity is greater than time. If the law of the land, and of God, accords to a man the right to defend his home against the burglar, and murderer of his wife and children, why has he not an equal right to defend his children against him who would murder the soul of his child? If the death penalty is meted out to those who murder the body, what should be the penalty due those who murder the soul? But this very thing is being done—destroying faith, destroying true religion, in the name of religion—and what are we going to do about it? Keep silent, and cry, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace?" It's useless to deny these things, when the proof of them is undeniable. Everyone who teaches the Bible is not false to his trust, but it is difficult to know who is true and who is false. You cannot tell by his profession. Personal knowledge of the teacher is the only way, as has already been said, or through the knowledge of some other reliable, competent person. We require our candidates for office to come out in the open and declare themselves on certain questions. Why not require those who are to teach our children religion and the Bible, to likewise declare themselves? If they are not willing to do this, this itself should be sufficient reason to reject them. If they declare themselves, and this declaration is all it should be, and they are accepted, and afterward found to be false to this declaration, this should be sufficient cause for their discharge. Or has the point been reached in this country where the parent no longer has any right in his child? Who has given a certain class of professors their "seat and great authority?" Who has endowed them with infallibility? Who has placed them above impeachment?

Though the Pope of Rome claims infallibility in matters of religion, his enunciations are public,—open, free, and "above board"—given the greatest publicity, while these Professors do their deadly work in the secrecy of the class-room—hidden away from parent and guardian. So here is the reason why boys and girls, many times, after attending college a few years lose interest in "religion," though they have been "taking religious education" at college. Why they seldom or never read the Bible, or any sound book on the Bible or religion, but you can find books on "Liberal Christianity," books by Harry Emerson Fosdick, among their books, kept in a private manner, from the eye of father and mother. "Religious Education!" It may be "religious education," but it is the religion of the devil. The devil is quite religious, but it is a religion of lies. Made up of denials and perversions of the Bible and of true evangelical christianity, where the Bible and true christianity are found. Of course in pagan countries his methods are modified to suit the different conditions. Anything to deceive and lead the people astray—to destruction. While this condition of affairs has been kept under cover for quite a while, the disease is becoming so serious it is "breaking out." Some students are of sufficient independence of mind and honesty of heart to "tell" some of the false teachings of the "class-room." Denial of miracles, the Deity of Christ, the inspiration of the Bible, the Virgin birth, the Fall of man, original sin, the blood atonement, &c. &c. As one young theologue said, "It would not be so bad if they would give both sides; but this they do not do." We've heard two young men, preachers, say, "It was all I could do to keep my faith." And one of them said, "It was in every class-room, everywhere—in the very air"—what? This false teaching. "I would go from class," said one, "wondering if we had any Bible, any God, any religion—if we could be sure of any thing." The one who made these last statements is a most worthy young man. Well-informed, well educated. We lived a near neighbor to him for some time, and was quite intimate with him. This same young man said that the first, or about the first, thing his history Prof. told them, was that the Bible was wholly unreliable and not to be regarded as history at all. Not to be taken into the account at all. Such a man "is of his father the devil, and the lust of his father he is doing." Teaching young men for the ministry! Shades of Beelzebub! O tempora! O mores!

We would be far from saying that all teachers are of this class. But one, is one too many, and how is the godly parent who has the present and eternal good of his child at heart, to know, prior to experience, who is safe and who is not? The term, "Religious Education," is no guarantee, as has already been seen.

We asked one young man, "Where did they teach you these things"—false things— "in biology?" "No," said he, "in Religious Education." I confess I was unprepared for his answer. I knew such things were being taught, but did not know that they were being taught as "Religious Education."

We believe in religion and education also. But if we must dispense with either, better dispense with such education as we are getting in these days. As Sam Jones used to say, "Better be in heaven learning A. B. C.s, than in hell reading Greek." But, "What will it profit a man to get an education and lose his own soul?" If we will rid our schools and colleges of skeptics and infidels as teachers, we can obtain an education and keep our religion and save our souls also.

J. F. Dosier.

MANNER OF SPEECH.

The importance of effective delivery is shown in the case of two ministers in a New England city. A minister noted as a great thinker and theologian, with the degree of doctor of divinity, became pastor of a prosperous Methodist church. While his sermons were ably written, his poor delivery ruined them, as he read from the manuscript in a dull monotone, with little action or gesture. The people rapidly lost interest, and in a few months the attendance dwindled to a mere handful. His congregation became so dissatisfied that before his term expired it became necessary to make a change to save the church.

Another minister was installed, a man of limited education, but with pleasing presence, a good voice, and ability to use it effectively in speaking and singing. His wife and daughters were also good singers, and they soon became leaders in all song services. The preacher spoke without notes, and held the close attention of his hearers. His sermons and the singing of gospel songs in all church services soon filled the church to capacity, while many visitors were attracted from other churches. Before his term expired, this minister was called to a large church in Boston, and in a few years he became pastor of a prosperous church in Chicago, and finally was honored by election as bishop.—Zion's Herald.

"Dr. Campbell Morgan," says The British Weekly, "remarked near the outset of his address: "Once in the presence of my beloved friend, Dr. John Hutton, I chanced to use the expression "humanly speaking." "Man," he said, "there's no other way of speaking."

—Northwestern University's greatest benefactress, Mrs. A. Montgomery Ward, widely known philanthropist and widow of Chicago's pioneer mail-order merchant, died at her home on Monday of last week, of heart disease. She was within a few days of her seventieth birthday. In recent years Mrs. Ward had been deeply interested in education and had given to Northwestern University alone $8,000, 000.

IS THE PULPIT A BULLETIN BOARD?

Is the Preacher a Prophet or a Propagandist?

By William E. Barton.

It will be difficult to say what I want to say in this article and not be misunderstood: that, perhaps, is the very reason why the article ought to be written. I begin this discussion with a clear realization of the danger that I may grieve my friends and be applauded by those from whose approbation I shrink. I am writing of what I regard as the very great danger that the pulpit at the present time may forsake the Gospel for the law.

The church is the only organization on earth which makes its appeal to men on the basis of their moral and spiritual natures. There are other organizations whose duty it is to educate people, the elevate their esthetic taste, or compel them to submit to legal requirements, but there is just one organization which approaches men with a clear understanding that they are endowed by Almighty God with moral natures and that they are to find the real significance of life in willing cooperation with the God who made them. Other organizations can bring to men the terrors of the law, but, if the church fails to teach men the Gospel and bring them to acceptance of it, the failure is total and beyond remedy.

And the Gospel is not merely another form of law.

Dropping Moral Suasion.

This brings me abruptly to consider one of the ways in which Christian leaders have been doing what seemed to them a necessary thing, but doing it, as I sometimes fear, at too great cost. I speak particularly of the methods in recent years of opposing the use of alcoholic liquor. I am myself a lifelong total abstainer from liquor in all forms. I have upheld and do uphold the 18th Amendment and the Volstead Act. I believe that the saloon had proved a hopeless outlaw and that prohibition had become a necessity. I believe that, now that we are thus far on, we must go through and make it effective. I am not frightened when I am told of the extent to which that law is not enforced. It is perhaps about as well enforced as the law against murder, and safe as it now appears to be for one man to kill another without fear of the gallows, I do not hear of anyone talking of repealing the murder laws.

But I deplore the fact that, with our emphasis on legislation, we have so nearly dropped the moral suasion with which at one time we attempted to meet the evils of strong drink.

Doing It by Law.

I can remember in my youth the days when we did not talk about prohibition, but about temperance. We tried to teach people that the use of liquor was harmful to themselves and dangerous to others and to lead them voluntarily not to indulge in it. We asked them to sign the pledge to abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquor. In the days of Francis Murphy, we asked them to wear a little blue or red ribbon to indicate that they were pledge-signers. There was not very much discussion about legislation. We assumed that, if people wanted liquor, they would get it and that the best way to keep them from getting it was to induce them to let it alone. It is a long time since I have heard of anybody signing a temperance pledge. I cannot tell how many years since I have heard an old-fashioned temperance lecture in which people were asked cheerfully and of their own free will to let liquor alone. For a whole generation now we have been talking about getting laws passed to make it harder if not impossible for liquor to be obtained.

I myself have participated in all these movements and have no apology to make for it. I believe the time had come when it became necessary to take drastic action against an evil that was threatening to undermine society. I think we had to meet intemperance in the use of liquor by a certain degree of intemperance in our hostility to it. Nevertheless, I am sorry we had to do it in that way and I am sorry because in doing it after this fashion we have so nearly given up the moral appeal.

I hear on every hand much talk of the young people of the present day as drinking and carousing and having no conscience in the matter of the use of liquor. I am wondering a little if we good people are in some measure responsible. We have not been teaching them that it was their high duty and cheerful privilege to let liquor alone, but we have been trying to make it legally impossible for them to get it.

In coming generations, this present time is likely to be remembered as an age in which we have been endeavoring to do everything by law. We have provided for safety in the use of machinery by compelling the factory owner to protect his workmen. We have tried to insure to children proper nourishment by passing laws against the sale of milk that was either diluted or adulterated. We have passed laws telling parents how many hours a day, how many days a week and how many weeks in the year their children must be in school. It is difficult to name any sphere in life now which is not a subject for legislation.

Aristotle taught that the multiplication of laws was the decay of the state. I am more and more convinced that Aristotle was right. The body of legislation under which we now live is burdensome and ineffective, and I think it is ethically unsound.

I am not in favor of the repeal of the Volstead Act. I do not believe in modifying it in the least degree so long as its repeal or amendment is demanded by the crowd who now are howling for it. I think we are under moral compulsion to fight that battle through; but, with it all, I believe the time has come for a new emphasis on the moral aspects of this whole question. I can remember in my later youth the time when temperance lecturers began to sneer at moral suasion and insist upon making people temperate by law. I do not think the sneer was justified. Moral suasion is what we now are lacking. I am aware that there is much emphasis on what is called religious education, but too much of our education, religious or otherwise, is content with imparting information, whereas education is futile or worse if it does not form character.

No Time For The Gospel.

I have been speaking about the method of dealing with the liquor evil by law because that is at present the outstanding legislation, but it is not by any means the only example of what I am endeavoring to discuss.

The pulpit at the present time is well fitted with propaganda.

We have built up such a number of special agencies that depend upon the church for the support of their paid officers and for the distribution of their publicity that there is not very much time left for the average minister to preach the Gospel.

I know that many good people say that very thing is the Gospel. The prohibition of the liquor traffic by law, the prohibition of child labor by law, the prohibition of milk adulteration by law, and compulsory education by law—these are the Gospel or there is none.

I answer that I do not think any of these is the Gospel. These various reforms, in my judgment, are desirable, but they are not the Gospel.

Moreover, they offer wide opportunity for the dissemination of machine-made thought and the pulpit becomes in too many cases a bulletin board upon which almost any reform agency can tack a placard.

Ministers' meetings and church gatherings abound in resolutions prepared by outside organizations whose salaried officials distribute these documents and call for action. Ministers are persuaded or almost bullied into calling upon their members to write to their Representatives in Congress to pass this or that bill.

I say again and perhaps for the hundredth time that I think all this may have become necessary. We have had to make it safe for men in legislative bodies to vote for those bills which represented the moral sense of the community. We had to go further and make it dangerous to a legislator not to do what the better people in his district demanded by compelling him to face the prospect of defeat if he permitted the underworld to control his vote. At the same time we have very nearly forgotten how to uplift the community by teaching men to love righteousness and hate iniquity and be strong enough to resist temptation.

Jeremiah Found a Remedy.

The Prophet Jeremiah is one of the clearest thinkers as well as one of the most courageous heroes in the Old Testament. He lived in a time when law collapsed and government went to pieces. It became impossible to enforce laws and he saw the moral chaos which resulted. He was unterrified. He said that something better was coming. He declared that God would put his law into men's hearts and write his precepts in their inward parts and there should be no need for penalties or prohibitions, for all men would do right for the love of right.

Jeremiah was enunciating the only principle on which a democracy can ever be stable. Ultimately we must put the spirit of the law into men's hearts or all law must fail.

It is diffiult to imagine Jesus going before legislative committee and asking for better gislation. He did no tinkering with laws. is kingdom was not of this world, but of the ner spiritual life of men. He wrought no re- rms by legislation; he sought to bring men to loving, willing conformity with the will f God, and to make them friendly and help- l to their fellow men.

The Gospel, as Jesus taught it, was not rivative but constructive, it dealt with the ner life of men. Unlike the Ten Command- ents which are neces arily negative and pro- bitive, His beatitudes concerned themselves ith the inherent blessedness of mercy and ndne s and meekness and purity of heart I have done my full share of preaching in vor of righteousness and temperance and man welfare. I have actively supported ost of the moral reforms that have seemed o me to have any legitimate claim upon the ulpit. I have no apology to offer for any of is activity. I could even say I am glad and roud of what I have done in this direction. evertheless, I have believed all the time and elieve more than ever that the pulpit must ard itself with very great earnestness gainst becoming the cat's-paw for propagan- a in any form. The preacher is a prophet of lmighty God and not the propagandist even f good causes. It is his duty to teach men to e honest and upright and generous and ourteous and clean-minded and to love God nd their fellow men. If he can induce them o do this, there will be less need of law and e will have less time to meddle with it.—earborn Independent.

Calvary News—A new annex has recently een added to the church hut at Calvary. We ow have ten additional small Sunday school ooms for the primary department of the chool. The annex was so constructed that the artitions can be easily removed and the hole be thrown into one large room for so- ial gathering. We believe that this was a vise move. We mean the building of the ad- lition to the hut. This will serve to relieve the congestion for some time and until we are able to build the permanent Sunday school department of the church.

Since the pastor last reported to the Herald Miss Ruth Monnett transfered her membership from Tabernacle to Calvary. We welcome her, believing that her church membership will be worth more to her and that she will be worth more to the kingdom by having her membership where she can attend regularly.

Our evangelistic services are scheduled to begin the first Sunday in October. Rev. J. D. Williams of Reidsville will do the preaching, and we are hoping to have Brother Roy Bethune to lead the singing. We are looking forward to having a real revival. Our evangelistic club is doing some work that will prepare us for the services, and that will enable us, we trust, to reach many for Christ.

VACATION TIME! The vacation time and the country revivals are making themselves felt in our congregations these days. We can not blame the people much for wanting to go back to their home churches for the revival meetings. But promiscuous automobiling on the Sabbath is not conducive to spirituality in those that engage in it, nor does it help build up the church and kingdom.

The pastor and his wife have recently enjoyed a real vacation. We spent eight delightful days at Wrightsville Beach as the guests of Captain C. E. McCulloch and family. Captain McCulloch has an ideal location for his cottage. You can sit on his porch and see the ocean on one side and the sound on the other, and the breeze is almost constant. He also has a most delightful and lovable family, his wife, two daughters and one son. We shall not soon forget his generousity and the delightful time we had with him and his family. We want to also thank those of our congregation whose generosity made our vacation much less expensive than it would otherwise have been. L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

A Dear Old Mother in Israel gone Home.

On July 2, 1926, at the age of 61 years, nine months and 27 days Sister J. P. Stallings was called to her reward. She was a patient sufferer for 16 long years; but never murmured or complained, and was always cheerful and hopeful. She was converted and joined Bethlehem Christian church in early life. After her marriage to Bro. Stalling in 1882, she moved her membership to Mizpah M. P. church to which she remained loyal and true until the end came.

Her home was the home of her pastor, and she was never more cheerful and happy than when she was bestowing upon him, lavishly, her hospitality. She has been one of the pillars of the church.

She leaves to mourn their loss her devoted husband and four children: J. P. and R. P. Stallings, Mrs. M. Z. Wagoner, Mrs. Roy Stewart, Mrs. E. O. Stanfield, one brother, Philip Waynick, Mrs. H. O. Keck, Mrs. Z. D. Rippy, Mrs. Margarett Wilkins and Mrs. Webb Isley.

She was laid to rest at Mizpah church to await the resurrection call. The large crowd of sorrowing friends at the funeral attested her real worth.

The sympathies of the community go out for the sorrowing relatives.

May a loving Savior comfort the sad ones until the reunion day shall come.

—Over 1500 people were present at the Coble reunion yesterday at Coble's church. The tallest man present was Rev. D. I. Offman, the pastor of the church. He was given a razor. We presume there was no suggestion in this that he should use it to reduce his length.

A REMARKABLE RABBIT.

By Georgina W. Pelton.

Did you ever see a little rabbit chase a big dog? I did yesterday. They are playfellows.

The rabbit is a tame one. It is black and white. It has a little house (a box with a bed of straw in it) and a large yard fenced with wire netting.. It makes little use of house and bed, however, preferring to sit outside even on cold January nights, with the mercury in the 30's and 20's.

Mick, the dog, is a large handsome fellow about a year old. He is part shepherd.

I went out with a photographer, who had been asked to take a motion picture of the remarkable occurence of a rabbit chasing a dog.

When we first saw Peter Rabbit he was in his pen. Mick was called, and went close up to Peter and turned around and lay down by him. He was encouraged to get up and take more notice of Peter. They shared a slice of bread. Sometimes Mick spoke to Peter in a quick, short bark. Sometimes he put his nose through the netting. If Peter jumped a way, he was not afraid to come back again. He came back repeatedly, and stayed near the dog most of the time. At no time did he put a considerable distance between Mick and himself. He could have bounded yards away.

After a while Mr. X. let Peter out. He nibbled the grass. Every now and then Mick would interrupt Peter's meal and chase him. Peter would run a little, then stop to eat grass; and then, when Mick bothered him again, he would turn quickly and chase the dog. This happened over and over again. You would have laughed to see it.

Perhaps some day you may see it at a motion picture theatre.

Mr. X. said Mick and Peter played in this way by the hour last summer.

JERRY DOES THE TRICK.

"Another one of my chickens is gone this morning," grumbled Uncle Ben as he came into the warmth of the kitchen. He was the grizzled, kindly-faced old man who took care of little Jerry.

"How did it happen?" inquired Jerry in wonder.

"I've got an idea," declared Uncle Ben, "that it was a fox. Two chickens would not disappear two mornings in succession, if there was not a fox or some other animal around."

'Maybe it was some other animal."

"I don't know," said Uncle Ben. "You may be right. Anyway, I don't suppose a fox would venture around here. They're afraid of man. But, whatever it was, it didn't leave any tracks."

Uncle Ben rummaged around in the closet, finally pulling for a rusty old steel trap.

"What is that for?" demanded Jerry.

"I am going to set a trap. This will catch the animal by the leg, and then I won't lose any more chickens."

"Oh, please don't!" cried tenderhearted Jerry.

"Well, I've got to catch whatever animal is getting after my chickens."

"It will hurt the animal though," Jerry said. "Please don't use that trap, Uncle Ben."

"You soft-hearted little monkey," laughed Uncle Ben, pinching Jerry's cheek goodnaturedly. "I don't know what to do now."

"Can't you use something else?" inquired the boy..

"Say, that gives me an idea," cried Uncle Ben jumping up. "I can use something else. I can use a box trap. That won't hurt the animal, will it?"

"Let me help you," exclaimed Jerry, and they went out to the wood-shed to get some tools.

Uncle Ben hunted through a bunch of assorted knick-knacks in the wood-shed until he uncovered an old box, a handful of various sized nails, some string, several boards, and a hammer..

"Now I am going to make a figure 4 trap," explained Uncle Ben, as he started to work.

He nailed a tall stick up on the rear side of the box. Then he bored a hole through the top of the stick, and put a string through the hole. The string was then tied to the top of the upper side of the box which was itself nailed to the front end of the box. The other end of the string he tied to a stick which fitted in a notch of a trigger that slipped through a hole to the inside of the box. Then he took a bit of meat from the ice-box, and put it on the trigger which protruded into the box. When an animal touched the trigger, it would release the stick in the trigger-notch and the string permitted the top of the box to fall, and trapped the animal within the box.

The box-trap was set outside the chicken-coop so that any animal coming to visit the poultry would be caught, without hurting it.

"When are you coming to breakfast," called Aunt Flo from the kitchen door. "It's getting cold."

"We are on our way," sang Uncle Ben, picking up his hammer.

All day Jerry waited anxiously for the night to come, to see what would happen to the figure-4 trap. During the day a dog got in the trap, tempted by the meat, and it had to be set again at night-fall.

About three o'clock in the night, Jerry was awakened by loud cacklings and noises in the chicken-coop. He could hear Uncle Ben in the next room slipping on his trousers. Jerry did likewise. Together they hurried out to the coop. Uncle Ben took his gun.

In the box-trap was a loud scratching sound. Uncle Ben looked in through a crack.

"We have got a raccoon," he cried excitedly.

He put the gun up to his shoulder. "I guess it won't suffer long now, Jerry."

"Don't!" pleaded Jerry. "Don't kill it!"

"But it will come back and kill the chickens if I don't," explained Uncle Ben, perplexed.

"No; I promise it won't. Let me have it for a pet."

Uncle Ben scratched his head thoughtfully.

"I'm afraid you can't tame it, Jerry; though I've heard of some people doing it. The chances are that it will bolt for the woods the first chance it gets."

"Let me try. anyway, Uncle Ben," begged Jerry.

"All right," said Uncle Ben laughing. "You can try to tame it. If you can do the trick, you can keep the raccoon. But mind you: if it tries to take a nibble off of one of my chickens, then you'd better say good-bye to Mr. Raccoon."

Jerry nodded his head happily. He put the little brown raccoon in the cage where the rabbits had once been kept. From that time on he visited his raccoon which he called Tom, many times every day. He would speak of it, call it by name, and in every way possible try to make it like him.

At first he was discouraged of ever making Tom lose his wild ways. But finally Jerry gained hope, for he could climb in the cage with Tom and the raccoon would come to him to eat nuts out of his hand, or to climb up on his shoulder and nibble apples.

After a time he would take Tom out of his cage, holding him close. But Tom reacted favorably to kindness. He did not try to escape. He seemed to be perfectly contented to stay with Jerry.

But he did want to eat the chickens. It was a long, long time before Jerry could finally make his pet leave the chickens to themselves. However, every time Tom ran after a chicken, he was put in his cage again. This he considered punishment, and he could at last be trusted in the chicken-coop without any danger of him touching one of the fowls. The final test was the day when Tom chased away a dog that was mollesting the chickens. That act made Tom "one of the family."—Jno. F. Douglas in The Presbyterian.

YE OLDE ICE HOUSE.

Betty Camden and her inquiring mind made History and the towns folk of Silasville, Pa., are going to remember her a long time, especially around the middle of February!

Betty was Laura Mill's cousin and only six years old. Laura knew she was too young to go skating with her and her older friends on Duck Pond, but Betty begged so hard that Laura took her any way. Besides Betty's mother, Aunt Bess, had said:

"Take her if you can, Laura, dear. I really haven't time to answer the child's questions today. I'm busy."

Betty had a pair of double-runner skates, and was very anxious to learn how to skate.

"I'm afraid the ice is kind of lumpy today," said Laura.

And lumpy it proved to be. Betty kept falling down in spite of the double-runner skates. Pretty soon she felt as if she were one big bump from head to foot.

"Laura," she called, "I'm not going to skate any more."

"Skate?" asked her cousin, smiling.

"I guess, I'll go and walk around awhile," said Betty.

Some of the big boys had made a fire on the bank, and Betty stood near it warming her tingling fingers.

"Your Betty will get burned up the first thing you know," warned Tom Painter, one of the boys.

So Laura took off her skates and went to Betty.

"I'll take you home now, Betty," she said. "You'll get too cold standing around here."

"I'm not going to stand around," said Betty. "I'm going to walk!" And she started oc at a gallop over the frozen ground.

"Don't go out of sight!" called Laura.

Then she went back to the pond and skated, keeping her eye on her small charge. She saw Betty stop at the old ice house and walk curiously around it. In a moment she saw the little girl running to the pond and heard her clear voice calling:

"Lau-au-ra!"

"What?" shouted Laura.

"What are those funny marks on that funny house?" asked Betty at the top of her lungs, pointing to the old ice house.

"That's the ice house!" screamed Laura, gliding skillfully between the lumps on the ice.

"Why are the boards so rough?" shouted Betty.

"They haven't been sandpapered," explained one of the boys near Betty. "Any more questions?"

Betty seemed satisfied and ran back to the ice house. Laura saw her going inside. Well, that was all right. Laura had been inside, too. There was not much ice in now. She remembered a pile of sawdust and an old bench inside. She felt sure Betty would be safe.

Pretty soon she saw Betty come running to the edge of the pond and heard the familiar call:

"Lau-au-ra!"

"What?" shouted Laura.

"Why hasn't the bench got any nails?" cried Betty.

"Because it hasn't got any fingers," answered one of the girls with a grin.

"What's all that sawdust for?" Betty inquired, in loud tones. "What's that ice for? Who owns the little house?"

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Laura. "Guess I'd better take her home."

But Betty was enjoying herself. She ran back to the ice house and stayed a long time. In fact, she stayed until Laura came and got her to take her home.

"Playing with sawdust?" Laura inquired.

"Yes," said Betty. "Look what funny legs this bench has! Where do you suppose they ever got such a funny bench with such funny legs? And it's got writing on it, too."

Laura was in a hurry, because it was getting late. She righted the bench which her small cousin had turned upside down and filled with sawdust. Then she took Betty's hand and hurried out.

"Maybe your mother will let you have supper with us," she said.

Aunt Bess was only too glad to give her consent. You see, Betty's older sister Margaret was going to give a party on Washington's Birthday, which was only two days off, and the house was a mess, for Margaret and her friend were making favors for the party.

"Well, little question-box," greeted Laura's father, as they sat down to supper. He was speaking to Betty, of course. "Got any questions today?"

He liked to tease little Betty once in awhile, but he was really very fond of her. Betty dimpled and laid down her spoon.

"I got a lot of questions," she said, her round blue eyes on her uncle.

"All right," he laughed, "let's hear them all and get them out of our system. Fire ahead now!"

"Well," began Betty drawing a deep breath, "tell me about the little ice house. Whose house is it anyway?"

"Medford Chase owns it," replied the uncle.

"What's all that saw-dust for?"

"To put over the ice to keep the coldness in, so we can make ice cream out of it on the Fourth of July."

"What makes it such a funny little house?"

"Because it was built that way."

"Where did they get that funny bench inside?"

"What funny bench?"

"It's a bench with funny legs and writing underneath it," said Betty. I'd like to have one like it."

"Maybe Mr. Chase would sell it to you," said Mrs. Camden.

"What does one-seven-seven-five make?" was the next question.

"Say that again," laughed her uncle, getting out a pencil and paper.

"One, seven, seven, five," repeated Betty.

Her uncle put down the figures and was about to add them up, when he suddenly paused and exclaimed:

"Why, that's a date, Seventeen-seventy-five! Where did you see those figures?"

"In the writing under the funny bench," replied Betty.

"This is getting interesting!" cried Mr. Camden.

After supper he took Laura and Betty to see Mr. Chase, who lived nearby, and after some talk, they all went in the car to the ice house. It was awfully exciting. The men carried flashlights. They came back to Mr. Chase's car carrying the old bench.

Then they went to Mr. Chase's big house, and in the light of the study, read the words Betty had seen underneath the bench. Mr. Chase read part of them and Mr. Camden read part.

"To Whom it May Concern: I, John Medford, do this day affirm that General George Washington has used my cabin and sat upon this bench. Further proof may be found in a secret closet in the southwest wall of my cabin. Signed: John Medford, June, 1775."

Such a racket went up after the reading of these words! Everybody began talking at once and Betty's questions were unheard though she asked them over and over and very loudly.

Back to the cabin they went and shoveled away the sawdust from the southwest wall, and after a search, found a bit of wood that moved, and under it a hole chapped, in which was what Mr. Chase called an "affidavit" and also two gold coins in English money.

"You see, dear," Laura, explained to the questioning Betty, "George Washington used this cabin for his headquarters during the big war in 1775. He gave John Medford the gold money for some service John Medford had done, but John Medford decided to keep the money. It was too sacred to use, he thought. John Medford was Medford Chase's great-great-great-grandfather, or something like that."

"Oh!" said Betty.

Betty said Oh, a good many times soon afterwards for she became a heroine and was written about in papers. The cabin and bench were scrubbed and kept for a memorial of George Washington and on Washington's Birthday there was a grand "housewarming" at the cabin, with speeches and a band and policemen and firemen and—

Betty was there, dressed in a little colonial dress her mother had made for her. Oh, she did look sweet! And she didn't ask a single question. Why? Oh, because she was so busy answering questions she couldn't get one of her own in edgewise! They all wanted to hear all about the Discovery of the Cabin.

"I played in this cabin when I was a boy," said Mr. Chase, "but it took somebody with an inquiring mind to find out its history. Three cheers for our Betty who has helped to keep sacred in our hearts the Memory of The Father of His Country!"—Selected.

Mt. Carmel, Granville Ct.—Today being our regular day for preaching services, Mr. Kennett was with us, and gave us a very helpful sermon. His text was taken from the 12th verse of the 9th chapter of St. Matthew, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." He said that if he should use a subject for his sermon, that he would say that it be a "Faith Healer." He told us if we be sick that we needed an earthly physician and with that we also needed a "spiritual Healer."

Our special meeting began the second Sunday in July and continued through Friday. Rev. Mr. Pierce of High Point was our help, and he certainly gave us some splendid sermons; we can all say that he did his part to help us have a good revival. There were two to join the church at the close of the meeting.

Our Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will meet with Mrs. R. P. Cunningham Friday afternoon, August 13. Hope we'll have a good attendance. This being vacation season it interferes greatly with attendance at all church services. They will soon be home and I hope will get down to better work. Reporter.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Mecklenburg.—I suppose you have looked in vain to see something in these pages from Mecklenburg many times, as I have from some of you. So I will disappoint you no longer.

We have been very busy, and see no place to let up for some time to come. We have just closed our first revival meeting, which was very succes ful, in view of the odds with which we were confronted. It was held with Zoar church. It was not so very well attended, owing to sickness, farm work not being done, and a musical entertainment being given day and night, by a band of nineteen instrument near the church, from York, S. C.—Few people but what would rather hear a band of good music, rather than a good sermon. Rev. C. E. Ridge did the preaching. We were delighted with his soul-refreshshing messages. His methods of soul winning, and pulpit manners were highly acceptable. His doctrine is pure, logical and persuasive. He pleads as for a brother condemned to die. He has a soul-passion that causes him to put his heart in his efforts, which is very effective. He made many friends, and did fine work. There were a number of professions of faith, but we had but four to join our church, but they will mean much to the church.

Sister Nann Atkins was confined to her room the entire meeting. She has been a patient sufferer for several weeks. We missed her so much in the meeting. She makes no complaint, but lives in a consciousness that her heavenly Father is by her side and is doing all things well. She is a very precious woman, a mother in Israel, honored in her community, a faithful standby in the church and loved by all. May God give us more such mothers, and raise this one up to many years of shedding sun-shine and comfort among us yet.

Mrs. Birtha Hartis-Atkins, the dear young wife of Bro. Thomas Atkins, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hartis, has been, and still is, very ill with what the doctors pronounce tumor of the brain. She was carried to the hospital, Monday 26th. After spending a week there, she was taken back home. Our hearts are sad indeed, when we think of what this means. You who know the worth of a good wife and mother, please lift up your hearts in prayer to the Healer Divine, for it seems that if he doesn't intervene, our grief must be greater. She is a gracious woman, devoted to her church, home and all that we hold dear.

On last Friday, July 30th, the soul of Brother J. S. Kerr, of Charlotte, was called from labor to reward. His body was laid to rest at Zoar church, of which he was a member. He leaves a wife and three children with a host of friends to mourn their loss. The profusion of flowers which banked his casket, and the train of mourners that followed, told the story of the esteem in which he was held. Several members of the choir from Newell Baptist church sang most sweetly a number of his favorite hymns. May the God of the widow and the grief stricken children bind up the broken hearts and fill the aching voids with the comfort of his Dear Presence.

Asheboro.—So many things have happened since there was a report from this place that I shall hardly know where to begin. However, the work is moving along fairly well and we are hoping to finish a good year.

In all we have received thirty-eight new members this year and hope to receive several more before conference. The last one to join was Mr. Thaddeus Ferree who came to us from the Christian Church in Va.

The new pews for the church have been bought and are now being made. Before they are installed the carpet will be bought and put down.

On Tuesday evening August 3, the Brotherhood of the church was host to the women at a water melon and fruit feast given on the lawn at the residence of Dr. John Swaim. Quite a large number were present and all seemed to have a good time.

We lack only a few dollars of having paid all our assessment for the General Conference Budget and the money is in hand for that. The women have sent in quite a good deal that has counted on the budget and then the rather large offerings at Easter and Children's Day helped a great deal.

The news of the death of Rev. J. H. Bowman on yesterday brought general regret to a great many people here and especially the writer. Brother Bowman served Richland circuit seveal years ago and was well known around here. The writer feels that he has lost one of the best friends he ever had.

J. E. Pritchard.

High Point.—Impressive funeral rites for Miss Millie L. Bowman, beloved worker and Bible teacher for more than 11 years, who peacefully fell on sleep last Tuesday morning, August 3, were held in the large hall of the Children's Home Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the presence of a throng of relatives and sympathizing friends. Her pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, conducted the service. Favorite hymns of "Miss Millie" as she was affectionately known by old and young, here sung by members of the choir of First church with Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell at the piano, these being, "What a friend we have in Jesus," "Asleep in Jesus," and "Shall we gather at the river?" Mr. H. A. Garrett and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, who have been closely associated with Miss Bowman in the Home for several years, Pres. A. G. Dixon, who was her pastor for some time, and Dr. Brown, her present pastor, paid beautiful and touching tribute to the lovely, consecrated life just closed. Each one of them referred to her unusual love and devotion for the Bible in which the young lives, which her loving, patient training has wrought. At the close of the service she was remarkably well versed, her intense interest in all children, and the patient and painstaking care with which she trained them in the passages of the Holy Book. This was her greatest joy and delight, and she literally died with an open Bible on her bed. From her own earnings she has given a Bible to every boy and girl of the Home family, who is able to read. What a precious legacy to leave to her charges! It was indeed an affecting scene when the seventy-five orphans of the Home filed reverently past the bier, and looked for the last time upon the peaceful face of their loved friend and benefactor. Heaven alone will reveal the good influence on these plas-vice, the body was removed to the home of her brother, Mr. W. A. Bowman, near Liberty, and on Thursday morning the last services were conducted at Pleasant Union by her pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, assisted by Rev. G. F. Millaway. The many beautiful floral offerings were borne by a group of children from the Home, and burial was made in the cemetery there. And now comes the sad and unexpected shock of the news that her devoted brother, Rev. J. H. Bowman, pastor of Chatham circuit, died at the wheel of his car on Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock, while on his way to Bonlee to open revival services. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." Like Saul and Jonathan of old, "they were lovely and pleasant in their lives and in death they were not divided."

On Sunday morning Dr. Brown announced that he will take his vacation during the last two weeks of August, and the pulpit will be closed. Sunday school will be conducted as usual however. Dr. and Mrs. Brown will go to Westminster, Md. to visit their daughter, Mrs. George Armacost, and her family.

The Ladies' Aid Society will meet Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock with Mrs. J. E. Gibson on Fourth St. Associated hostesses will be Mesdames E. L. Douglas, Fred Younts, W. A. Davis, J. D. Hardy, G. L. Reynolds, and J. L. Shaw.

The Sunday school will give its annual outing and picnic next Thursday afternoon at Ritter's Lake, and the cars will leave the church about 1 o'clock, the hour for supper being 6 o'clock.

On Sunday, August 1, an interesting wedding took place when Mr. Rudolph Frazier and Miss Grace Yuncannon were united in marriage at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. Tom A. Sykes of the Friends church. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Frazier of this city, and his young bride is the younger daughter of Mrs. Cora Yuncannon of the Children's Home. The youthful couple will reside here, and the hearty congratulations and good wishes of a host of friends are tendered them.

The A. M. Idol Philathea Class will hold its monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. James T. Ryan on Parkway next Tuesday evening.

Mr. John S. Pickett has gone to Atlantic City.

Mrs. Sue Pritchard of Liberty R. F. D. has returned home after a visit to the family of her stepson Mr. J. H. Pritchard.

Thomasville.—We are glad to report that the general interest and strength of the work here is on the upward trend. More interest is shown in the attendance and attention at the worship services. But more important perhaps is the great amount of work the force is accomplishing in all the departments of the church and Sunday school.

We were favored with a visit from Rev. H. W. Maier of Chicago a week ago. And a week prior to that date we were visited by Mrs.

Maier who was at the time employed by the faculty of the Young Peoples' Conference in session at High Point College. Both these special workers from Chicago brought encouragement to our people at Community Church.

The church building which at all times is attractive was made all the more so Sunday by the fine collection of flowers brought by the flower committee. Some special work has been done on the lawn also which adds considerably to the appearance of the site at our church.

With the improvements and with the loyal work of all the members of the church force we are constantly progressing and looking for better things in the service of the Master at Thomasville. P. E. Lindley.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—It has been some time since a report from this church was made. We have been going forward with the church and Sunday school work for the past few weeks. Our Sunday school has held up in attendance and interest during the warm summer months. The attendance last Sunday was 153.

A plan of creating more interest in the Sunday school has been followed by the superintendent, Bro. H. C. Koontz, in giving the different classes a little program and serving refreshments. Two or three classes at a time have been entertained in this manner. During the week following the third Sunday in last month the entire school enjoyed a barbecue at the home of Brother C. L. Hedrick, teacher of the men's class.

The congregation last Sunday night was delighted with the presence of Rev. M. P. Chambliss, who was the preacher for the service. Bro. Chambliss delivered a very helpful sermon on the text, Rev. 3:20, "Behold, I stand at the door." He helped Bro. Crutchfield in the Mount Carmel revival meeting last week and is helping in the Jerusalem meeting this week. Bro. Chambliss is a pleasant, forceful preacher who makes his sermons interesting and effective with illustrations.

The meeting of the third quarterly conference for the South Davidson Charge will be held at Mount Carmel on Saturday afternoon of this week. Bro. Crutchfield had planned for Dr. Dixon to be present, but it is understood that he will not come but will make an official visit to our charge at a later date. We will learn at the quarterly meeting Saturday who is elected delegate to the next Annual Conference. The West Lexington church is expecting to have a large representation at the meeting.

Our pastor will take a week's vacation following next Sunday. He will visit relatives in Oragne county and attend the revival at his home church.

Preaching services will be held at West Lexington church next Sunday morning and night. Our pastor is expecting to preach a special sermon to the Redmen lodge at the night services. C. B. Way, Reporter.

State St. Church.—Bro. Bethea was able to preach for us last Sunday for the first time since his recent illness of about three weeks. He was given a vacation by unanimous vote at this service and will go on a camping trip after a visit to relatives and friends in Cleveland Co.

The first meeting of the C. E. Union was held in the First Presbyterian Church last Wednesday night, conducted by the president of the union, Mr. Milton Apperson. State St. Society won the banner, having the largest percentage present of any of the four societies represented.

Many of our folks are away on vacation and there is some sickness. Considering these conditions the Sunday school attendance is fine.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met last Thursday afternoon at the parsonage. An interesting program was given and some important business attended to. Mrs. Curtis Koonts, the enthusiastic and efficient president of the society, is leading out in a very encouraging way.

Arrangements are about complete for the beginning of work on the new church and the work will begin right soon now. Reporter.

Mizpah, Haw River Charge.—We had a great meeting last week. It does our souls good to go through such a meeting.

Rev. Mr. Pritchett preached two splendid sermons the first Sunday. On Monday Brother Reed preached two of the best sermons that he has ever preached at Mizpah.

On Tuesday morning Rev. Mr. Carson came to our aid.

I think that I can say for Mizpah Church that each and every one has been benefited through the plain gospel sermons that Bro. Carson gave us. Everyone seemed to love him. This was expressed in more ways than one. Our people also love their pastor and his dear wife. They are so sympathetic and thoughtful. A little experience meeting that we had at the church one night impressed me very much. From all parts of the church were heard these words, "Bro. Reed, you have been a father to me."

We were very glad to have members from other churches come and work and worship with us. A welcome awaits you at all times, "dear friends."

I think our prayer meeting at Mizpah is going to accomplish great good. Our children that are not old enough to make a talk memorize Bible verses to say.

The second Sunday our Sunday school attended the county Sunday school convention at Happy Home Church. We were very glad indeed to have the largest delegation from our Sunday school of any in the county. Our people came back full of new ideas, some of which I hope we may be able to use in our own school. Mrs. Fred Jones, Rep.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—Mr. Spencer gave us a good sermon yesterday from the story of the hand-writing on the wall, using as a text the three words, "Thou are weighed." He gave many plain and practical illustrations, some of Bible characters who were weighed and found wanting. Then he took up the commandments, one by one and showed how we may be found wanting when weighed in regard to them. I heard these comments afterward: "He certainly did hit us all," and "That is the best sermon he has preached." There was a pretty good congregation present. A lovely basket and vase of flowers on table and piano lent a very attractive touch. Mr. Spencer, as did Mr. Bethea, enjoys having flowers and often speaks of it. It is a feature nearly always present at our services.

Last fourth Sunday night we had a good congregation, and the singing was much better than usual, after some practice during the week. Mr. Spencer gave us a good sermon that night, also.

Our special meeting will begin here the second Sunday in September, and Mr. J. E. Pritchard is to help Mr. Spencer. Many will welcome Mr. Pritchard's return, as he was pastor of this circuit some years ago. We are expecting some good preaching.

M. H. S., Reporter.

Friendship Station—Our revival meeting has come to a close, a glorious meeting, and some of the best preaching. The preaching was so plain that even a little child could understand every word of the gospel and there was no reason why the grown up people ought not to understand the plan of salvation.

There were thirty odd conversions and renewals. Several fathers and young men were left out of the ark of safety. It seemed almost a burden to close the meeting but owing to the revivals starting at the other near by churches it had to come to a close, but that is no reason why the Christians should quit praying and unsaved quit seeking after salvation. Out of the thirty odd conversions and renewals seven were received into the church and we bid them godspeed.

We wish to express our appreciation to Dr. J. D. Williams for his faithful service to us during our revival meeting and we extend him a cordial welcome back to our church at any time he can make it suit.

Dr. Dixon, the President of our conference, brought us two wonderful messages on Thursday afternoon and another one Friday afternoon. It almost seemed impossible for any man to preach such wonderful sermons as he brought to us. We would be glad if he could visit our work more often than he does but we know it is impossible for him to visit our church over once a year.

Our conference year is coming to a close: have you done your duty this year? If you have not let's pledge ourselves to our Father which is above to do more next year than ever before. Pray for our church and community and we pledge the same.

MILLICENT'S RED SHOES.

Proud! Yes, indeed, Millicent certainly was proud of her pretty red shoes! "See her walk!" laughed big brother Clifford. "See how she sticks out her toes and bobs her head forward every step to look at them."

"I don't care; they are pretty, and I do love to watch them shine."

"But, my dear child," put in Auntie Lou "shoes are made to protect your feet, to allow you to walk comfortably over hard sidewalks and rough cobblestones; not to be looked at continually and admired. Some day you will take a header or get run over; then you won't have anything to be proud of—not even a whole neck maybe."

"Why, Auntie Lou, when I am outdoors I don't look at them—not when I am crossing the street, anyhow."

"You don't, hey!" It was Clifford speaking this time. "Didn't I see you with these very eyes pick your way slowly and carefully across Green street on your way to kindergarten; not a thought in your foolish young head to save your skin, just worried sick for fear you would get a spot of mud on those precious shoes. Why are you so proud of them anyway? You didn't buy them with money you earned; yet didn't make 'em or even sew the buttons on."

" 'Course I didn't," said Millicent scornfully. "But there isn't a single 'noter girl in this whole block that's got a pair like them Or nobody passing the window, either; I've been watching for ever so long."

"I should say she has," declared Aunty Lou. "Pulled the shade down so she'd see nothing but feet. I've half a mind to put those red boots back in their box until she can treat them like shoes instead of some kind of fancy bric-a-brac. She won't go out to play in them this afternoon for fear it'll rain and spot them. And not a cloud in the sky!"

"Yes, I will, too," cried Millicent. "I'm going over to Helen's right now; she's just come home this minute from a week at her grandmother's. I saw them drive up."

"And she hasn't had a glimpse of your new shoes yet," grinned Cliff. "What a treat's ahead of her. But," he added slowly, "she'll have to wait. First of all, before another thing happens, I'm going to show your royal highness that you are not the only one in this burg who has a pair of giddy red shoes. I'm going to sow you a whole bunch of them strutting along bobbing their heads exactly the way you do."

"With red shoes on?"

"That's what I said."

"Well, then, I don't believe you. I've watched and watched, and I haven't seen one other pair. Not since dad got them for me last Saturday."

"Believe it or not, I'm going to show you We're going to walk in the park; you'd better wear your red sweater."

The park, gay with autumn colored leaves, was only two blocks away. As Millicent, strutting beside her brother, passed Helen's house, she peeped longingly up at the windows. But no Helen was in sight to admire her new shoes. Strut, strut, more strut, and they reached the entrance to the park—a very popular and noisy place that sunshiny afternoon. Calls of: "Taxi—taxi," greeted them. "Balloons—get one for the kiddie." And then there was the peanut stand where Cliff stopped to spend a nickel. And people! gaily dressed people, laughing, talking, two steady streams of them, one pouring in, the other pouring out. Boys, girls, men, women, nursemaids, babies!

Millicent watched them carefully. "None of 'em's got any," she cried triumphantly. "Didn't I say so?"

"Hold your horses, don't go so fast," admonished Cliff. "I can see a dozen pairs at least just a little way ahead—by the fountain."

A dozen pairs of red shoes! There couldn't be. Where? Her own pair of red shoes carried her swiftly through the crowds and toward the goldfish fountain. Enough children were there certainly, flirting bright colored balloons about, exclaiming over the glistening goldfish, feeding a group of fluttering pigeons stepping about on the ground.

Millicent fluttered here and there like a young pigeon herself in her search for red shoes.

"There isn't—why, there isn't one pair on any of 'em!"

"You think so?" queried Cliff. "Well, you're wrong; you didn't look in the right place for them, that's all."

Millie looked up at her brother uncertainly, then severely—he was kidding her again. "I didn't look in the right place, didn't I? I looked on their feet, and that's just exactly the only place they can wear 'em."

"Come to think of it, that's a fact," agreed Cliff; "shoes would look sort of startling worn on the hands or even on the ears donkey fashion, wouldn't they? But what I really mean is, you didn't look at the right feet."

"Right feet," puzzled Millie. "But I did—and the left ones, too."

"But you didn't look at the right right feet and the right left feet."

"I looked at all there were."

"And you didn't see any red shoes. Well, well, on our way home we'll have to fit you out with a pair of spectacles. These peanuts now, can you by any chance see them?"

"Of, course I can."

"Good business! Suppose we sit down on this benth and see what we can do with these peanuts."

Extracting the nut meats from their shell, Cliff tossed the bits high in the air. What—oh, what was happening? Millicent caught her breath sharply; why were all these pigeons hurling themselves at her head? Why—no, it was the nut they were after. Dozens of great birds after one nut. And that big, fat, puffy one got it when he looked as if he was stuffed full of them already.

"You can help feed them, too," said Cliff, placing the bag on the bench between them. "But don't forget to keep a sharp lookout for red shoes."

"There just aren't any; you're only teasing me," asserted the little girl, beginning to shell the nuts and toss the meats into the air.

What quick darts the birds made with their long necks to get the nut. And such pretty necks, pinn, green, lavender feathers, changeable colors like Aunt Lou's silk dress. And their wings, how stiff they held them tight against their long stick out tails! And how they did wag their necks back and forth as they walked. Did it help them get along? she wondered.

"Oh, dear," she cried suddenly, "that big, fat pigeon gets nearly every one I throw!"

"And mine, too!" exclaimed Cliff. "See him grab that one. Wasn't he clever?"

"I think he's a horrid, greedy old thing. See him stick out his—his chest and waggle his old neck—"

"And why shouldn't he? Look what he's got on his feet."

And would you believe it? It wasn't until that minute Millicent noticed his red shoes. More like gloves they were, really, so snugly did they fit each stuck out toe. But they must be shoes, for he certainly wore them on his feet.

Millicent, biting back the tears, with some difficulty, walked gravely to the fountain and back; and not once did she bob her head forward to look at her shoes.

"Fine!" encouraged Cliff. "Now, see if you can walk home like that; I've got a date up-town."

Left alone, Millicent walked slowly homewards. And she didn't strut, and she didn't bobble. But she did laugh—when Helen came racing down her front steps and exclaimed: "Why, you've got a pair of red shoes just like mine. I didn't think there was another pair like them."

"Neither did I," giggled Millicent, grasping Helen's hand excitedly. "But the park's full of them. Honest it is. Come and see."—Lois Lorsen, in The Continent.

—I know it is very wrong to find a cause for smiles in a fellow man's infirmity, but I can never quench a titter when I recall the story of the visitor to London who asked to be directed to Shepherd's Market. "Y-you g-g-go down to P-p-piccadilly," the man replied to whom he put the question, "and w-w-when y-you c-come t-to the sec-second t-t-turning, y-y-you t-turn t-t-to the r-right."

"Thank you very much," said the visitor, and was proceeding on his way, when the man called out, "Hi!" He turned back. "D-d-do y-y-you know what the pop-pop-population of London is?" he was asked. "Well, yes, seven million or thereabouts," replied the visitor. "Th-th-then w-w-why," asked the man, "out of all th-th-these people did y-y-you p-p-pick on me?"—The Methodist Recorder.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—AUGUST 22.

The Ten Commandments: Duties to God.

Lesson Text: Ex. 20:1-11.

Golden Text: Deut. 6:5.

The Central Truth: By virtue of creation, redemption, and providence the Almighty has an unquestioned right to the worship, reverence and service of mankind.

Scriptural Points.

1. In the third month after the departure from Egypt the Israelites reached the desert of Sinai and camped before the mount. Here Moses went upon the mount to meet with God. And God proposed a new covenant with Israel, conveying two very precious promises, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Ex. 19:5, 6.

2. To keep these and other promises was God's part of the covenant. To obey the commandments and ordinances that God would give was Israel's part of the covenant. Israel accepted the terms of the covenant: "And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do."

3. The ten commandments were the substance of Israel's obligation under the covenant. In fact they constitute the soul of all moral obligation. They were written with the finger of God upon two tables of stone; probably the four expressing man's duties to God upon one stone, and the six defining our duties to man upon the other stone.

4. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" that is, in front of me, instead of me, or in preference to me. This commandment excludes any other deity except the one true and living God. The first commandment is exceeding brood. It forbids loving any person, object, treasure, idea, or pursuit in the stead of God, or more than God. This commandment imposes the supreme obligation to worship God, to adore, to entreat, to praise, to obey, and to serve.

5. The second commandment defines the spiritual character of worship, and forbids all materialistic and sensual forms and expressions of worship. Since God is a Spirit and there can be no image of Deity, all image-making and image-worship becomes gross idolatry. Such image worship is defined as hating God, which iniquity of the fathers is visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generations.

6. To worship and serve God is the appointed way of loving God, who has promised to "show mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments."

7. The third commandment enjoins reverence for the name, person, character, institutions and activities of God. It forbids all forms of profanity, all trifling with sacred things, and all uses of sacred things or functions for profane, sensuous, or worldly ends. The first petition of the Lord's Prayer adds much to the importance of observing this commandment: "Hallowed be thy name."

8. To violate this commandment invites the swift retribution of a jealous God. "For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

9. The fourth commandment sets forth one day out of seven for rest, worship, and the various ministries of mercy. Six days of toil are enjoined as well as the one day of rest. Beasts of burden, manufactories, and railroad trains are also enjoined to observe the Sabbath day.

10. Man's obligation to observe the rest day is made all the more binding from God's example of resting the seventh day after the six days of creation.

11. God here declares that He created the heavens and the earth in six calendar days. And yet the evolutionists would make Him out a liar by declaring that it took Him millions of years to do it.

Practical Points.

1. Hon. W. J. Bryan has made mention of nine modern rivals of the one true and living God. They are Gold, Fashion, Fame, Ease, Intellect, Travel, Chance, Passion, and Drink. He might have put Rationalism in the place of Intellect, and Pleasure in the place of Travel. The idolatry here set forth is becoming quite prevalent. God is entirely forgotten in these worldly and selfish pursuits. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." 1 John 5:21.

2. The worship of human beings is also common. Undue and selfish devotion to a ruler, a lover, or a member of the family not unfrequently shuts out the supreme regard for Deity. Jesus has said: "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Matt. 10:37.

3. Irreverence is on the increase. Open and foul swearing is quite common. General gossip, movie pictures, and low down fiction make light of God's name and all sacred things. "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea by yea, and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation." James 5:12.

4. Sabbath desecration has become a national sin. The pursuit of pleasure is a common pastime on God's holy day. The worship of a Ford tin lizzy, or any other make of automobile, on Sunday, is a degrading substitute for the worship of the God of glory. "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. 58:13, 14.

—At a London auction last week, a first-edition copy of John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" in its original sheepskin binding brought sixty-eight hundred pounds—about thirty-four thousand dollars. It was purchased by a London bookseller.

REVIVAL IN PROGRESS AT WEST END.

Revival meetings began at West End Church Sunday with good attendance at both services. Much preparation has been made for these meetings, and the opening services were very encouraging. After the evening meeting Sunday, one man made his peace with God.

Rev. Thos. J. Turkington, pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church of Washington, D. C., who will preach during the two weeks of the meetings, arrived Monday afternoon. He made a very favorable impression upon his congregation Monday night, with his music and preaching. Accompanying the congregational singing with his saxaphone, he not only delighted his hearers, but assisted onsiderably in the leading of the singing. His vocal solo was also very impressive. Part of the time during the meetings, he will accompany himself on his piano accordian. His musical ability is exceptional, and his preaching earnest, comprehensive and convincing.

Readers of this paper and friends of West End Church are urged to join with us in our efforts to save souls. Come if you can, but pray if you cannot attend.

First Church, Burlington.—We have been silent for some time but not asleep. On the 4th of July at eight o'clock the Children's Day program was given to a large and appreciative audience. The children were well trained and much credit is due the committee for the splendid way in which each and every child performed his or her part. The collection was $21.55.

During this month we will have no evening services, but will have the regular morning services. The second Sunday our pastor exchanged pulpits with Dr. J. B. Hurley, pastor of Front St. M. E. Church, and we also recently have had Mr. Robert Coucilman, assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church, preach for us.

On next Sunday morning Mr. Branson will preach for us. Mr. Taylor insists that his congregation support these morning services in his absence and make the assisting ministers feel welcome.

On last Sunday evening a play entitled, "Ruth the Loyal," also a short pageant, was given in the hut. The committee worked hard in training the characters for this beautiful Bible story and it was reflected in the s did way in which it was played. A silve ering was taken which will be used as a church fund by the intermediate Chri Endeavorers.

THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL.

By Isaac Watts.

The heavens declare Thy glory, Lord,
In every star Thy wisdom shines,
But when our eyes behold Thy Word,
We read Thy name in fairer lines.
Great Sun of righteousness arise;
Bless the dark world with heavenly light;
Thy Gospel makes the simple wise,
Thy laws are pure, Thy judgments right.
Thy noblest wonders here we view,
In souls renewed and sins forgiven;
Lord, cleanse my sins, my soul renew,
And make Thy Word my guide to heaven.

NO HERALD NEXT WEEK.

Next week is the time fixed upon for vacation week in the Herald Office. We have heretofore announced this event two weeks ahead. This year we could not foresee. We have leased the print-shop to a new firm of printers who will print the Herald for us. They are going to install a new linotype machine besides presses for job work. They were unable to foresee just when the machinery would come. But it has begun to come and must be installed promptly. This precipitated our vacation upon us at once. It will bring us a change if little rest. Week after next we expect the Herald to appear from the new printing firm about which we will tell you more in next issue. Till then goodbye.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Please read the following letter received by the editor and write me if you can supply the information desired. This request is directed especially to readers in the eastern part of the State:

"I have been referred to you as being in position to give me some information about my Grandfather, Rev. W. W. Hill. According to Drinkhouse's history of the M. P. Church in North Carolina he was one of the leaders in the reformation movement. The object of this letter, is, if possible to solicit your aid in ascertaining, through the old records of the M. P. Church in North Carolina the name of my great Grandfather, the father of Rev. W. W. Hill; it is my impression that he was a near descendant of Rev. Green Hill of old M. E. Church fame in your state. Paris history gives an account of the trial of Rev. W. W. Hill on the charge of sowing seed of dissension in the Church. This history was published the year before my Grandfather's death; two or three years there-after Paris published his Manual, and I thought perhaps we might get the information desired from this Manual or from some of the old Journal published in North Carolina immediately after the death of my Grandfather which was in 1849. I am inclosing two obituries of my Grandfather that you might see the line upon which I am working; both Rev. Green Hill and William W. Hill were from the same section of North Carolina.

"I would like very much to buy an old copy of Bassett's history as I understand there is a piece about my Grandfather in this work. "Dr. T. B. Hill."

The Ohio Conference has a standing committee on "Excuses." We presume it has plenty of work to do.

CALVARY THE ANSWER.

Calvary is the only answer to the desperate needs of the sinful heart, and this Gospel of Calvary and the Crucified One is as much needed today as it ever was before. I read recently of a dying man who sent for the minister, and said to him this—it is enough to break the heart of any minister to hear it—"I am dying. I want you to speak to me, and pray with me; but don't speak and pray like a parson; speak and pray like a man." God help us ministers; I am ashamed of it; You go to a man who is dying, and who knows it, and who wants to hear something that helps him. You tell him that Jesus was a great historic personality; you tell him that Jesus was a great social reformer: you tell him that Jesus was the incarnation of goodness. He says, "I don't want to hear that; tell me something like my sainted mother told me when I was an innocent boy. Tell me of One who can forgive my sins, one who can break my chains, One who can change my heart. Tell me the old, old story of Jesus and His love." That is what they want. You have to tell them of a Savior who loved them enough at Calvary to take their place and bear their sins in His own body on the tree, and a Savior who loves as much as ever, and is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by Him.—Word of Wisdom.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR RALLY.

There will be a Rally of the Third District Christian Endeavor Union at Mount Hermon Church the fifth Sunday, August the 29th. There will be both a morning and an afternoon session. The morning session will open at 10:30. A basket lunch will be spread on the church grounds at the noon hour. Bring a basket well filled.

Each pastor in the district is requested to use his influence to get as large a delegation of his young people as possible to attend this rally. Each organized society of course will be represented.

A program has been prepared that we believe will lend to the solution of our Christian Endeavor problems. Ex-State President of C. E., Mr. J. O. Corbett, will appear among others on the program.

Special music is being provided for both the morning and the afternoon session. Two banners will be awarded at the closing session; one to the society having the largest percent of its membership in attendtance at the rally, the other to the society leading in efficiency on the Standard M. P. Christian Endeavor Chart.

ALL FOR A GREAT RALLY. Get set, one, two, three, all off for Mount Hermon.

G. H. Hendry, President.

SHALL I TAKE AWAY PAIN?

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God:
"Lord, take away pain—
The shadow that darkens the world Thou hast made,
The close-coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar—
Lord, take away pain from the world Thou hast made,
That it love Thee the more!"
Then answered the Lord to the cry of His world:
"Shall I take away pain,
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?
Shall I take away pity, that knits heart to heart,
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?
Shall I take away love, that redeems with a price
And smiles at its loss?
Can ye spare from your lives, that would climb unto mine,
The Christ on His cross?"

II.

The Minister's Public Prayers.

We come now to consider the Minister's Public Prayers. The priest of God, now as of old, is a man of public prayer. A fixed part of the program of public worship is the prayer of the priest. In this function he speaks to God for the people, and in a very vital, tho not an exclusive sense, he is the medium through which they approach unto God. From both the divine and the human side, therefore, this is a matter of no little importance, and deserves earnest and careful consideration in this discussion, and by the minister himself.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," undoubtedly has its application in the public prayer of the minister, as well as in other phases of his work. When we make our sermons, I suppose that most of us feel that we must regard this exhortation; I fear, however, that but few of us remember it when we make our public prayers. This is not said in the spirit of belittling such prayers; far from that, but rather to give emphasis to the fact that most of us fail to give the study to public prayers that they deserve.

I once heard Doctor H. L. Elderdice say that he was invited to preach on a certain occasion, and the little time that he had for preparation was given, not to his sermon, but to his prayer.

I doubt if I am overstating the matter when I say that there is no part of public worship potentially of more good to the people than the minister's public prayer. My own experience bears confirmation to this statement.

Some years ago it was my privilege to attend regularly the preaching services of a very able minister. Of course I enjoyed his sermons, and was edified by them. But I can not say that I was helped more by his sermons than I was by his prayers. I followed him in my thought with deep earnestness and keen delight, as he appealed to God in prayer for the congregation. And if I can rightly interpret what it was in his praying that so helped me, it was this:—he spoke to God for me, in a manner better than I could do it, what were the feelings and desires of my own heart. His prayers were my prayers. I felt that he was my spokesman at the throne of grace, and I was pleased and edified at the way he presented to the Father my need, my desires, and my praise. His public prayer helped me to worship, and stimulated in my heart a deeper spiritual interest.

You will not take issue with me. I am sure when I say that this should be the end of all public praying. And yet I wonder if it is? I sometimes wonder if the long, formal public prayer is not often tiring rather than edifying to the people, and if they do not breathe a sigh of relief when it is over.

Is this suggestion, or even the thought, unkind to the minister, and unjust to the people? It is certainly not said in any spirit of hard criticism, but rather in love, and with the understanding that, tho priests of God, we are nevertheless human, and even in the matter of public prayers we may have our faults.

The purpose of public worship is not to deliver a sermon of a certain length; to offer a prayer of a fixed form; or to have musical program rendered according to the perfect standards of critical ears. The purpose of public worship is to edify the people, and to inspire in them the spirit of worship and devotion to God. It is the duty of the minister to plan the order of worship with this in view, and to bring, not only his sermon, but his public prayers also to the test of this purpose.

What, then, we may ask, is essential that our public prayers may contribute to this good end? The piety of the priest is not enough. This, of course, is essential, but it is not all. I recently heard this comment on a worker in a certain religious field; "She is just as good as she can be, and what she says is well thought out, but O, if she just had some animation!" She was teaching the truth, but in the judgment of this observer she was not making it most effective with her hearers. This is sometimes true of public prayer. It may proceed from a sincere heart and still be lost in its helpfulness.

What are these Essentials?

1. The Content of the Prayer. Of course all of us will agree that fervency of spirit—the fervency that comes from contact with God—is the first essential in all praying. We may say words without this but we can not pray without it. However, this fervency of spirit needs right direction. A general prayer, that deals in generalities only, may miss entirely the congregation for whom it is being made. The prayer of the priest that helps the people most, is, like the sermon, the prayer that is closest to them—the prayer that deals with their own individual problems and needs. This fact is strikingly noticeable in the published prayers of Henry Ward Beecher. Whether the matter about which he prayed was remote or immediate, he brought it very near the hearts of the people and made it their matter. There is, of course, a sense in which all of humanity is to be included in our prayers, but there is no sense in which the individual, or group of individuals, is to feel lost in the generalities with which the prayer deals.

The content of the public prayer will determine in a large measure whether or not it is helpful to the people.

2. The Length. This is another determining factor in the effectiveness of public prayer. I fear that God often finds it impossible to use most helpfully the public prayer because it is too long. It is related that Mr. Moody called on a brother to pray in one of his meetings. The prayer grew too long to be helpful to the immediate spiritual condition of the service, and Mr. Moody rose to the situation by announcing a hymn, and said, "Let us sing while the brother finishes his prayer." You may not agree with his tactics, but you will agree, I think, that in his judgment a long prayer may dissipate the fervor o congregation.

How long the public prayer is to be is a matter of fixed rule. It certainly ough be long enough to be dignified, and not long to be tiring. Unless one is gifted in pr er, it is difficult to maintain a sustained terest on the part of the congregation many minutes. And public prayer that not arouse and sustain interest is lost, so as the people are concerned. Beecher's p lic prayers were from six to twelve min in length. John Watson's (Ian Macla were three to six minutes.

Prayers, like sermons, are not to be m ured by the clock; but it is well to remem that the merit of neither is in its length.

3. It Must Be Heard. In his public pra the minister speaks for the congregation, every auditor should hear and understand words. Otherwise, he might just as well p in silence. If the congregation can not h what he is saying in his prayer, they can be inspired by it to feelings of worship praise and consecration, any more than t can by his sermon if they do not hear t The minister need not yell to make him understood, but he should speak in suc tone as to make his voice clearly underst to every auditor. It is for the people that prays, and if they can not hear what he s they lose the benefit of being able to fo him in his prayers.

This phase of the subject suggests the m ter of bodily posture in public prayer. Sho the minister stand or kneel? There is scripture teaching that requires conformity any bodily posture. Kneeling and stand were both practiced in bible times. Howe I knew a minister once to be criticized cause he stood while offering his public pr er. This, I think, is a matter of taste training and should be determined by o own personal feelings and by the effect u his congregation. If he kneels, he should f his congregation, and there should be noth between him and them, in the way of pu furniture, that would obstruct his voice. he can be better heard by standing, and h greater liberty in his prayers, then he sho stand. Any way, this must be remembe If the public prayer is effective, it MUST heard by the people.

4. Must not be Stereotyped. Prayer, a part of public worship, that lacks freshn is just as dull as a musty sermon. The redeeming thing about it is it does not quite as long.

A repetition of words and ideas gr mentally and spiritually insipid, and we failingly find ourselves closing up aga them. This is just as true of public pray as it is of public speaking. Our public pr ers, therefore, should be kept fresh, both ideas, and forms of expression. All ste typed repetitious, like the following sh be scrupulously avoided: "Our heavenly ther." "Our heavenly Father." "Our heav ly Father." He is our heavenly Father, we like to approach him through that end ing term: but to repeat it over and over ag does not make him any more our heave Father, nor does it add effectiveness to prayers.

This is only one of the many fixed forms in- which the minister may find himself fall- g. By the very nature of his work, he is r to this evil, and only the most heroic ligence will save him from it. He must atch, as well as pray.

The Music of Public Worship.

This is a matter that vitally concerns pub- e worship, and the minister's relationship to , and may fittingly, therefore, have consid- ation in this discussion.

The minister may not be able to sing, but does seem that he should select the hymns, nd announce them from the pulpit. There ap- ears to be ample justification for this. In the rst place, it puts the minister in his right- l position as the responsible head of the ervice. He is appointed to conduct public orship, and an orderly procedure is a vital art of it. And since the music plays an im- ortant part in the worship, it becomes his uty to give it his attention along with the ther forms of the worship.

The fitness of the minister's place here is urther emphasized when we remember that ne purpose of the music is to give emphasis o the sermon thought, and certainly no one s better fitted to select the music with this n view than the minister himself. If his sub- ect is "Enthusiasm is an Essential in King- om Service," he does not want to sing, "Hark! from the Tomb the Doleful Sound." f he is preaching on "The Christian's eace," he does not want to sing, "Onward hristian Soldiers." I once heard a minis- er say that in a revival meeting, when the ltar was filled with penitents, he called for song, and the response was, "We will close p the Bible and go Home." Of course such isfits are unusual—perhaps they are—but hey are liable to occur unless some one who s familiar with the sermon thought and the equirements of the occasion selects the mu- ic.

The minister should do more than select he hymns; he should stand before the con- regation and announce the number, and in- ite the people to sing. Like the Psalmist of ld, he should say, "Let the people sing! Let LL the people sing!" Not just the choir. hey have their part, but they can not do the inging for the congregation. The tendency o do away with congregational singing is a nost deplorable thing in public worship, and o check it, we need modern-day psalmists who will cry out from their pulpits, "LET THE PEOPLE SING! LET ALL THE PEO- PLE SING!" I believe in the church choir. think it has an important place in church worship; but if we are to give up congrega- ional singing or the choir, let us give up the choir. I have sometimes felt grieved, and it as been with difficulty that I have kept quiet when I have heard persons begging for peo- le to come out of the congregation and fill p the choir, as tho no good singers were needed in the congregation. Yes, let us have the choir, but along with it let us have con- regational singing. And I do not know of ny one who has a greater duty and a more nlendid opportunity than does God's priest who stands before the people as their leader n spiritual things.

Let him, therefore stand before the congre- gation, and with book in hand, announce the hymns, and urge the people to sing. This gives order and dignity to the service, and is, t seems to me, an important function of God's ministering priest.

Now, brethren, my task is accomplished. I have not attempted to addres s you as one who speaks with authority. The ideals that have been held before us in this discussion are challenges to a full-measured "Minister as Priest," rather than any goals to which I myself have attained. If any should seem to be wanting in these ideals, yea, in these im- perative necessities, I more. The treasures of our ministry are in earthen vessels, and it is perhaps true that but few of us feel that we have attained unto that for which we were apprehended. But with earnest strivings, to press forward, "confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in us will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ," and that abounding grace will be vouched-safe unto us that we may "finish our course with joy, and the ministry which we have received of the Lord Jesus, to testi- fy the gospel of the grace of God."

THE KINGDOM OF THE HEAVENS.

To a person who has not discovered it, it will be quite a surprise to be told that the term, "Kingdom of heaven," as we have it our English version of the New Testament, is the "Kingdom of the heavens"—plural— in the original. If you have not seen, or dis- covered this, examine and see. The "King- dom of the heavens" is a broader, fuller, grander, more, sublime, all-embracing term. than the "Kingdom of heaven." The former would seem to embrace all worlds, while the latter would seem to have a more local, cir- cumscribed, meaning.

In introducing the parables, the expression, the "Kingdom of heaven is likened unto" this or that, in the original it is the "King- dom of the heavens is likened unto" this or that.

It's "repent, for the kingdom of the heav- ens is at hand." "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their is the kingdom of the heav- ens". "Blessed are they which are persecut- ed for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of the heavens." And, "great is your reward in the heavens." It's "an inher- itance incorruptible and undefiled and fadeth not away, reserved in the heavens for you." 1 Pet. 1:4. "The kingdom of the heavens suf- fereth violence" &c.

It's "Who is greatest in the kingdom of the heavens." "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of the heavens." "Is great- est in the kingdom of the heavens." Matt. 18: 1-4. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of the heavens." In reference to do- ing and teaching, or breaking and teaching, "these least commandments," constitutes one the "least" or "greatest in the kingdom of the heavens." "Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of the heavens." "There are some ....which have made themselves ennuchs for the kingdom of the heavens' sake."

And to Peter Jesus said, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in the heavens." "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of the heavens: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in the heavens. and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shalt be loosed in the heavens." Matt. 16; 17, 19.

And further, it's "your Father which is in the heavens," not "heaven." "Your Father which art in the heavens," not "heaven," in the Lord's prayer, and so in all similar passages.

It's "repent for the kingdom of the heav- ens is at hand," not "heaven." And great is your reward in the "heavens."

These references are suggestive. Not ex- haustive Think it over and see if the king- dom of the "heavens," not "heaven," and our Father in the "heavens." not "heaven," does not carry with ita more heightened, sub- limer, more glorious meaning. He is the one not only in what we conceive to be "heav- en." but in all the millions and millions of worlds in the boundlessness of space. He is there. "Our Father's house." The infinite Universe our Father's house, and each world a "mansion," and to one of these Jesus has gone to "prepare." "O thou that dwellest in the heavens," said the psalmist.

The idea that some have that the "many mansions" are many rooms in a great big house and that Jesus is fitting up a room, or apartment, for each, is local, crude, and childish. "My Father's house" of John 14, can be nothing less than the boundless Uni- verse of God, in which the Father dwells, and in this Universe are "many mansions," worlds; and Jesus was about to leave one, the earth, and go to another, and "prepare" it for his people, and come again, and re- ceive them unto himself, that where he is there they may be also.

Another passage touching this subject, that should have been given above. "I say unto you, that in the heavens, their angels do al- ways behold the face of my Father which is in the heavens." Our Father is in the heav- ens. The angels are in the heavens. Not local, but universal. But there are a few passages that seem to have a local, or specific, mean- ing. "lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," "and thou shalt have treasure in heaven," Mat. 6:20, 19; 21. These being in the singular, may refer to the "place," Jesus has gone to "prepare."

A few other passages refer to the local heaven, belonging to the earth, as the "clouds of heaven," the "sign of the son of man in heaven." But the far greater number of pas- sages is in the plural,—"the kingdom of the heavens," "Your Father which is in the heavens," "great is your reward in the heav- ens." "an inheritance,....reserved in the heavens." "rejoice rather that your names are written in the heavens." "assembly of first-born in the heavens," "the hope laid up for you in the heavens." "The kingdom of the heavens" is the universal kingdom, and Jesus Christ is its universal, eternal king, for you in the heavens." "The kingdom of the heavens" is the universal kingdom, and

Jesus Christ is its universal, eternal king, "without beginning of days or end of years." The "I Am That I Am."

"By him were all things created, that are in the heavens, and that are in the earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers." Col. 1; 16.

"And having made peace by the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in the earth, or things in the heavens." Col. 1; 20.

"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family (or every family) in the heavens and earth is named." Eph. 3; 14, 15. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in the heavenlies might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God."

It is stated that Jesus has created all things in the heavens and in the earth; "and having made peace by the blood of his cross," "to reconcile all things unto himself; ....whether they be things in the earth, or things in the heavens," that his death—the redemptive scheme—has to do with the whole universe. Not simply earth and heaven, as we conceive it to be, but the entire universe.

"The whole (or every family) in the heavens and earth is named," of Jesus. "The manifold wisdom of God," is to be "known," "by the church" to "the principalities and powers in the heavenlies."

So Jesus has to do with all intelligences. Men, angels of all orders. What, or all, that the "principalities and powers" means, or involves, there is no way of our knowing. Suffice to say, that the "kingdom of the heavens" extends to every part of the Universe—to every nook and corner, to its outermost edge, if there be any edge. Touches all creatures, good and bad, high and low. To use a Swedenborgian term, it extends to the "hells" as well as to the Paradises. Some one may say, "Does God rule in hell?" Yes, God rules in hell in the same sense that the state rules on the chain-gang or in the penitentiary. Yes, justice is being meted out in those places of punishment, by the "kingdom of the heavens," as much so, as in the regions of bliss.

This shows the omnipresence of God, as this "kingdom of the heavens" is the same as the "kingdom of God." The Father is in the "heavens," and the "kingdom is of the heavens." The two co-extensive and co-eternal. But Jesus the God-man, has gone to a "place" in the "heavens," to "prepare." His body is not omnipresent. He went, in his glorious body, and will "come again" in the same. And his saints are to have "bodies," "like unto his glorious body." And as Dr. Stanton believes, in his "Starry Universe, The Christian's Future Empire," the saints in this "glorious body" will be able to travel this boundless Universe without restraint.

All power, or authority, being given unto Jesus in the heavens and in the earth, he is to "reign" until he has "put down all rule, and all authority and power." Then the "kingdom is to be delivered up to God the Father" and he shall be all and all, world without end.

"Kingdom of the heavens." "Our Father which in the heavens."

"The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all." Psa. 103: 19. J. F. Dosier.

A LIMIT TO TOBACCO RESISTANCE.

Will H. Brown.

When any objectionable substance is taken into the body it begins to throw it off, where possible, and to build up a resistonce. The Narcotic Education Association of Los Angeles, in a leaflet on this subject, says that although one to two grains of morphine is a fatal dose to a person unaccustomed to the drug, TEN grains daily is common for an addict, many taking TWENTY, and some FIFTY grains per day. There are instances on record where some have taken more than one hundred grains daily.

The tobacco habit acts in the same manner. What would kill a non-user of the weed, is taken by many habituated addicts with no noticeable serious effects, but all the time it is getting in its deadly work, just the same. There comes a time if the victim persists, when the body can build up NO FURTHER RESISTANCE. Then the end comes. The heart CEASES TO BEAT. The victim is DEAD.

The time to stop is before one begins. It is better to live to a good old age, and to live free, than to be a slave to a habit that keeps calling for more and more, in an accumulative enslaving effect, like some force drawing a traveler on in a pathway that leads but to a steep precipice over which he must plunge to certain death.

As the body builds up resistance to nicotine as long as possible, so does the brain. Some workers, who have labored under the delusion that smoking has made them more keen, mentally, only to learn later on that when a certain limit has been reached, smoking has had just the opposite effect; that then the more they smoked, the less active seemed the brain. This one fact has driven some thoughtful writers to entirely give up the smoking habit.

THE PIAZZA GIRL.

"There have been six girls in the office this morning," the dean remarked, glancing keenly at the gray-eyed girl before him, "who have said that they were willing to do anything to earn a little money."

The gray-eyed girl did not flinch. "But I am ready to do anything," she answered with a smile that emphasized the significant word.

The dean turned to his desk and rumaged in one of the pigeonholes.

"There are several ladies on the campus who are in need of some one to sweep their walks every day and wash their piazzas once or twice a week. Are you willing to do that? Of course it will not bring you in much, but it is all I have to offer at present."

"I shall be glad to do it," the girl replied. "May I have their addresses? Thank you very much."

The dean, leaning back in his chair, watched his visitor as she crossed the campus. Six other girls had refused the work that mor ing. "But it remains to be seen whether s does it after all," he said to himself.

She did it; every morning for nine days passed her on his before breakfast constit tional. She always spoke brightly, with no a parent consciousness of broom or mop.

"Means what she says, gives honest wor no false pride," the dean thought with sa isfaction. Then suddenly the piazzas had relapse; when two weeks later he met h he asked about it.

"Oh," she explained, "I am doing typ writing for Professor Summer. He asked n if I could do it as well as I could sweep walk and, I told him I could. It is fascinating wo —copying the notes of his experiments."

"I have no doubt," the dean declare "that you intend to perform experiments your own some day."

"I am going to try," she laughed.

When he reached that point in his favori tory, the old professor always stopped.

"And did she?" somebody was sure ask.

"No," he fumed, "she went and married young upstart of an instructor. She swept h piazza for a while, till he made a reputatio and she copied his notes, and I have no dou did half his work—he always said so."

"It seems a pity," the sympathetic liste er, lured on so far, would probably begin, o ly to be vehemently interrupted.

"Pity? Where's the pity? What's a pity She helped man do his work in the worl and brought up three sons, any of who would have washed piazza floors cheerfully get an education. One is building bridges o West, one is helping build brains in the Eas the third is still in college. I'd like to kno how a woman could put her education to be ter use?"

Then he would smile and look out acro the campus, with its group of girls. I us to doubt the wisdom of higher education f girls. The girl who washes piazzas convert me, he would finish.—The Youth's Compa ion.

"THE ROCK OF AGES."

"Upon this rock," said Jesus, "I will bui my church and the gates of hell shall not pr vail against it." The rock upon which t Church is set is the deity of Jesus, and long as the Church stands firmly upon it has promised that the gates of hell shall ne er prevail.

We are passing now through days of tes ing. Churches are examining their cree once more, and some of them are letting t old faith go. But wherever you find a chur that has parted company with the deity Jesus, over that that church you can inscri the words that God wrote over the house El, "The glory hath departed."

And what is true of the church is true individuals. Christian life is based on beli in Jesus as Savior and Lord. There are m and women who claim to be Christians, b unless with Simon Peter they can say, "Th art the Christ, the Son of the living God, they have no claim to the title.—From t Presbyterian Standard.

MAKING THE BEST OF EVERYTHING.

"In my quiet moments I say to myself, Fanny, there are many worse things than blindness that might have happened to you. The loss of the mind is a thousand time worse than the loss of the eyes.' Then I might have been speechless and deaf. I do not know, but on the whole it has been a good thing that I have been blind. How in the world could I have lived had I not been blind? I am very well satisfied. I never let anything trouble me, and to my implicit faith, and to my implicit trust in my heavenly Father's goodness, I attribute my good health and long life. If I didn't get the thing I wanted one day, well, I'd usually get it the next. If not then, well, I realized that it wasn't good for me to have it at all. In the case of my loss of sight I can see how the Lord permitted it. He didn't order it; He permitted it. I have heard my heavenly Father say: 'What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter,' and for my consolation I repeat:

'His purpose will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.' "

PRAY AMONG YOUR TREASURES.

"But thou when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut the door, pray."—Matt. 6:6. "Closet," "inner chamber," "store-chamber" (Luke 12:24), these are all translations of the same word. And its first meaning is "treasury." When there were no banks, each householder had his own strong room. Here he stored his treasure. Here he kept his accounts and made up his pay-roll. All his most valuable possessions were gathered here. None but his intimates ever saw this place. When he had some secret matter to talk over with a friend, he led him to this room. And Jesus advises us to treat God like an intimate. Go with Him to the place of utmost privacy. Say what you have to say to Him, in the same place and with the same sense of secret importance that you have when you reveal business or political matters to a trusted familiar. Treat God with something of the same ceremonious importance. It is a weighty thing you are going to say now. A destiny depends upon your words. Talk it over with your Father in the place of secrets.

And it is not possible to read "enter into thy treasury" without recalling something of all that Jesus said about the everlasting importance of money; how we must turn our mammon into heavenly values. Try it in your treasury. Pray over your check book. Pray with your bank book open before you, as you have your Bible now. "Enter into thy treasury" with God. Treat Him as an intimate. Show Him your valuables. Talk them over with Him. Count them in His presence. Ask Him how much He thinks they are worth. —George A. Frantz, in Assembly Herald.

How shall I bind myself to eternity except by giving myself to Him who is eternal in obedient love? Obedient love! Loving obedience! That is what binds the soul of the less to the soul of the greater everywhere. I give myself to the eternal Christ, and in His eternity I find my own. In His service I am bound to Him, and the shortness of that life, whose limitations in any way shut me out from Him, becomes an inspiration, not a burden to me. Oh, my dear friends, you who with Christian faith have seen a Christian die, tell me, was not this short life then revealed to you in all its beauty? Did you not see completely that no life was too long which Christ had filled with the gift and knowledge of Himself; no life was too short which departed from the earth only to go and be with Him in Heaven forever.—Phillips Brooks.

AFTER OUR FAILURE—CHRIST.

If we have just sinned, let us turn to Christ now. That is the only thing to do with sin: take it to Christ. Felix Bovet, the Swiss critic and master of erudition, has this penetrating comment on Peter's course after his fall: "Peter shamefully denied his Master before His face. If Peter had been a craven soul he would have been glad never again to see the Lord, for so he would have escaped His rebuke and a merited chastisement. But no! When he heard that the body was no longer in the tomb, that it was even possible that the Lord lived, he ran with eagerness to meet Him. What forgetfulness of self did this not presuppose, and what faith in his Master!" Judas never wanted to see Christ again, after his sin. Peter "ran with eagerness to meet him." Judas was lost. Peter was saved,—before his sin he was saved, and that was why he longed to get back to Chirst. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." If we have just sinned, let us turn to Him now.—Selected.

HOW TO PROSPER.

Know your business thoroughly. Do it faithfully. Avoid disputes and strifes. Keep your own secrets. Mind your own affairs and let others mind theirs. Be courteous to all. Confide in few. Do right at all hazards. Think more of what a man is than of what he has. Do not waste strength in fretting at unalterable evils. When you are annoyed, do not make a fuss about it. Keep a cheerful heart and a calm countenance. Be temperate in all things. Do not be hurried, and do not allow others to hurry you. Take time to think. Guard against people who always justify your course. Seek honest judgment rather than flattering sympathy. Never fear to own a fault. Do right by others, whether they do right by you or not. Keep the Lord ever before your face, and death, judgment and immortal glory all in full view. "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." Make this life but the beginning of a life that shall be endless as eternity, and glorious as the stars of heaven.—Selected.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Two Coins.

The little son of the daughter of Keturah, who is named for me, spake unto me on the morning of the Sabbath, saying, Grandpa, wilt thou loan me a Penny?

And I said, I will even give one unto thee.

But he said, Nay, on the morrow I will work for thee to the value of a Penny.

And I knew that that was better than the gift.

And he drew from his pocket a Nickel. And he took the Penny that I gave unto him, and he looked at the two coins in his hand, and he put them both in his pocket and jingled them.

And I inquired of him his System of Finance.

And he said, I go to Sunday School, and I there give a Nickel,

And I said, Thou didst already have a Nickel.

And he said, Yea, but I like to have some Money left. Moreover, I like to take out my Money, and Sort it Over, and select the Coin that I shall give, and put the rest back in my Pocket.

And I inquired, How would it do to have Two Pence beside the Nickel?

And he said, Nay, for that would be a Needless Responsibility. If I have Money left over after I have given, that is enough. I should feel no richer if I had more, and I might lose some of it.

So he went to Sunday School, and when the Basket was passed, he took out his Two Coins, and thoughtfully elected the Nickel, and put it in the Basket, and returned the Copper coin to his pocket and came home happy and content.

And I considered his System, and I said, He is a Wise Financier, and he is not likely to suffer want. He provideth for his Expenditure and a Margin, and he careth not for Needless hoarding. Yea, he giveth his Larger Coin, and cometh back Happy and Whistling because he still is Rich.

And I would that other and older men would learn his method. For many of them give the Smaller Coin and are poor in the super-abundance of what they have left. For it is that which a man giveth that he really hath, and what one spendeth gladly for love's sake is that which maketh him rich.—Sel.

THE UNIVERSAL NEED

Everywhere men worship. It indicates an outreaching for God inherent in human nature, and that religion is essential to life.

The religions born of men's yearnings, reasonings, and experiences, whatever their origin, name or habitat, and whether fashioned into elaborated canon or ritual, or merely traditional beliefs and practices handed down for generations, have swayed and still sway millions who differ in racial characteristics, and are scattered over the earth.

Whatever of merit is in their creeds or writings, whether elevating or debasing their rites and ceremonies or race-encompassing in their purposes and proffers, we may well believe their founders, and their sincere followers sought the right path of life.

That they failed of the objective is demonstrated by the peoples and conditions of heathen lands, and verify anew "the world by wisdom knew not God," for God is self-revealed.

But all they came to believe and achieve cannot be classed as false and base, for true searching for God ever yields some truth, however much beclouded by man's limitations, environment and kindred handicaps.

Christianity, on the other hand, rightly claims and proves by its course, its authority, its revealings, and its offers, that it is of God, therefore absolutely true, all-sufficient, ever meeting completely the needs of men everywhere.

Nevertheless both in its adherents, and in their deductions, creations and manner of life, too often are found deviations from its unchanging standards and requirements, which inevitably bring a lessning of its rich benefactions and blessings, and lose of spiritual power.

From no other source has mankind received such a conception of God, nor has the world ever had a perfect being other than His Son, whose perfections of character and life challenge man's best efforts, and before whom the noblest, most learned and exalted have bowed in penitence to receive Divine pardon, guidance and strength for living and serving on the way to glory and blessedness.

How then can Christianity, and its Great Head, who tasted "death for every man," be considered as of the same kind and value as man devised religions and their founders.

All the others have had free range, and oft with greatest possible patronage, but failed to render the service men and nations needed. But Christianity has accomplished, is now accomplishing, and ever able to accomplish all required of a religion, and must be conceded to be the one all-sufficient revelation presenting a Savior "able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him."

It must be the dominant religion, and its adherents are divinely commanded, the love of Christ constrains them to share what they possess, yes, to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

There can be no escape from this obligation, on the fulfilling of which by all Christians so much vital to the human family depends.

If discoverers, inventors and other benefactors of the race had kept to themselves what they found, conceived, or made, the world would be today where it was centuries ago, and its present impoverished moral and spiritual condition is due very largely to the fact that Christians have selfishly kept the Gospel to themselves when it was bestowed not merely to be enriched thereby, but also to be given to the whole world.

Are you responding to God's call which comes out of the needs of the needs of the foreign missionary work of your own church? They are most pressing, you can and ought to help to meet them at once. Fred C. Klein.

"CRITICISM."

Criticism is really a fine art. That is, when it is done properly. But the free expression of immature opinion is unsafe and dangerous.

The reason ordinary criticism is bad is simply because it is "ordinary." Everybody knows that about ninety percent of all talk is poorly thought out and seasoned. This results in the danger commonly attached to criticism. It has ever been said that "talk is cheap." Herein lies the danger. Talk is so economic in production it requires no capital to operate the talking business. But regardless of the inexpense of the conversational material the results may be as far-reaching as if it cost millions. Generally when anything is cheap enough for all to "come in on" it is to be rated rather low in the scale of constructive forces. A bullet will kill just as instantly from the hand of the illiterate peasant as from the hand of a king. Words often do the same.

Our old friend Shakespeare, spoke of lending many thy ears but few thy tongue. And James declared the wisdom of being swift to hear but slow to speak. If you want to give advice and wish to do so with the perfect assurance that it will be real wisdom you may speak of bridling the tongue, for it is known universally that great danger lies in that "unruly member."

Even at that I would not attempt to suggest that people talk too much. I don't think we do. But what is worse, we often employ the wrong subject! Or, again, we may mistreat the subject. Finally we may use hurtful emphasis in the way we handle the conversation.

It works both ways. The critic generally is the loser. Like the stenographer who keeps a carbon copy of the letter she sends, so also the speaker retains the imprint of all he says on his own nature. The criticism may be lost and never reach the person in question but the impression made in the original mind will never, says psychology, be outlived.

So after all it is a matter of personal profection to avoid the habit of criticizing. One's mind is fed by its own action. No thought or impression is lost, hence the best insurance against the very fault one criticises in another is a thoughtful, uncritical disposition on the part of the person who is tempted to criticize. In other words "judge not" for the simple reason that if we judge we are by that very act advertising ourselves to others and are being judged. P. E. Lindley.

THE TEST.

By Elizabeth Cheney.

A New Religion came to me
With buoyant step and radiant smile,
And at my door asked joyously
Just to come in and chat awhile.
Her jewelled hands were fair to see,
Her white robe glistened in the sun,
'Twas quite agreeable to me
To listen to her silver tongue.
She spoke of health and wealth and peace
Of pleasure and prosperity,
Of Love Divine that fills all space,
The only great reality.
Despite her look, her smile, her speech,
My spirit shrank, strange to remark,
Like one whose groping fingers reach
Some cold, dead thing amid the dark.
"Give me," I cried, "O stranger-guest,
Before I entertain thy plea,
An answer to this one request—
Dost come by way of Calvary?"
Swift changed her eyes from noon to nig
Her smile to cold, superior scorn;
She vanished on my wondering sight,
But left me neither sad nor lorn.
A Shining Presence filled my room,
A voice divine spoke peace to me,
A Person full of Truth and Grace,
Who came by way of Calvary.

REASONS FOR NOT DANCING.

Here are a few of the many reasons for fraining from a popular pastime that has ways been attended by appalling consequences:

The liberties indulged in dancing are where else allowed in decent society, and der other circumstances they furnish gro for divorce.

It brings virtue in close connection v vice, at late hours and under excitement which virtue is well-nigh powerless.

Men do not choose to dance with th selves, nor even their own wives or sister

Beyond the thrill of music and the poe of motion, its charm seems to be a sex p erence.

Indeed, it is so allied to licentiousness t the vilest places in our cities are ca "Dance Houses."

RALLY DAY AGAIN!

Rally Day is coming to be as significant in ie church calendar as Ester or Children's ay. It does not carry with it as wonderful a eaning as Easter and Christmas but it offs a special opportunity which these days do ot have. As its name indicates it is a time to al'y the entire church for the work of the all and winter. It comes at a time when most f our churches are beginning a new conferce year. A special effort is felt necessary to ive to all a new impulse, to arouse everyone renewed interest and enthusiasm, to give the pastor's program the united support of very department.

This is the third year the day has been set part for the use of the Board of Education. he support given the last two years is greatly appreciated. In fact the offerings have been fty percent larger than formerly. Yet they re still but fifty percent of those given for he other special days. We believe the church wishes to give to each Board the same consideration and support recognizing that each is building the denomination and in making our ull contribution to the Kingdom.

The programs for this year will soon be eady for distribution. The samples will be ent out by September 1st. Orders are being eceived and will be filled just as soon as he program material is ready. Send in your rders any time and they will be taken care f promptly.

MEASURING OUR STRENGTH BY THE IMPOSSIBLE.

By R. M. Andrews.

It has been with truth said that labor never hurts one. In fact the exercise of it is eneficial to both mind and body. It is a blessd thing to have a definite task in life—to now that one is singled out of God to do a ertain thing. Those who have no task are to e pitied rather than to be praised.

Now when we try to do something that we eel and know is impossible for us our efforts react upon us in a hurtful manner. For one o be forced to try and try again to lift a oad beyond his strength will finally break his norale. And it is the belief that it cannot be lone that puts poison into our fibres and ears the wings of aspiration till we cease to truggle.

But not all things are impossible that are believed to be impossible. So many things have been accomplished of recent years that were believed to be impossible. For thousands of years the telephone and telegraph, the automobile, the electric light were in the realm of the impossible, but today they are commonplace things.

Think what a workman would have thought of one, if in the days of Galileo he had been required to haul five tons of stone fifteen miles in an hour. Why he could hardly have done it in a week. Think how unreasonable he would have thought one to be if he had told him to get a message to a party one thousand miles away in five minutes; he would have wanted six weeks to do it. Or just imagine what a sailor would have said to one back in those days if told he must cross the Atlantic Ocean in five days. All these were impossible in the days of Galileo—that is could not have been done in the time of today, but are commonplace today. Thus we see that things that were then regarded as absolutely impossible are both possible and common.

Now may it not with equal reason be presumed that in a few years quite a number of things that are now regarded as impossible will be commonplace achievements. So then, it may be said that whether a thing is possible or impossible is largely a matter of mind. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," is certainly true in this case. I have an opinion that ultimately the human race will overcome all physical barriers to progress, and human knowledge will unravel all mysteries which have their basis in spirit. It will take a long time for us to arrive there, I think, but it is not unreasonable to believe in it.

Our Attitude Towards The Impossible.

The difference between living conditions today and those in the days of Abraham and Jacob have come about through the belief men had in the possibility of change. To Abraham the motor vehicle was impossible, so he travelled by the Camel line. The telegraph was impossible so he contented himself sending word or calling to those within range of his voice.

But suppose Morse, Bell, Edison, Ford and others had thought of these things as Abraham did, then we would all be right where this good old father of the faithful was, travelling by the dromedary omnibus line across the state of North Carolina.

Jesus Christ set a new gauge for achievement in every realm when he said, "According to your faith be it unto you." It is true in the healing of the leper then and in our accomplishments today.

There is so little difference apparently between the two words can't and can. They are only slightly different. But what a great difference there is between the labors of the man who says it can't be done and the one who says it can be done.

When Napoleon Bonaparte was making his plans to invade Italy, he was told by one of his generals that the Alps was an insuperable barrier; "There shall be no Alps," was his reply. There were no Alps, or not enough Alps to stop him.

Eli Whitney was raised in the cold New England climate, had never seen a cotton boll until he was through college. And yet finding himself in Georgia with some time on his hands he invented a cotton gin which hundreds of planters had felt the need of but had not the faith in the tasks. The world heroes have been men with faith enough to see victory behind unscaled walls. They saw power unused in the boiling steam, the roaring cataract and the flashing lightning, and used it.

God has given to us all powers, talents; by whatever name we call them, but they are limited by us, not Him. There are things impossible to some today which are easy of accomplishment for others. As in the days of our Lord, there are those who use and those who abuse their talents. Those who regard the Lord as a hard man and those who delight to do his will. We may not have the opportunity to do things so great as others, but we can at least believe in the thing and if the opportunity comes our way try to do it. Many of the great inventions came about in accidental ways. But they came to people open minded to truth, ready to test out the idea and to make whatever use of it they could.

It takes a certain amount of daring to do the impossible. Only those who refuse to spare themselves ever get beyond the margin of mediocrity. When President Garfield was a student in college he found that the youth who stood highest in the Latin class did it upon a margin of fifteen minutes more spent in the preparation of the lesson than he was giving to it. By the margin of fifteen minutes, this youth led the class. Fifteen minutes made it possible for him. Not using the fifteen minutes, it was impossible to Garfield so long as his classmate gave that much time to the lesson. The impossible is at most only a relative term. Possible to you, impossible to me because—and then possible to all because—. Certainly the impossible is never done by him who declares it cannot be done. The I CANS and I WILLS are those who do the impossible while those with lesser faith and smaller souls sit moody and sour because opportunity has not come their way.

It is fine to watch a great soul measure his strength against that which man has yet never done. To cross the Atlantic the first time, to discover the circulation of the blood in the human body for the first time, to make the first discovery of the power and use of steam, of electricity, etc. etc. places Columbus, and Dr. Harvey, and James Watts and Franklin in an enviable position in the Hall of Fame today. And today some one is by his daring faith breaking precedent, knocking the t from can't, doing a thing that all the world has been saying could not be done, finding thereby that what was thought to be impossible was not so at all. So let us fearlessly measure our strength against the impossible, and as the harts pant after water brooks, so pant our souls after those things that are hard and difficult to do.

How about setting as a goal for ourselves, some systematic Missionary effort in every church. This is entirely possible with the cooperation of all parties interested. May we do our very best.

The Ladies' Aid and W. H. M. Societies of the Efland M. P. Church held their regular monthly meeting Wednesday following the third Sunday in July.

We met with Mrs. B. M. Williams at the parsonage.

Mrs. B. M. Williams, President of the Ladies' Aid Society, conducted the devotional service after which a short business meeting of each society was held.

The business meeting was followed by a social hour which was made a bigger social hour by Mrs. Williams' splendid refreshments which it is needless to say everybody enjoyed.

Hope to have a good attendance next meeting day Wednesday, August 18.

There has been some sickness among our members.

Our membership is so small it is necessary for all our members to attend to make our meetings interesting and we earnestly hope that no one will get discouraged and not attend because we are so few in number.

Remember your presence adds interest.

Yours for service.

Notice, Home Missionary Societies.

I am mailing out Quarterly Report Blanks to each Cor. Sec. and hope that you will fill and return to me, so that I may report to the Executive Com. the work being done. I sincerely trust that the societies have not been idle during the summer months as you know the Branch assigned us a work for each month as follows:

May—Scholarship Loan Fund.
June—Business Girls' Home.
July—Pine Ridge.
September—Bethel Home.
October—Ohio Work.
November—Children's Home.
January—Pittsburg Mission.
February—General Fund.

There is no assignment for August so if you are behind try this month to catch up and start with September for the Bethel Home.

If you will try the plans given us in the minutes you can do this. These plans are fine for we have tried a few of them in our auxiliary and they are easily worked.

Hoping that you will see to it that this report is given your prayerful prompt attention, I feel sure a great work is being done and that even more may yet be done.

Mrs. H. C. Nicholson, Cor. Sec. W. H. M. S.

Midway, Haw River Ct.— Our potracted meeting began the fourth Sunday in July and continued through the first Sunday in August, closing the following Monday night.

Bro. Carson was with us for the first service and was with us until the close of the meeting, tho he was not well. The Lord gave him strength and power to preach most wonderful sermons through the meeting, as result there were eighteen joined the church, most of them being young boys and girls. And we feel like with careful training these young lives have been saved for Christ. I feel that I can safely speak for the church and say all fell in love with Bro. Carson and all appreciate his earnest work. We never knew a more earnest worker, and may the Lord bless him as he goes forward with his work.

Midway church has been greatly revived by his coming, and we feel now that ere long we will be worshipping in a nice new church; a committee has been appointed and plans are being made.

Our Sunday school and C. E. Society are moving along nicely. We have had good attendance during the summer months. In the C. E. Society the young people are taking an active part.

Prayer meeting yesterday was conducted by Mrs. Dobbs, and good talks were made by others in the congregation, among them being Bro. A. C. Dixon of Greensboro, and Sister J. C. Williams of Kittrell. There were also other visitors yesterday. Glad to have them worship with us, Come again.

FALSE AND TRUE FAITH.

Many are using the word "faith" today in a way that denies the faith. They mean by it determination, courage, will power, confidence in self and in human nature generally —anything but that which God calls faith. A minister speaking at a recent noonday Lenten service in Philadelphia said: "The simple, childlike, unquestioning faith of yesterday may have been adequate for its generation but it will never do for the problems of tomorrow. Faith for tomorrow must be robust and vigorous enough to undertake the problems that we are leaving unsolved. Faith is not merely the intellectual acceptance of a body of doctrine, but it is the conviction that there are greater things ahead. It does not look backward, but it always looks forward." He then went on to say of the youth of today that in its moral ideals "the present generation is the finest I have known." This is not encouraging. Yet it is typical of the spirit of unbelief that rejects God's Word. God tells us that faith rests, primarily, on facts that God declares were accomplished in the past. Faith believes the Good News that something has been done for us—"that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." These are facts, and these facts constitute Christian doctrine. God tells us that, if we believe this, we are saved. Faith must begin, therefore, by looking backward. Faith accepts that which has been done; hope looks forward to that which shall be. Both rest upon God's naked word. Faith is essentially simple, child-like, unquestioning—which this minister condemns; yet the Lord said "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Selected.

TO THE WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

So far as I know at present our Scholarship Loan Fund since last Branch meeting is $100 from Asheboro, $100 from Gray Church, Greensboro, $100 from Burlington, $100 from West End, Greensboro, $100 from Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Douglas, First M. P. Church, High Point, $4.00, Fair Grove, White Not Circuit.

Two others have reported they are at work but have not given a definite pledge.

High Point College opens its Fall term September 7. Cannot each auxiliary send in to Mrs. H. A. Garrett before that time some money for this fund? With only eight societies heard from surely we can expect as much as $3.00 or $4.00 from each of the others.

If everyone will do her best the Student Loan Fund Secretary ought not to have to refuse a loan to any worthy student of High Point College this Fall.

Sincerely,

Mrs. R. M. Andrews, Sec. Student Loan Fund.

A WISE PRAYER.

"Guard me when I am off guard," prayed one the other day. It was a wise prayer, for it is not the danger against which we have fortified ourselves, the temptations which we know and are watching, which are so likely to compass a fall as some unthought-of point where no peril was snspected.—J. R. Miller.

—Virginia Dare, the first white child born in America, had a birthday celebration the week in which both England and America took part. The English ambassador made a speech for the occasion.

DON'T HAVE TO TELL IT— THEY KNOW IT"

You don't have to tell how you live each day,
You don't have to say if you work or you play;
A tried, true barometer serves in the place—
However you live, it will show in your face.
The false, the deceit, that you bear in your heart
Will not stay inside where it first got the start;
For sinew and blood are thin veil of lace—
What you wear in your heart, you wear in your face.
If you have gambled and won in the great game of life,
If you feel you have conquered the sorrow and strife,
If you've played the game fair and you stand on first base—
What you wear in your heart, you wear in your face.
If your life is unselfish, if for others you live,
For not what you get, but how much you can give;
If you live close to God in his infinite grace—
You don't have to tell it, it shows in your face.

SOMEBODY'S MOTHER.

The woman was old, and ragged, and gray,
And bent with the chill of the winter's day,
The street was wet with the recent snow
And the woman's feet were aged and slow.

She stood at the crossing and waited long
Alone, uncared for, amid the throng,
Of human beings who passed her by,
Nor heeded the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street with laughter and shout,
Glad in the freedom of "school let out,"
Came the boys like a flock of sheep
Hailing the snow piled white and deep.

Past the woman so old and gray,
Hastened the children on their way.
Nor offered a helping hand to her,
So meek, so timid, afraid to stare,

Lest the carriage wheels or the horses' feet
Should crowd her down in the slippery street.
At last came one of the merry troop,
The gayest laddie of all the group;

He paused beside her and whispered low,
"I'll help you across if you wish to go."
Her aged hand on his strong arm
She placed, and so, without hurt or harm,

He guided her trembling feet along,
Proud that his own was firm and strong.
Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy and well content,

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know.
For all she's aged and poor and slow;
"And if some fellow will lend a hand
To help my mother, you understand,

If ever she's poor, and old, and gray,
When her own dear boy is far away."
In her home that night, and the prayer she said

And "somebody's mother" bowed low her head,
Was "God, be kind to the noble boy,
Who is somebody's own pride and joy."

GOLDEN EGGS AND OTHER GEESE.

"The Society for the Promotion of Atheism has announced that it proposes to organize a society of atheists among the students of every college in America," The Minneapolis Star comments editorially. "This sounds," it proceeds, " a good deal like killing the goose that laid the golden egg. Without the Christian church, America would have no educational system worth the name and no colleges in which to organize atheist societies.

"Yale University was organized by ten ministers in 1701. Harvard was organized by the Colony of Massachusetts Bay as a church school and was given the name 'Harvard' in recognition of John Harvard, a young clergyman, who bequeathed a library of three hundred volumes and nearly $4000 to the institution.

"Hamline University, the first college in Minnesota, was organized by the Methodists, and the University of Minnesota was first organized by missionaries and later, under the leadership of ministers, was taken over by the state. The University of Kansas was organized by the Episcopalians and Presbyterians and later became a state school. The State Agricultural College of Kansas began as a Methodist school.

"Nineteen of the first twenty-two superintendents of public instruction in Kentucky were ministers of the gospel. The Episcopalian Church organized the state educational system of Florida. Wisconsin had no normal college until long after the Civil War, and the history of almost every other state is quite similar.

"Peter Cartwright, the eccentric backwoods Methodist preacher of Illinois, introduced the bill into the state legislature which provided for the establishment of the University of Illinois, and several preachers were on the first board of directors. The University of Chicago was founded by the Baptists.

"If atheism had been successful in 1776, there would be few colleges in all America now in which to organize student societies of atheists, for atheism can lay claim to having inspired the founding of but one college in America, Girard College of Philadelphia.

"By their fruits...."

A brief examination of the 591 colleges and universities listed in The World Almanac shows that 214, or nearly half, have a direct denominational affiliation. There are probably many others. The churches of all denominations were pioneers in the educational field. Financial rewards are not sure; in fact, many institutions are run at an annual loss. There is still plenty of opportunity in this field for a display of altruism.—Zion's Herald

A PAINTER OF CHILDRTN.

A great America painter died not long ago in Paris, at the age of eighty-one. Miss Mary Cassatt was a native of Pittsburgh, one of a family which has been conspicuous in the life of Pennsylvania. Although her early training in art was received in this country, she went to Paris many years ago, to study the work of the great impressionist painters like Degas and Manet, whom she frankly recognized as her "true masters"; and she found the surroundings of the French capital so helpful to her art that she spent almost all her long life there.

Miss Cassatt was a versatile artist both in medium and in subject. She was not only a painter of the highest rank but a worker in pastel, and perhaps the most accomplished etcher of her sex. Her name is not unfamiliar to Americans, and it is of course honored by students and lovers of art; but the estimation in which her work is held by those who know it best is not, perhaps, widely understood. So good an authority as Mr. Childe Hassam declares that hers is the most notable woman's name in the entire history of painting.

Miss Cassatt's fame while living was chiefly made as a painter of children, and it is not too much to assume that it is for her exquisite pictures of child life and maternal love that she will be best remembered. No one has painted children with more sympathy, more delicacy or more perfect naturalness. "She had the eye of a painter and the mind of a Sister of Charity," said a French critic of her work. She was learned in art and drew something of her inspiration from many of the great masters of the past. But she was no copyist. She thought out and worked out her own way of presenting artistic truth and attained in the end perfect tenderness and perfect sincerity of feeling.

A great American, a great artist, a great woman, was Mary Cassatt, and as unassuming and modest as she was gifted.—Youth's Companion.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove by death the loving spirit of Sister Elizabeth Miller Koons, wife of our beloved pastor, Rev. R. G. Koons, we the members of Fairview Church desire to express to him our sincere sympathy in his loss.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we the members of Fairview church on Anderson Circuit, extend to him our deep sympathy in his bereavement and express to him our high regards for her, and to commend him to One who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, the One who is able to sustain in all the conflicts of life.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Brother Koons and a copy to the Methodist Protestant Herald.

MOTHER'S VENTURE.

The three Hubbard girls prided themselves—as they themselves would have expressed it—on the wonderful and never-ceasing care they took of mother. Quite consciously they possessed all the virtues which mature daughters should possess in respect to the one to whom they owed their being.

The small old lady was surrounded by every comfort which one would naturally expect an old lady to desire. She was passed from hand to hand, from home to home, becomingly and suitably attired, generously provided with such little luxuries as silver-backed brushes, very carefully fed with properly chosen food, very dutifully watched over by all of them.

But what's the use of going on! Let's jump into the story at once and let the odd and unaccountable behavior of mother explain itself if such explanation be possible.

It was Cornelia's time to have mother. Mother's existence was divided into thirds of four months each and thus filled out the year. Mary Emma's four months were now up and she was preparing mother for her migration to Cornelia's.

She was packing mother's suitcase with deft and daughterly hands. "I'm putting in your winter clothing, mother dear," she said: "and you must put it on very soon now—not latter than the middle of October, anyway. We can't have a little rheumatic mother on our hands this winter, can we?"

She smiled brightly at the small old lady, and the small old lady, as was her pleasant custom, smiled back.

"But the weather's not so cold down to Cornelia's as it is here," she protested gently. "I don't much believe I'll put it on before November. Anyway, I'll put it on when I think it's cold enough."

Mary Emma looked kindly down at her as she would have looked at a rather nice but argumentative child of six. She went on neatly folding and laying in the suitcase mother's well-made and plentiful wardrobe.

Mother could never be persuaded to travel with a trunk. That was almost the only thing she had had her own way about for years and years.

"If there's thing I dislike," she said once, "it's a trunk! A dollar to get it to the depot; a dollar to get it to the house; plastering knocked and bumped off; and then the homely thing standing in my room! There's nothing about a trunk to make you feel permanent. It just stands there and waits and you can't look at it without thinking of the next move you've got to make. Seems to me, sometimes, I'd like to settle down and stay in one place a whole year!"

Cornelia and Mary Emma and Frances had all expressed horrified thoughts at this independent speech of mother's "Why," Cornelia had said, "you poor, dear, little soul! Don't you know we girls want you? It would not be just fair to stay with any one of us all the time, now would it? We all make you comfortable and happy, don't we? We do everything we can!"

"Yes, you do," agreed the small old lady humbly. "You're all good girls, and I guess there never was a mother had better looking after than I do! And I'd just as soon stay with one of you as another. Nobody could ever say I was partial."

She laughed a little as she went on with her preparations for the seventy-five mile trip to Cornelia's. Everything was in readiness—new gray gloves and a dear little modish bonnet of gray with lavender touches, and—and, thrown across the neat white bed, a really handsome long plush coat with fur collar and cuffs. The three sons-in-law had bought it for her as a Christmas gift the year before.

Mary Emma capably snapped shut the suitcase and looked into mother's new handbag. "William will take you to the train and buy your ticket and see you nicely started. Here is your last interest money—it'll be all the money you'll need till you go on to Frances. There isn't a thing you'll need to buy, but it's nice to know it's there if you should need it."

She helped mother into the handsome silk-lined coat and adjusted the pretty bonnet just right. Then she led the way downstairs.

"While William's getting the machine out you must have a cup of hot beef-tea and a little lunch to stay you till you get to Cornelia's. You'll get there about time for six o'clock dinner. I didn't write to Cornelia. She knows it's her turn and it'll be all right. You have a taxi take you and your suitcase up to Cornelia's. Don't try to walk."

Fifteen minutes later mother, having dutifully drunk the beef-tea, which she never did like, was helped into William's new car by careful hands and a daughterly kiss touched her soft old cheek.

The car whizzed down the driveway and the small old lady waved a last good-bye to the watching figure on the steps.

Arrived at the station, William looked at his watch and then, a little doubtfully at mother.

"I wonder if you'd mind if I didn't wait," he said. "I've got a rather important deal on and ought to get back to the office."

Mother smiled up at him. "Why, yes!" she said. "You go right along, William. You needn't stop to get my ticket. I guess I can do that myself. Seems like I ought to, I've been on the go so much the last few years."

William looked relieved. He shook hands with the little old lady and said good-bye. A moment later she heard his car buzz away and felt, as she always did when left alone, a vast sense of relief.

Suddenly a daring thought assailed her—a tempting thought — a wild and joyous thought! She wouldn't buy her ticket to Cornelia's at all! She wouldn't go there! She wou'dn't be handed around from one to another this time! She wouldn't be bossed!

She paused to think, a queer little musing smile on her lips. Where should she go? To some more or less distant relative? There was Cousin Abbie Potter—they had been girls together long—what a visit they could have! And then a new thought checked her. No, it couldn't be done. Cousin Abbie made her home with a married son, and had said once that her son's wife didn't ever make her feel free to have company of her own. She would not do anything for the world that would embarrass Cousin Abbie.

She had thought sometimes that she would like to go away somewhere and stay at a hotel To mother that was one way of having the freedom she craved. To be free—free to go to bed when she felt like it; to get up when she wanted to; to order exactly what she wished; to eat regardless of whether it was good for her or not.

But somehow always with the little thrill of independence this idea brought to her, there was a little touch of loneliness, a dread of being among strangers. Mother had never in her life known what it was to be alone, and now that the temptation presented itself as it had done many times before, she shrank from the very freedom of it. No, she wanted people, but she wanted her own self, too. She was tired of doing this and that at the proper time and season; tired of her three daughter's capable and tireless ministrations, tired, she told herself, of being bossed!

All at once she jumped to her feet like a girl and began fumbling in her handbag. The station agent glanced at her through his barred window. He had kind brown eyes and they looked approvingly at the small well-dressed old lady who was coming eagerly to the window.

"I want to send a telegram," she said with an amusing little air of importance about her. "You write it down for me. I've got my gloves on and there aren't my reading-glasses, so I'll have to ask you to do it for me."

She smiled up at him and the agent smiled back at her. "Sure!" he said. "Where to?"

"It's to my boy, Eddie Hubbard, who works in a wholesale hardware store down at Sheridan. How far is Sharidan from here? And when does the next train leave here for there?"

"It's about fifty miles, and if you hurry you can catch the next train, due in about eight minutes."

"My!" said mother. "Well, I'll hurry! Tell Eddie I'm coming on that train and to be at the depot to meet me. Have it sent to him at Parker's hardware store and I know he'll get it."

Five minutes later the telegram had been sent, paid for, and a ticket bought for Sheridan. Mother stood on the depot platform, suitcase in one hand, her new handbag in the other.

She was smiling happily to herself. To be sure—Eddie! Why hadn't she thought of Eddie before! Of course he was the one she wanted to go to and see, not Cornelia! Wouldn't he be surprised at that telegram!

A little later mother had been helped aboard the train by a genial conductor. She still with that half-mischievous smile on her lips.

What would the girls say to such actions? she wondered. Somehow she knew they would not approve. Mother—at her age and with her tendency to rheumatism! And Eddie—well, mother knew that none of his sisters had much use for Eddie. In a certain respectable sense he was the black sheep of the family—different, they called him—so of happy-go-lucky don't-care fellow, not really wild, but with gay, careless ways. The youngest of the family and unmarried, he was regarded by his older sisters as a spoiled child. Didn't mothers always spoil the only boy, especially if he were the baby of the family?

When the train came to a clanking stop at at Sheridan a tall young man was waiting for her. "Well, little mother Hubbard!" he said in his big laughing voice. "Come all this way to see me. I surely was surprised when I got your telegram!"

He took the suitcase from her and stooped to give her a hearty kiss. "Don't know when I've been so pleased," he went on, tucking her hand under his arm. "I thought you were due at Cornelia's about this time."

The laugh that came from mother's lips sounded as frivolous as a school girl's giggle. "I am," she said; "and Mary Emma thinks I'm there, but I'm not. I just got tired of being moved around like a checker on a checker-board! I just got tired of being bossed, Eddie, and I thought I'd do just what I pleased for once."

Eddie laughed. "Good for you!" he said. "I tell you, ma, you've come to the right place this time! If there is any bossing done, you will do it yourself. Guess I need it some time, too."

After supper at Eddie's quiet boarding place he went upstairs with her to her room. Cornelia or Mary Emma or Frances would have immediately and very efficiently tucked mother up in bed after her journey, but such an idea did not occur to Eddie.

He sat down on the side of the bed and mother leaned back in the rocking-chair, her feet in comfortable slippers, taking out her hairpins as they visited. Eddie remembered it as a habit of long standing—this leisurely way of mother's—taking down her hair, taking off her bits of jewelry, resting her feet, and relaxing generally.

Suddenly the tall young fellow struck his knee a resounding slap. He regarded her with eager eyes. "I have thought of something," he said. "That little car of mine I met you at the depot in, she is a dandy car, and I have lots of fun driving round in her when I have time. Wouldn't it be great, ma, if you and I could take a trip together! The boss has been talking of sending me out on a business trip—three counties to cover—and if I go you've got to go along! Might be away two weeks or more, stopping over-night at hotels. It'd be as much like a vacation as a business trip—no great hurry to get from place to place—just go to see hardware men in most of the good-sized towns."

He rose to his six feet in height and stretched his arms above his head, yawning like a boy.

"Well, you sleep on it, Mother Hubbard," he said. "I'd like first-rate to have you along—it'd be a regular picnic. I'll find out from the boss tomorrow if he wants me to go."

He patted her soft old cheek with his big hand. "Good-night now—pleasant dreams—see you in the morning, ma!"

It happened that Joel Parker, Eddie's employer, was desirous of that young man's going on the proposed business trip, and in a day or two mother, in her good warm coat and the neat little motor-cap which Eddie had bought for her, saw her suitcase tucked into the space behind and herself tucked into the seat beside her tall son who, at the wheel of his shabby and beloved car, looked as though he had lately inherited vast wealth. There was a radiant grin upon his freckled, boyish face. They felt like two adventurous children starting forth to see the world. The road was all before them—new faces, new towns, new experiences, curious encounters, the give and take of common, everyday life faring along the common road.

It is a deplorable fact that neither of them had troubled to write to Mary Emma or Cornelia or Frances as to mother's whereabouts. If they thought of it at all it was with a vague understanding that Cornelia would think something had detained her. Mary Emma would think her safely sheltered in Cornelia's home.

Right or wrong, foolish or otherwise, these two, adventuring forth, sent no backward thoughts, no messages of enlightenment to the faithful and careful daughters who, it goes without saying, would have vetoed such a wild undertaking. What, mother? Sleeping in damp hotel beds, eating any and all kinds of food, dressed unsuitably, going to bed at irregular hours? Why, it was simply ridiculous, and no one but Eddie—the spoiled child of the family—would ever have thought of it!

The fortnight that followed was, mother said truly, the very happiest time in her whole life! There were delightful noonday stops beside the road where Eddie made a gypsy fire and mother brewed a pot of coffee and laid out the sandwiches and cookies, while over their heads drooped wayside trees in all their glory.

They made friends with everybody—the children loitering along to school—sometimes mother held one on her lap while another was tucked in between her and Eddie until the schoolhouse was reached—some wayfaring man with his roll of blankets was taken in to sit in the little seat behind for a lift along the road.

There were snapshots to be taken, too, for Eddie had brought his camera, old and shabby with years of use. There were lovely bits of woodland reflected in rush-fringed quiet pools, a winding yellow ribbon of country road, an old bridge with loosened and rattling planks, an old deserted mill dropping rotting timbers into a forgotten stream.

There were pictures of Mother Hubbard, too—mother with her motor-cap setting jauntily upon one side, pouring coffee into tin cups beside the roadside fire; mother taken behind her unconscious back as she sauntered along some sunny stretch of road during some stop for repairs; mother and Eddie in the old red car, taken by an obliging fellow-traveler; Eddie, crouching awkwardly beside a punctured tire with a black smudge across one unconscious cheek. It would all make a great book some day, mother said to herself—the picture-story of her's and Eddie's elopement.

It was two weeks before the disappearance of mother was known to the serenely unconscious "Hubbard girls." A letter from Mary Emma to Cornelia suggested that mother had better put on her winter clothing at once, as it was growing cold.

By return mail came a hastily scribbled and exceedingly anxious letter from Cornelia. "What can you mean, sister?" it read. "Mother hasn't been here at all! Where in the world can she be? She's not with Frances, for I had a letter from Frances and she never mentioned her. What had we better do?"

Mary Emma, as the eldest of the three "Hubbard girls," was filled with consternation. She at once began making inquiries. Cousin Abbie? No, Sarah Price, an old friend of mother's? Frances? Again, no.

So while the mystery was at its deepest—the three daughters had met at Cornelia's in solemn conclave—arrived a letter and a kodak picture from a little town in the western part of the state. The letter was short: "Dear Cornelia, I hope you girls haven't been anxious about me. I'm well and having the time of my life. Eddie and I have been out on the road over two weeks and expect to get back to Sheridan in about ten days. Eddie's done fine on this trip. We have taken more orders than any other fellow in the store, Eddie says. I shouldn't be surprised if he got a good raise in wages. I am feeling fine and the rheumatism hasn't bothered me a bit. I guess this being outdoors so much has cured it. Hope you are all well. Mother.

"P. S. I'm sorry if you have worried about me."

The snapshot made the "Hubbard girls" laugh in spite of themselves! It was mother—little old Mother Hubbard her very self—standing on the running-board of Eddie's little car, her motor-cap a little one-sided above her smiling face, her arms full of ferns and wild flowers from the woods along the road. It was indeed mother's very self, yet a new mother, and carefree as ever Eddie himself could be.

When Eddie and mother at last returned to Sheridan in the little old rattling car, mother went upstairs to her room to rest a while before supper. Half an hour later Eddie came in and dropped his tall self into the rocker beside the bed.

"I've got a proposition to make to you, ma," he said. "I'm thinking a little of buying a house and lot here in Sheridan. It's a nice little place—a five-room bungalow, with a big yard of rosebushes. I can get it at a reasonable figure—so much down and so much a month. It's a good thing for a fellow to have something to save for, and I've been thinking for some time I'd like to get hold of that little place. I want you to drive around there with me tomorrow and see it."

Mother looked at him with a faintly wistful little smile. Are you going to get married, Eddie?" she asked.

The tall young man laughed. "Well, not exactly," he said. "I'm figuring on asking the lady I ran away with to keep house for me. Hot biscuits and comb-honey and pancakes and maple syrup and pie—pie! And my socks mended every once in a while, and somebody to go riding with, and somebody to come home to at night! We can have a garden —onions and lettuce and radishes and everything! And we'll send the washing out or buy an electric washer and do it ourselves—and—and—"

He checked himself with a laugh. "The boss said he's going to raise me fifteen dollars a week. Say, he's sure pleased with the business you and I did on that trip! He'll want us to go again before many months."

The next day Eddie and mother drove round to inspect the little house. It was a marvel of neatness and conveniences, and the garden was full of old-fashioned roses and new-fashioned roses, with lots of uncultivated space for garden beds of mother's own designing.

A new independence shone in her eyes as she went through the pretty bungalow, pulling out drawers, opening delightful closet doors. Her own mistress at last, her own housekeeper! A home of her very own to invite the girls to! And Cousin Abbie Potter —she would have Cousin Abbie come for a good visit, and Sarah Price and—and hot biscuits and comb-honey! She could just see herself peering into the gas-oven at the delicately browned biscuit and setting the table for Eddie's supper!

Suddenly mother caught Eddie's arm in both hands and squeezed it hard. "And all my own furniture that's stored out in the garage at Mary Emma's and down in the basement at Cornelia's and up in the attic at Frances'—why, Eddie, it'll be glorious to have my own things about me again!"

Eddie had to stoop a little to put his arm around her. "Say, won't it be great!" he said. "I'll see the man tomorrow and we can move in any time we want to. I can get off for a few days and we'll run around and collect that furniture and get to housekeeping within ten days!"

He looked around the little house with all the pride of ownership. As he locked the front door behind them, mother picked a late chrysanthemum that bloomed in a clump beside the porch. She tucked it into the front of her dress and smiled down at it with misty eyes.—Harriet Crocker Leroy.

LESSON POEM.

When calumny shall creep around,
And shafts of malice fain would wound,
This, shall be our vantage ground,
"I am the Lord that healeth thee!"
Thou makest e'en the foolish wise,
"A broken heart thou'lt not despise,"
With these words hushing all the cries,
"I am the Lord that healeth thee!"

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Orange Charge, Hebron Church.—The revival meeting began here 2nd Sunday in August and continued until the following Thursday night.

Rev. W. F. Kennett came to us on Monday and did all the preaching until the close.

Bro. Kennett preached the Gospel with power which had its effect. As a result of this meeting, 10 were converted; seven joined the church at Hebron, the church revived.

Mrs. Kennett came along with Bro. Kennett. They were among old friends at Hebron. Hope they will come this way again.

B. M. Williams.

West End, Greensboro.—Our revival, which has been in progress for a week, will continue throughout this week. The pastor is planning for the reception of members and baptism of children next Sunday, August 22nd. Rev. T. J. Turkington, pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church, Washington, D. C., is doing the preaching, and the church is being stirred by his messages.

Mr. Turkington is a native of Ireland, having been in America only thirteen years, is a graduate of our Seminary at Westminister, a member of the Maryland Conference, and is a musician of note as well as an able preacher. With his musical instruments, his solos, his duets with Mr. Ballard, his earnest messages and his consecrated life he has won his way into the heart of the West End people and visitors who have fortunate enough to hear him. Many lives have been rededicated to Christ and several sinners have already been brought into the fold. We are hoping and praying that many more may be saved this week.

We have been pleased to note many visitors from High Point, Guilford College, and other churches in Greensboro in our audience from time to time, and among the preachers have been Dr. A. G. Dixon and Rev. J. R. Hutton.

Reporter.

Porter.—We held our revival meeting beginning the first Sunday in August, and continued to Friday night. Bro. J. W. Hulin of Midland as our helper. He did do some able preaching; every sermon was full of gospel truth, and his messages went direct to the hearts of the people. Three converts which all joined our church. Besides the new converts the church was greatly revived.

Our Sunday school is doing a good work with our efficient and faithful Supt. and teachers. Our people attend church regularly and are interested.

We will hold our third quarterly conference on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in August. We are hoping to round out a good year.

Pastor.

Lincolnton.—Having been away for four weeks in revival preaching day and night, I am now at a point where I can rest.

I wish to thank the good people of Pleasant Grove, Rev. G. L. Reynolds' church, for standing by the old banner of the Cross and for the large sum of money that you gave me and the big pounding.

You people at Midway and Mispah have a warm place in my soul; thank you for the large sum of money and the big pounding and for standing to the old gospel gun and for the great good that we were able to accomplish. Bro. W. D. Reed said that he never saw such a pounding.

Listen. You people where I have been with you this year know we had great meetings, but we had nothing to compare with the meeting last week at Mt. Moriah, Bro. J. D. Morris' work.

Never have I seen such a meeting—revival, I mean. God shook up that church from center to circumference and so many were saved that we could not keep the count. It was just as hot at the door as it was at the pulpit.

The choir leader hit the door and the boys went after him, put him at altar and he was saved. Little girls went out in the yard and brought their boy and girl friends to the altar and stayed with them till they were saved.

We taught them to pray the prayer for a revival—Ps. 51:12-13.

Preacher, if you want a revival teach your people this prayer. W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Henderson.—Rev. R. A. Hunter announced last Sunday that our revival services would begin on the fourth Sunday in September. Rev. T. M. Johnson of Mebane will be the pulpit help. Rev. Mr. Hunter expressed a desire for everyone to begin now to work and pray for these special services.

We were very glad to welcome the Hunter family back from their vacation and the Summer Conference at High Point.

Quite a number from our church attended the Young People's Conference, and have returned, full of enthusiasm, which we hope they can spread over the whole church.

Only ten weeks before annual conference. We hope the official board will get busy and have everything in readiness. Reporter.

Philathea Meeting.

On Wednesday night, August 11th, the Mizpah Philathea Class held its regular meeting at church.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Miss Catherine Stanley, roll called by Secretary, after which she read the minutes of last meeting. Old and new business was discussed. We were very much pleased at the close of the meeting when the Baracas invited us to the watermelon feast next Saturday night, August 21st. The meeting then adjourned to meet again in September.

Reporter.

Notes From Cleveland Circuit.

We are still working and doing lots of good. Our revival season is still on. The meeting at Kistlers closed with one of the best meetings the church has ever had. A large number of professions and several additions to the church. Our pastor did the preaching. Bro. Carson was not able to be there. Also the meeting at Mt. Moriah has closed with much success. A large number of professions several additions to the church. The Spirit of the Lord was in the midst in working power. We can always do wonderful things when the Lord is with us. The preacher didn't get to preach two or three times in the day service owing to the spirit of the meeting. Pulpit help was Bro. W. L. Carson of Lincolnton, N. C. We appreciate the service Bro. Carson rendered. The protracted meeting will start the third Sunday at Pleasant Hill. We hope for them a good meeting. Bro. Robert Short of Matthews, N. C., will fill the pulpit.

The third quarterly conference met Saturday with Mt. Moriah Church. The business seems to be in fine shape. Bro. Robert Waters was elected delegate to Annual Conference.

Mt. Pleasant reports a fine time at the home coming last Saturday. May we all not forget to be ready for the final home coming.

Our Sunday schools and C. E. Societies are in fine shape at this meeting. May the revivals of religion continue and the Lord continue to bless the Herald and its many readers.

Charlie Grant.

Alleghany, Davidson Ct.—Our protracted meeting began the second Sunday in August and lasted until Friday night. Brother Clay of the M. E. Church was Brother Ridge's pulpit; he did all of the preaching which everybody seemed to like. There was a large crowd all of the time especially at night. The church would not nigh hold the people at night. We had a good meeting; 14 converts and seven joined the church. We hope that they will live so close to the Lord that they will be a great help to the church. We hope that the church will do as they promised to help them on the way. If you see any of them make a mistake pray for them and help to hold them right, for I am sure that if the church would watch as they should there would not be so many back-sliders.

The young people took a good part in the meeting. Work on, young people, and let your light shine. When people speak evil of you pray for them and watch what you say, for others are watching you. It takes a great deal of praying to live a Christian because Satan tries us on ever side. If we don't watch he will make us believe him. The best way to fight Satan that I ever found was to go to the Lord on my knees.

We were glad to have Brother Ridge to visit us during the meeting and to read the 103 Psalm, pray with us and give us a word of encouragement. It does us good. We are glad to hear that Brother Cal Cook, our Sunday school superintendent, who has been in the hospital at High Point for three weeks and was operated on is at home again. We missed him in the meeting.

We had some as good singing as I ever heard during the meeting; the choir sang well and then the whole crowd would help sing some good old songs which was enough to make everybody feel good. Remember us in your prayers. Abigail Coggin.

Dulin's, Mocksville Charge.—Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, filled his appointment yesterday morning at 9:45 with a splendid sermon. I heard more comments on that sermon than any other. He used one word for his text Calvary.

Our Sunday school is almost at a stand still during these hot summer days, and revival meetings in procession.

The nominees for annual conference are Brother Bailey of Elbaville and Brother Sain of Bethel. The third quarterly meeting will be held at Bethel next Thursday, August 19. Brother Braswell has our deepest sympathy in the death of his loved ones. Although we have just merely heard him speak of them.

Leona Hendrix, Reporter.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—Sunday school and church services last Sunday were fairly well attended. There were 136 in Sunday scrool. Bro. W. C. Gibson, teacher of the adult women's class, has been absent for four Sundays on account of the illness of his father. The writer took his place as teacher last Sunday morning.

Our pastor preached at both services last Sunday. At the morning service his text was Matthew 6:33. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." At the night service he used the text, Galatians 6:7. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Both sermons were among the best that Bro. Crutchfield has delivered during the year.

The Ladies' Aid society is the most active organization in our church since it began meetings again after a lapse of a few weeks. The society held an ice cream supper at the church last Saturday night which was largely attended. A total of 30 members have been added to the society membership roll during the past few weeks. Mrs. David Brooks is president of the society and Miss Myrtle Yates is secretary.

Our pastor is spending a brief vacation with his parents in Orange County. He will attend the revival at Chestnut Ridge, his old home church. In his absence next Sunday the writer will conduct the services at West Lexington both morning and night, and will also fill the appointment at Jerusalem at 2:30 in the afternoon.

On the fifth Sunday morning in this month a service will be held at West Lexington church in the interest of the young people. Mr. M. F. Apperson, president of the Lexington City Christian Endeavor Union, will deliver an address at this service. The question of organizing a Christian Endeaor society will be considered. The pastor is hopeful of creating interest among our young people to the extent that a new society will be organized.

The third quarterly conference for the South Davidson Charge was held at Mount Carmel church last Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. Three of the five churches on the charge were represented. Yadkin College and Jerusalem being not represented. Reports from stewards showed that the finances are dreadfully behind. Only one church—Yadkin College—was reported having paid the Annual Conference Budget in full. Other churches have not paid but very little on the budgets. Pastor's salary was about $300 behind. The rural churches will begin soon to pay their apportionments. West Lexington is behind only about $65 on the salary. Jerusalem is nearest up with the salary, being only about $15 behind up to the time of the quarterly conference. The votes cast for delegate to the next Annual Conference was reported by the various churches, and the result announced. Bro. C. A. Berrier, of the Mount Carmel church, was declared elected, he having received a majority over W. C. Gibson, of West Lexington church. Bro. Berrier is one of the leading members of Mount Carmel church and is one of the stewards of that church. He will make a good delegate to represent our charge in the next Annual Conference.

Time is swiftly bringing us toward the close of another conference year, and within about ten weeks we will have finished the year's work, and be sitting together as another Annual Conference. Much work is to be done during the coming ten weeks to bring the finances up to meet the obligation to pastor and the budgets. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Pleasant Grove.—Our pastor, Rev. G. L. Reynolds, gave us a very interesting and helpful sermon Sunday morning using as his subject, "But none of these things move me." found in Acts 20:24. In this message he laid great stress on the necessity of having our lives resigned to God's will, in order to display the Christian heroism as Paul did, also using as a subject "Christian unselfishness."

We are sorry Mrs. Reynolds has been kept from us for the last few weeks on account of the illness of her father. We wish him a speedy recovery.

Since the addition of the seven Sunday school rooms our schools has grown so much we are in great need of more room. In view of this fact the Ladies' Aid Society has decided to try to finish the upstair rooms.

The Junior C. E. society is also doing some fine work. Mrs. T. F. Honeycutt is teaching them. We are very grateful to her for this great work.

The third quarterly conference will be held at the church next Friday evening at 8:00 o'clock. Mrs. Ralph Kennedy, Rep.

Midland Circuit.—Our special meeting at Love's Grove began the second Sunday in August with Bro. A. Ridge as our pulpit help. We had a splendid meeting with twenty-five conversions and reclamations. We received eight new members at the close of the meeting. The meeting came to a close Thursday night and we returned home to prepare for the camp meeting at Mills Grove which is to begin Sunday, August 22.

On Friday evening looking out at the window we saw several cars coming up the road and to our surprise they were coming to our house with all kinds of good things to eat—flour, chickens, eggs, peaches, apples, grapes, sugar, coffee, beans, and so many other things too tedious to mention. They also brought us a load of wood and a nice purse which was appreciated very much as was everything else.

With best wishes for the Herald and its readers J. W. Hulin.

CHURCH BUILT OF GRINDSTONES.

One of the interesting sights of the Tacony section of Philadelphia, which lies along the Delaware in the northeastern outskirts of the city, is its famous "Grindstone Church." It is so called because it was built from grindstones worn out in making saws at the plant of Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., which covers 65 acres of Delaware River frontage a few blocks from the church.

This church, The Tacony Baptist Church, includes in its congregation many of the 3600 workers in the Disston plant and their families. It was natural then when the building was erected a few years ago that the idea of utilizing some of the thousands of grindstones that lay piled on the grounds of the big saw works should suggest itself. Already several thousands of these grindstones had been used in building a wall several blocks long that partly encloses the Disston plant and in building a retaining wall along the Delaware River side of the works.

More than 2500 grindstones were used in building the church. They were carefully squared and dressed before they were placed in the church walls and no one who saw this handsome place of worship today could possibly suspect that it had been built from stones that originally were used in grinding saws and tools to be sold around the world.

"THE ABILITY WHICH GOD GIVETH."

Not only did mankind lose moral uprightness in the fall of Adam, but they also lost both the inclination and ability to regain the lost heritage. It was a helpless as well as a lost race for whom Christ died. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Rom. 5:6.

It is well to recognize this stern and unpleasant fact. All achievement is God-wrought or God-given. The Psalmist wrote, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." And Jesus said, "Without me ye can do nothing."

Pride and conceit are the unhappy results of failure to recognize this truth. Self-complacency and self-praise are simply robbing God of the glory due unto His name. "For thine is the kingdom and the power, and the glory." Matt. 6:13.

Ours is a dispensation of divine grace. The mercy of God is more bountiful than the water of all the seas, more boundless than the air we breathe. God's love to our fallen race is more extensive than all sin of all time. "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Rom. 5:20.

To appropriate the all-sufficient grace of God is the supreme privilege of us poor sinners. There is no excuse for living in sin, unhappiness, or failure. There is no limit to God's ability and willingness to supply all our needs. It all may be had for the asking. "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, ye shall receive." Matt. 21:22.

No undertaking of life is beyond "the ability which God giveth." No temptation is too strong for the weakest saint who trusts in God. And there is no duty so unpleasant or difficult but that God's grace is sufficient to insure its performance. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheth me." Phil. 4:13.

HIS BIT OF WORK.

"O, John, John," exclaimed the father shaking his head sadly, "what slithering work do you do!"

"It's all right," replied the boy. "I get it past the boss and get my pay too!"

"There is more in the work, my boy, than in the pay," said the father.

"The pay's the main thing," retorted John.

"No, John, it is not the main thing either. Let me tell you, something that I heard today.

"In the stone works a young man was suddenly set to do a piece of carving. The man on the job had been taken ill, and the task had to be finished on time. The young man did not know what the stone was for, but he went at the work in his accustomed painstaking way. He chiselled out a stem here, a leaf there and flowers above. The master workman approved the job, and the stone left the works. Some months passed.

"Today the young man was walking through the great and beautiful building that the city had just completed and opened. He came to the most prominent pillar, a handsome column crowned with a piece of lily work 'Why,' he exclaimed, 'there's my bit of work!' And, taking off his cap, he gazed at it and said reverently: 'Thank God, I did that job well!'"

"I happened to overhear the remark, and I spoke to him. Then he told me the story of that bit of work. When I heard the young man make that remark and saw the light in his eye, John, I knew then, if I had never known before that work is a holy thing! Right wages and just treatment for workmen are proper adjuncts, but above and beyond them your bit of work is holy to you.

"The Bible speaks of the 'workman that needeth not to be ashamed.' That young man toiling in the dirt and din of the stone works fashioned his bit with his soul in his job and found at last his work crowning a glorious pillar! That is true of all good work; sooner or later the finished work will be crowned. Then who can measure the joy of the workman? And if that bit of work happens to be the crowning piece of a well-hewn character, calling forth the praise of the Great Master. 'Well done, good and faithful servant!' the joy of the workman will not be measured by time or by anything that belongs to the world of time."—Youth Companion.

DR. KELLY ON A NEW RELIGION.

(From The Sunday School Times.)

Recently Dr. Howard A. Kelly, the Baltimore physician, received a letter from a long-time friend of his in Germany, about a new religion being propagated there called the Aryan. One of the features of this new cult is said to be the exclusion of the Jewish people from religious privileges. Dr. Kelly wrote in reply to his friend as follows:

"There is a new religion out here in America which I want you to try honestly and faithfully. In a sense it is not new but two thousand years old, but Germany and France and America have so twisted it and altered it that it is necessary to go back to the original to know what it is.

"It was called two thousand years ago the Christian religion. It accepts Christ as the Savior of the world, and his name as the only name by which we can be saved. It accepts the Bible as authoritative in all its parts, the writing of Paul just as much as the Gospels, and the Holy Spirit as our guide.

"I know that this is the true religion because I have tried it, and it gives me grace where I most need it and power to resist sin.

"Please throw away every other scheme which professes to be a religion and very definitely embrace this religion of your and my forefathers."

Young Mrs. Green (at bank-teller's window)—I wish to open an account here.

Teller—Very well, madam. How much do you want to deposit?

Mrs. Green—Why, nothing. I want to draw out $40.

"Didn't you miss your usual summer camping-out this year?"

"Yes, but by keeping our windows wide open and removing the screens we got something of the effect."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—AUGUST 29.

The Ten Commandments: Duties to Man.

Lesson Text: Ex. 20:12-21.

Golden Text: Lev. 19:18.

The Central Truth: To love one's neighbor is a sure way to love God. To fail to perform one's duty to his fellow-man is a grievous sin against God. The apostle sets forth this truth plainly and forcibly: "But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ." 1 Cor. 8:12.

Scriptural Points.

1. Duly united parenthood is God's method of propagating the race, promoting civilization, extending the kingdom of God, and populating the glory world. Parents are due the reverence, love, and devotion of children.

2. This is "the first commandment with promise." Long life is promised the child, the church, or the nation, that give the honor and affection due to parents.

3. This commandment clothes parents with God-given authority, and enjoins obedience on the part of the children.

4. The sixth commandment not only forbids the taking of human life, but forbids the hate, the neglect, and the greed that may result in the injury or loss of human life. The apostle John wrote: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." 1 John 3:15.

5. The death penalty has been placed against the wanton taking of human life. For the Law giver has declared: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." Gen. 9:6.

6. The seventh commandment also forbids lustful thoughts, desires, and associations. As contributory to these it furthermore forbids immodest dress and conversation, lust-inciting movies and theatrical performances, and licentious pictures, literature, and nudity of person.

7. It also forbids the abuse of the organs of propagation.

8. The eighth commandment covers more ground than that of property. It is bad enough to take goods forcibly, to defraud, openly, to take advantage of one's ignorance or necessity in a trade, or to force low wages. It is worse to steal a woman's affections to gratify lust, to steal God's holy day to gain pleasure, or to steal the votes of a constituency by false or unkept promises.

9. The ninth commandment forbids untruth in all its ramifications. It forbids the commercial lie for gain, the judicial lie to escape justice, the lie of concealment to cover up wrong doing, the slanderous lie to damage a neighbor, and the humorous lie to promote fun.

10. The tenth commandment is the blanket commandment. It covers them all. Sinful desire lies at the root of all violations of law. Moral depravity is the unclean fountain from which the ugly streams of sin flow out to curse the world.

11. "And when the people saw it, they trembled." The lightning, thundering, smoke, and trumpet blasts filled the people with great fear. And they needed to be impressed with the mightiness of God, the majesty of law, and the awfulness of retribution.

Practical Points.

1. Let us have a wholesome revival of family government and filial obedience. Let us take Abraham as a model in the training of children. "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." Gen. 18:19

2. Soul murder is worse than that of the body. Sin is self-destructive. "He that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul: all they that hate me love death." Prov. 8:36.

3. To neglect the souls under our care is to consent to their eternal perdition. This is equivalent to soul murder. Let us by prayer and faithfulness strive, as the apostle did, to be "free from the blood of all men."

4. Purity of thought, desire, and association will lead to purity of speech and conduct. "Flee also youthful lusts." "Keep thyself pure." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. 5:8.

5. "Honesty is the best policy," the best practice, and the best investment. "Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men." Rom. 12:17.

6. Truthfulness is well-pleasing to Him Who is "the way, the truth, and the life." Truth is a faithful guide to peace, to service, and to glory. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." John 8:32. Liars may boast of a satanic parentage. These terrific words of Jesus are to the point: Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it." John 8:44.

7. Covetousness repudiates a sacred right of God, the right of ownership of all things. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." This robbery of the Most High invites terrible consequences. "For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." 1 Tim. 6:10.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—SEPT. 5.

The Tent of Meeting.

Lesson Text: Ex. 33:7—16.

Golden Text: Ex. 33:14.

The Central Truth: "Mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." Isa. 56:7.

Scriptural Points.

1. The last two lessons were on the Ten Commandments, which Moses received of the Lord written upon two tables of stone. Moses and Joshua were on the Mount at this time forty days and nights. During their absence the people became restless and planned to return to Egypt. At their insistent demand Aaron made a calf of the gold ornaments that the people gave. When Moses and Joshua came down from the Mount they found the people worshipping this golden calf. Moses was so indignant and angry that he threw down the two table of stone and broke them.

2. God proposed to destroy the people and wipe them out as completely as He did the people of Sodom. And he said to Moses, "And I will make of thee a great nation." Moses interceded for the people and proposed that he himself bear the iniquity of the people and suffer in their stead. He prayed, "Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin—; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of the book which thou has written." Ex. 32:32.

3. God answered this prayer and spared the people. Yet He withdrew His presence from them and promised that an angel would go before the people to the promised land.

4. Moses made a large tent according to the pattern shown him in the Mount. He set up this tent "afar off from the camp," for the people were too sinful to have this tent of worship right in their midst.

5. Every one whose heart sought after the Lord for forgiveness and the better life was given the privilege to go to this tent for that purpose. It was the tent of meeting where anxious souls met with God and received His blessing.

6. Moses was a frequent visitor to this place of worship. In fact he spent a large part of his waking hours there speaking with God. And he spoke with God face to face, as a friend talks with his friend.

7. His example of frequent and long communications with God made a profound impression upon the people. They watched him eagerly. And when he went in and the pillar of fire descended before the door of the tent, the people also worshipped God, every man in his tent door.

8. Moses' supplication for divine guidance won a very precious personal promise: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Not to the people but to Moses himself was this promise given.

9. "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence." Moses was unwilling to go one step without God. Such an undertaking would be worse than a failure without God's presence and blessing.

Practical Points.

1. God's appointed place of worship is spiritually very far removed from the common haunts of worldly life. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean things, and I will receive you." 2. Cor. 6:17.

2. The church is the gateway into the kingdom of grace and of glory. "How dreadful is this place! this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Gen. 28:17.

3. The throne of sovereignty is also the throne of grace. Upon this throne sits the Father of mercies, to Whom all supplication should be addressed. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Heb. 4:16.

4. The journey of life is entirely too uncertain, too difficult and too important to undertake alone. The wisdom and strength of the Most High is indispensable to a successful and happy career. "I will go in the strength of the Lord God." Ps. 71:16.

5. Worship is more than communion with God. It is the means of exchange with God. Penitence, faith, and consecration are exchanged for forgiveness, the new life, and the blessed fruit of the Spirit. "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upraideth not, and it shall be given him." James 1:5.

6. Forms and postures of worship are valuable only as they contribute to its spirituality. "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him." John 4:23.

"OVERCOMETH."

1. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God.—Revelation 2:7.

2. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.—Revelation 2:11.

3. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.—Revelation 2:17.

4. And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father, and I will give him the morning star.—Revelation 2:26, 27, 28.

5. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white rainment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before His angels.—Revelation 3:5.

6. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God and the name of the city of my God which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.—Revelation 3:12.

7. To him that overcometh I will grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father on His throne.—Revelation 3:21.

8. He that overcometh shall inherit these things and I will be his God and he shall be my son.—Revelation 21:7.

Remarks.

1. In copying these texts I have taken the King James version, except in the last text, numbered 8, from Revelation 21:7. In giving the words "these things" for "all things" of the King James Version.

2. The verb "overcometh" used in each of these texts, and manifestly with inspired emphasis, is a transitive verb and requires an object, either expressed or understood, to complete its meaning.

3. The object is not expressed in these instances and I believe it would not be amiss to supply it and understand the word "sin." The Atonement of Christ releases us from condemnation; but it does not deliver us from battle. The Atonement crowns us; but it also puts a sword in our hand, and bids us fight any and every sin. R. B. W.

Montreat, N. C.

fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

The word of God, the atonement of Christ, and the office-work of the Holy Spirit are the means and agencies of producing pure hearts and holy lives. "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word." The Holy Spirit imparts purity of heart and of life. He transforms the trusting soul into the likeness and image of Christ. Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." His grace is sufficient to enable everyone to live the pure life. Therefore "keep thyself pure."

"Blessed be God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed at the last time."

THE NEW FIRM THAT PRINTS THE HERALD

Since we began to be a publisher over thirty years ago, we have inducted sixteen young men and women a little way into the mysteries of the printer's art. Of the sixteen, ten have been young women, six young men. Of the ten young women, two have died, three have married, one has become a teacher after being graduated from college, one has become a nurse, one has become a housekeeper, and two continue in the printing business. Of the six young men, one has become an experimenter and investigator in the Research Department of the Westinghouse Electrical Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., one has become a minister of the North Carolina Conference, Methodist Protestant Church, two have become business men and two have continued in the printers' art. These two constitute the new firm that will print the HERALD. They have served in printing offices in Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Burlington, Durham, Danville, Charlottesville, Va., Pittsburgh, Pa. In Greensboro they have both had extended experience in the offices of both the Daily News and the Daily Record. Their names are James W. Swain and Warren McCulloch. At present the name of the firm will be McCulloch and Swain. Mr. McCulloch is the younger son of the publisher of the HERALD; Mr. Swain is the older son of the late Dr. W. E. Swain, of the North Carolina Conference, for five years its president. Both did service in France in the World War. Aside from this interruption and that of college attendance, both have continued in the printing business. Mr. Swain attended the University of Virginia; Mr. McCulloch attended Adrian College, Michigan, and Elon College, N. C. They are entering the field not only with this wide experience, but also with enthusiasm. They are investing thousands of dollars in additions to the plant of the HERALD. Among the additions are two job presses and a new Model 14 Linotype Machine and other machines needed in a job office. In addition to the METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD they have contracted for the printing of other periodicals and they hope to do commercial job printing. They have an ambition to excel in the quality of their work without advancing the price beyond that which is customary.

We bespeak for them the patronage of our people who have printing to do. By helping them you will be helping the HERALD indirectly.

There is a man in Indiana named Kerr who evidently thinks himself somebody. He is trying to organize a new church which he calls "The Church of Humanity." The creed of this new church is one of the most amazing things about it. Here it is: 1. There is no God. 2. There is no future life. 3. Man has no soul. These articles of faith (or unfaith) are what Mr. Kerr calls "Kerr's Discoveries." We would suggest to him that there is one important discovery that he has not yet made, and that is, that he is what in plain English they call a fool.

Right Foot to Left Foot: "You are behind the body, therefore you are too far behind."

Neither foot seems to realize that it is thus that the body moves forward, that man progresses.

Such is the quarrel between the Fundamentalists and the Modernists. Both feet are necessary to easy and natural progress. If man had only one foot he might move forward by jumping on that one foot, but his progress would not be easy or natural or graceful. Both the fundamentalist and the modernist (capital initials left off) are necessary to intellectual progress and completeness. The fundamentalists are behind and the modernists are ahead, but it is naturally and necessarily so. There should be no quarrel between them on this account. It is the office of the fundamentalists to hold on to that which has been gained, to serve as conservatives. It is the function of the modernists to move forward and gain that which has not yet been acquired. God meant for mankind to be progressive and He has provided for progress in the constitution of men's minds, making some naturally disposed to cling to past acquisitions and others naturally disposed to seek new acquisitions of truth. The right foot and the left foot are not antagonists but co-operatives. They work together notwithstanding their quarrel. So the fundamentalists and the modernists are co-operatives. Both contribute to the welfare of the world. We need both classes of men and should rejoice that we have them.

But suppose the left foot would stick in the mud and refuse to move forward? Then there would be a balk to all progress. And suppose the right foot should step over the edge of a precipice? Then there would be swift progress to destruction. Each foot must have a care.

The fundamentalist in his clinging to the products of the past should distinguish between fact and fancy. The facts he should hold to tenaciously; the fancies he should be ready to drop the moment they are shown to be mere fancies. He should cease to believe in the infallibility of the ancients and the mediaevalists. He should be aware that the people of former times had modernists among them and were in danger of imbibing some of their errors. A false opinion does not become true by the lapse of time, even centuries and millenniums.

The modernist in his search for the new must also distinguish between fact and fancy. He is peculiarly liable to be misled by his own fancy. In his desire to get away from the errors of the past he may rush into still more harmful errors.

The fundamentalist should pray for an open mind and the modernist should pray for a more careful mind that he SHALL WE MAKE THE BIGGEST MISTAKE?

By R. M. Andrews, D. D.

In this brief review of some of the mistakes that have been made in our efforts to build a college, I desire to call your attention to some of the things that have been done notwithstanding the mistakes, and to remind you that even a greater mistake than any that has yet been made may be made. You see, I begin by admitting that some mistakes have been made. It would be foolish to maintain that none were made by the building committee, the contractors, the architect, the president, the faculty, or the business management of High Point College. It would alike be preposterous to presume that those who direct the affairs here in the future will make no mistaks. Only the dead fail to do this. But all mistakes are not alike in their nature, or in their results. It is possible now to make a mistake even more disastrous than all that have been made up to date. A mistake that would wreck our denomination in North Carolina. And because of this I want to review what has been done at High Point College.

Mistake No. 1. In the initial planning of the building committee the usual mistake was made; that is, buildings cost more than it was first thought they would cost. But this was largely due to the fact that better buildings were erected than was first planned to erect, and, too, there was a rise in the cost of building materials at that time.

Mistake No. 2. Those who directed the affairs of raising funds for building the college misjudged the interest our people had in it. We believed that more of them were interested and wanted the college than really did; since agitation had been going on for thirt years or so, it was reasonable to suppose that it had penetrated the further rim of our Conference limits. But we were mistaken in this. Our church had done without a college in North Carolina so long that most of our people thought it useless to build one. They believed and maintained that the state ought to educate our youths since they were paying taxes to support state institutions. Also while there were many responses to the appeals of the committees raising funds, there were few subscriptions large enough to indicate great faith in the enterprise.

Mistake No. 3. We misjudged the loyalty of our church members. We blindly supposed that our people would support their own college, because it was their very own. In this, we have been mistaken. We soon found some of the strongest opponents to our college among our own church folks. They did not believe in the college, they were looking for something that might discredit it, and they doubted that the institution would ever function. So while they may not have talked against the college very strongly they turned young people, who were going to college, from High Point College. And this was done, not because High Point College had failed to meet the requirements of the State Board of Education, and therefore the students who came here would fail to get credit for the work they completed here, for we have met the conditions of the State Board. And already our students have gotten certicates to teach in the public schools of the state of identical grade, etc. of others from other colleges who have taken the same courses. The opposition, therefore, must have sprung from a latent disloyalty to the denomination that came forth at the first real opportunity to show itself.

Mistake No. 4. Quite a number of our people who helped to build the college believed that a great job like this one could be done without the expenditure of great labor. They seemed to think that a great institution could be conceived of and brought forth without suffering and without the price of blood. So, when they put in their five or ten dollar contributions, they must have done it with the feeling that they had discharged their final obligations to the college, and never again would they be called upon to aid. They seemed to think that with this pittance the church could build a college of which the whole commonwealth would be proud. They forgot that church colleges are like churches in that they pay no dividends in dollars and cents, but must forever be the object of our care and the recipients of our contributions. So when these saw the real situation, their love began to grow cold, their interest to pall, and they became unresponsive to appeals for funds to carry on the work of the college.

Mistake No. 5. There were several among us who believed that when the college was once opened the public would warm up to it quickly and that men with large means would sponsor it and thereby relieve the church of the responsibility of caring for the infant they had given birth to. So when they saw that these plutocratic patrons of pedagogic places were otherwise minded, these began to lose their zeal and to look for some reasons why they also might cease to support the institution. For when the honors and positions are divided up, a certain element always loses heart.

But Notwithstanding

All mistakes made. Notwithstanding the defections from the ranks of our erstwhile friends, the college has functioned. It has existed for two years doing real college work. It had an enrollment last year large enough to be proud of. There has been accumulated property values exceeding six hundred thousand dollars. A record unsurpassed by any other denominational college in North Carolina. Think of it, with all the handicaps High Point College has labored under, with the lack of cooperation and the loyal support of the church it was being run for, with all of this to overcome, who knows what the college could have done had it had a more cordial support?

A Fatal Mistake Can Be Made

A failure to conserve what has been done under these difficulties would not only be disastrous to our college, it would be ruinous to the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina. We blieve that if the college should fail the morale of the denomination in the state would be so lowered, and our leaders so discouraged that there would be left but little to conserve after the wreckage. This is strong language, it would be a bitter occurrence, and we hope that it may never occur, but it is within the range of probability unless the college can have a more loyal support by the church. It is no longer a debatable question as to whether a denomination needs a college. Even the selfishly blind can see that. For the day has passed when any church wihout a leadership trained in its own schools, can succeed and we are no exception to this rule. I do not believe that the Methodist Protestant Church can advance the causes dear to her heart with an untrained leadership in this new day any more than I believe that the Presbyterian Church can. Years ago they learned that they could not and they do not even try to supply a church with an untrained leader. Shall we toy with disaster and court utter failure by playing like what other churches can't do we can? It would be suicidal. Therefore, if we are to have a church in North Carolina, we must also have a college in North Carolina. Shall it be High Point College, or will we build another?

HEROISM AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

By Rev. H. H. Smith

The Christian ministry is a vocation which demands heroism of the highest order. If anyone doubt this, let him consider what Christ the Lord had to say about the call to devote one's self to the preaching of His Gospel. When a scribe came to Jesus and said, "Master, I will follow three whithersoever thou goest," Jesus replied, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." "Are you willing," He seemed to say, "to be homeless and friendless and penniless for my sake and the Gospel's? Count the cost and do not undertake it unless you are willing to pay the price." To another He said: "Follow me." But he replied, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father." Jesus said unto him, "Let the dead bury the dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Christ would have no weak, flabby followers to proclaim His Gospel. They must be willing to endure hardness as good soldiers. Bishop Kilgo said: "Into the prophetic office God never calls the weakling. The prophet's task calls for mighty manhood. From the so-called higher classes, deteriorated by social hypocrisies, corrupted by indolence and luxuries, enfeebled by sensual lusts, demoralized by superficial customs, and damaged in their souls by frivolities, God calls no prophet. Neither does He call them from the low, vulgar classes who cringe before the proud or crawl before thrones or fawn at the feet of social princes. They come out of those conditions which produce the stalwart qualities of robust manhood. . . . If the professed prophet does not show the signs of a virile, robust manhood it is presumptive evidence at least that he is either the victim of a delusion, or he is the perpetrator of a willful fraud."

It is an inspiration to think of so many who have responded to this challenge of the heroic and gladly offered their lives to the Master for service or for sacrifice, as they have heard the call of God ringing in their souls. When the mother and sisters of Adoniram Judson entreated him, with tears, not to become a missionary, he replied: "What mean ye to weep and to break my heart, for I am ready not only to be bound, but also to die in India, for the name of the Lord Jesus." David Brainerd, pouring out his life's blood to save the American Indians, prayed: "Here am I, Lord, send me. Send me to the end of the earth, send me to the rough and savage pagans of the wilderness, send me even to death itself, if it be but in Thy service and to promote Thy kingdom." James Chalmers, after many years of heroic service for his Master, said: "Recall the twenty-one years, give me back all its experiences; give me its shipwrecks, give me its standings in the face of death, give it to me surrounded with savages with spears and clubs, give it me back again with spears flying about me, with clubs knocking me to the ground; give it me back, and I will still be your missionary."

Jesus made it plain that none should heed the call to preach the Gospel who was not willing to deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Him. If so great emphasis is laid upon the sacrificial spirit one must have who heeds the "call" to the Christian ministry, we must expect the "work" of the ministry itself to call for the greatest sacrifice and heroism. Referring to the work of the ministry, Jesus said: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep among wolves." A very strong figure this. Men with their sinful passions were compared to wolves, and the disciples to helpless sheep. We can look back and see what this all meant, for these sinful passions reached their climax at Calvary when they crucified the Son of God. Again He said, "Beware of men; for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues; and ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles." And we know that all these things were fulfilled. When hardships and persecutions came upon them they were not to faint. "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." Just before He departed from them He said to His disciples: "They shall put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh when whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." He did not hesitate to tell them plainly that they must expect not only hardships, but death itself, in many instances, if they were to go forth and proclaim His Gospel.

We know from the record that some were found in that day who gladly responded to this challenge of the heroic. John the Baptist was "no reed shaken with the wind," but a true prophet of God who dared to denounce to his face the profligate king, Herod, though it cost him his head. Stephen exhibited a like moral courage when he bore witness to Christ as Lord and Master, and turning to those who had murdered the Son of God, said: "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? And they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One, of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers." Courageous preaching this, and what was the result? "When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart and they gnashed on him with their teeth. . . . And cast him out of the city and stoned him."

While not called upon to suffer perils and persecutions such as befell the apostles, the minister of the Gospel today will find that his vocation is constantly demanding the heroic spirit. To proclaim the message he is commissioned to deliver will require moral courage of the highest order. It is no easy thing to stand before men and speak the awful truths of God with unswerving fidelity and yet with love. To become impatient and indulge in abuse is easy enough, but that is not to preach the Gospel. His nearest and best friends will need admonition, a task not easy to perform. Evil will appear in a thousand forms, and in most subtle ways, demanding the greatest tact and courage to deal with it fairly and squarely and effectively. Dr. Van Dyke says: "The greatest of all wars has been going on for centuries. It is the ceaseless, glorious conflict against the evil that is in the world. Every warrior that will enter that age-old battle may find a place in the army, and win his spurs, and achieve honor, and obtain favor with the greatest Captain of the Host, if he will but do his best to make life purer and finer for every one that lives it."

Our Father, we pray to Thee for will and strength and courage to go forth from day to day, realizing that God is our helper, and we are fellow-helpers with Him. In this make burdens light and drudgery a way to rise to that which is higher. Amen.

"Firmness, both in suffering and exertion, is a character I would wish to possess. I have always despised the whining yelp of complaint and the cowardly, feeble resolve."—Robert Burns.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Some of these notes would have appeared last week but for the vacation in the Herald office. I am glad the faithful editor could have a vacation, but sorry it had to be put in in hard work getting the office and printing plant readjusted. But I am rejoicing that the editor is to have his efforts so splendidly reinforced by his new associates, and we wish them every success in this new and enlarged venture.

Onondaga Camp Ground

It was my privilege to spend August 10 to 14 with the young people and the workers of the Onondaga Conference on their beautiful camp ground, on the shores of Lake Ontario. I taught two groups each day in their summer conference, and found it exceedingly pleasant to greet old friends and to meet many new ones. It seemed like old times to be back in young people's work for these five days.

Chatham Circuit

On Saturday and Sunday, August 21 and 22, I was on Chatham Circuit, conducting the third quarterly conference at Pine Grove on Saturday, and preached at Pine Grove and Flint Ridge on Sunday. Since the sudden passing of Rev. J. H. Bowman these people are without a pastor, and naturally they are a bit discouraged. They are rather much behind with their finances but we tried to encourage them to raise just as much of the salary as possible and send same to Mrs. J. H. Bowman, Liberty, N. C.

It is not our purpose to appoint any regular pastor to this work for the two remaining months before Conference. Rev. F. L. Gibbs has already held one of the meetings, and will hold another next week and will also fill some afternoon appointments during the two months. Rev. W. H. Neese held one meeting this last week. Rev. A. O. Lindley is holding another meeting this week. In this way the work is being cared for and will be thus carried on till Conference.

District Rally

We enjoyed participating in the district rally in the sixth district on Sunday, August 29. Rev. J. E. Pritchard is chairman, and had prepared a good program. The day was very warm, but the people seemed to enjoy the occasion very much. Pritchard, Neese and Hill all participated in this meeting and Brother C. B. Way was in the morning service. Prof. P. E. Lindley drove from Thomasville in time to deliver a very strong address on "Christian Education" at the afternoon hour. The services were held in the Asheboro church and were well attended. A splendid dinner was served in the basement of the church at the noon hour.

Community Church, Thomasville

I feel sure that all the friends of our people in the Community church, Thomasville, will rejoice with them in the fact that they have secured the services of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Maier. Rev. Dwight L. Fouts plans to return to Duke University this fall to complete his education. Prof. P. E. Lindley desires to give his whole time to High Point College, and Rev. and Mrs. Maier will take charge of the work at Community church about the middle of September. During several years of special work and study these two splendid workers have prepared themselves for just this kind of service, so the church and conference is to be congratulated upon their coming.

OCCIDENTAL YOUTH AND ORIENTAL SCHOLARSHIP

Rev. T. T. Brumbaugh

"The great need of Japan today is moral education." One hears it on all sides in this great empire. Whether spoken by the master of commerce who employs thousands of helpers in factories and finds their morals collapsing under industrial conditions to which Japan has not become acclimated, or by an official of one of the labor organizations recently grown to powerful proportions, the statement is significant and arises from a distinct sense of national need. It should be widely observed that with all Japan's remarkable progress in transition from a group of isolated rural islands of seventy years ago to a modern industrial and commercial world-power, disaster physical and spiritual is inevitable if in some way the decline of traditional morality be not retarded or a new source of moral uplift be not found.

What is true of Japan is as true of all the Oriental lands rapidly being industrialized and modernized as it is of Western nations, whose nerves and souls are being jeopardized by enforced slavery to the great gods of Power, Greed, Production, Standardization, and Competition. But let no one in the highly conceited Occident presume that this growing consciousness of moral need among discerning students of affairs in the Far East constitutes a call for more cureall medicine from the so-called Christian West. Unpunished political murder in Italy, undisguised militarism in France, industrial bloodshed in Germany, imperialistic jockeying by England, selfish and bigoted international relations on the part of America, no longer recommend Occidental labels for Oriental maladies.

Does one insist that, after all, Western ideas have given Japan her present prominent position among the peoples of the earth, he is to be faced with the frank declaration that Western science alone has been beneficial to Japan and the East; in so far as, along with science, Occidental morals have been introduced, they are proving a distinct menace to the established and time-honored Oriental sandards of morality in family relationship, filial piety, and the veneration of ancestors. A bill now pending in the Japanese Imperial Diet calling for the suppression of foreign dancing throughout the empire is supported by an amazing array of carefully compiled statistics showing how this "evil foreign pastime" and the freedom and independence it implies and encourages among young men and women have served to undermine family relationships and filial piety in Japan, especially among the middle and upper classes, which until now have been regarded as the moral backbone of the nation. Modern Western freedom of youth as now being indoctrinated in Japanese boys and girls by foreign models—teachers, books, and moving pictures—threatens to destroy completely the age-old authority of Oriental parents over children, and the proper respect among young folks for seniority and older judgment.

A recent critic of this invasion of modernism from the West recalls his own early training under Confucian and Buddhist teachers who, though not possessed of up-to-date knowledge along scientific lines, yet taught with great moral conviction the duties of filial piety and loyalty to the best of the past. By way of comparison of such instruction with present methods and standards in education, this distinguished scholar makes the following statements, which it would be well for Christian society and its leaders to contemplate:

"Unfortunately, the teaching of this beautiful virtue (filial piety) began to be neglected when younger teachers imbued with new ideas came to take their place. The entry of Christianity, which taught the existence of another and greater Father in Heaven, did not ameliorate the prospect much. On the contrary, earnest to preach Heavenly Father, those Christian teachers touched little on duty to earthly fathers, and it was often found that a Christian home, commendable in the highest degree otherwise, cut a rather sorry figure amidst the Buddhist or Confucian families around, so far as this virtue of filial piety was concerned; as if filial piety was an Oriental and not a Christian virtue, or as if the commandment "Honor thy father and thy mother" was not as important as any other commandment."

All of which should make us ask ourselves whether indeed the source of the present wide-spread moral slump in so-called Christian lands, with its consequent threat of complete collapse of the family ties, may not be some defect in Western thought more fundamental than a mere "aftermath of the war," to which we have been glibly attributing our recent irregularities of conduct. Perhaps, rather, the war itself and its aftermath may have been due to a failure properly to inculcate, not in the present generation of youth, but in its parents as youth, the doctrine of the sacredness of the family idea, parental responsibility, and filial piety. It is unpleasant subject-matter, but worth considering, whether indeed, not so much the young people of today, but some fundamental defect in the philosophy and religion taught their parents as children is responsible for the present astoundingly large percentage of youth among those apprehended in crime, for the current disinclination to regard the marriage vows as of binding sacredness, for the general laxity of morals among the youth of today, the flouting of parental authority, and the appalling decline in respect for seniority and old age. True enough, as our critic suggests, much has been said in recent decades about the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all men, but is it not equally true that our grandparents and parents and new we ourselves in the made scramble for wealth and power in a scientific age have been giving little or no emphasis to the Fifth Commandment? And this in spite of Jesus' words and example recognized filial duty to His parents, especially to His mother, to say nothing of the sense of fidelity to His lineage which fastened upon Him responsibility for realizing the long-standing prophecy concerning "a rod out of the stem of Jesse," would should "stand for an ensign of the people."

Much, all too much of late, has been said about the emancipation and freedom of youth. Like T. N. T., this freedom is good if kept within limits and under control; but to thinking people it should be clear that this doctrine when preached to the exclusion of all else that is true, like so many emancipation proclamations at their inception, proves too much. If it be true, as many advocates of complete emancipation of youth from parenal restraint contend, that because a child's will is not consulted in being brought into this world, the new soul has no responsibility to the family and lineage which produced it, by the same logic one may rule out the individual's every responsibility to society and even to the God of creation, since it is clear that the new creature's consent to be born is sought by and given to no one. Since such psychology leads but to the philosophy of solipsism, the religion of individualism, and the political economy of anarchism, it should be widely recognized for what it is, and treated accordingly wherever it appears.

Far, far better is it for the young mind to employ such freedom of judgment and will as it enjoys in recognizing the distinct contribution to rich and noble life made by the Creator of such a universe as is ours, the very large part our forefathers and foremothers have played in giving us the rich heritage of modern civilization, the patient, loving care bestowed upon us by our parents, the filial responsibility of gratitude such blessings impose upon us, and the mighty duty we in turn must discharge to the next generation in impressing upon them the proper sense of gratitude to God, loyalty to all that is good in the past, filial devotion to parents and family, and personal responsibility for the future of the race.

If we discharge these duties, no one may in future say of the present generation that while emphasizing certain of the teachings of Christ our Lord, we failed to have proper regard for the fundamental assumption of all His teaching—viz., the sacredness of family ties—and by such failure have discredited our religion in the eyes of non-Christian lands. That is the charge now being brought against our parents by even friendly critics in the Orient today. And because the charge is all too true, leaders on this side of the globe are not looking to Christendom for much help in solving the Orient's crying need for moral education. Will the future afford a better example from West to East, thereby strengthening the hands of Christian teachers in the earth's far corners and speeding the coming of Christ's kingdom? Youth alone can answer.—Zion's Herald.

may not be imposed upon by any trick of the imagination. The fundamentalist should pray for the spirit of tolerance that he may be willing to be shown his own errors. The modernist should pray for the spirit of humility that he may avoid the errors into which pride would lead him.

Actuated by the proper spirit toward the truth and toward each other, the fundamentalists and modernists may become glad co-factors in the noble work of human progress toward the reign of truth. With all our natural and acquired differences, "we are brethren." If we cannot wholly agree in opinion, let us agree in being honest and in loving each other. Let us not assume that because someone else does not think as we do, that he does not think at all or thinks under the bias of an evil disposition. It may be that he has thought more widely and more honestly and more earnestly than we realize.

Let us not quarrel when we ought to be helping one another.

Denominational Enterprises

AN INCIDENT—AN OUTLOOK

Recalling the date of the organization of the First Methodist Protestant Church in Yokohama, Japan, I cabled a few days before, in code, a personal message of congratulation to the church on its fortieth anniversary,—July 11, 1926.

As the organizer and first pastor of the church it gave me very great pleasure to express my interest and best wishes for increasing success in all of their work. An appreciative reply by mail from the pastor stated "the people were deeply moved to hear the words from the first pastor on the fortieth anniversary of our church," and expressed their hearty thanks.

It is not only our first church in Japan, but the first Methodist Protestant church organized in the heathen world, and surely I bespeak the love and prayers of our American members for that church to have a long life and a large share in the extension of the Kingdom.

It was six years after the first Japanese convert was baptized by Rev. James H. Ballaugh, of the Reformed Church in America, before a Protestant church could be organized in the empire.

The last report indicates that there are 281,391 Protestant Christians in Japan, and yearly the number grows at an encouraging rate. There are many more who are directly under the beneficent influence of Christianity, holding the Christ as supreme, and His teachings as incomparable. "At least a million Japanese outside the Christian Church have so come to understand Christianity that, although unbaptized, they are framing their lives according to the teachings of Christ."

It is to be noted that in Japan the Church's beginning was not among the lower orders of society, but among the higher intellectual circles and thus secured capable and efficient leaders on a par with those who in in other spheres have achieved great things for their country.

One wrote: "One in every hundred of the educated classes is a Christian; the proportion of Christians is notable among the editors and school teachers."

A very encouraging fact is that of late the primary schools of Tokyo are open to Christian teachings once a week, evidently growing out of the acknowledgement by many that the government educational system lacks a vital factor in the moral training of the young which imperils the future of the nation.

Few countries have such an extensive and efficient school system of education, for it reaches the farthest limits of the empire, and mission schools have gained more influence, and are doing a greater work than ever.

A most significant fact—one having great possibilities for the Kingdom—is the reported action of the Home Department of the Japanese government in abolishing thousands of small shrines, which for generations were the places of nature and animal worship by the simple country people.

The spread of education and the spiritual enlightenment of recent years make those shrines, in the judgment of the government, a stumbling block to the progress of the nation which now ranks as one of the five foremost nations of the world.

Needless to say, this must bring great encouragement to the missionaries and Christians of Japan, and opens up a large field to present, under more favorable conditions, the Gospel in all its light and power.

The lowering of the voting age to twenty-five, and the abolishing of certain holding qualifications have increased the number of voting men (women are denied the franchise) to about ten million.

The women of Japan, however, are more and more asserting, and obtaining recognition and rights, for their advancement, education, influence and entrance into commercial, industrial and professional life must bring them to their laudable objective.

Japan's greatest need and our richest gift is the Gospel. We have been heeding God's call, but we must do more, and that calls for workers and money.

God calls the workers, and He requires us to provide the money. What reply do you make to the great needs of your own church's foreign missionary work?

Fred C. Klein.

ON THE OTHER SIDE

Last week I set forth a few facts concerning the beginnings of the work of Christian missions in Japan, and some of the encouraging developments and heartening prospects.

That the task yet to be accomplished is great, and demands the continued and increasing efforts of all Christians cannot be questioned.

There is, however, nothing to affright or deter, but facing the facts should impel to more consecration, larger liberality, greater efforts to carry out the will of our Lord for the highest good of mankind.

By far the dominant religion of Japan is Buddhism, which originated in India, and entered Japan from Korea and spread over the land.

The effort to make Japan a Christian nation is, therefore, only seeking to do what was done before with a man-made religion, destitute of the essentials necessary to do what is needed most by the individual and the nation.

The present strength of Buddhism was set forth some time ago by the head of the Religious Bureau of the Department of Education, who gave the number of Buddhists as 48,000,000 as against 17,000,000 Shintoists and 210,000 (later report, 281,000) Christians, or about 75 per cent of the people aligned with Buddhism.

But he added a significant statement: "But we cannot say that these are real believers in Buddhism in the same sense in which the Christians believe in Christianity."

He stated, based upon an investigation of the religious beliefs of the students of 177 universities and colleges that "there are 222 religious organizations in these institutions; 101 Buddhist, 114 Christian, two Shintoist and five of other faiths."

Judged by the number of organizations, the students may be said to show their religious inclinations as follows: Buddhists, 45 per cent; Christians, 51 per cent; Shintoists nine per cent; others, two and one-half per cent. The strength as shown by membership is as follows: Buddhists, 52 1-2 per cent; Christians, 41 per cent; Shintoists, one and one-half per cent; others, nearly five per cent.

The students of the universities and colleges represent the intelligent classes of the future, and we may conclude that the above proportions represent the relative strength of these religions among the thoughtful classes of Japan.

"According to this survey Christianity shows superior influence in the nation."

As to the number of Buddhist temples and priests, it was stated by another authority that there are 7,000 temples and more than 50,000 priests.

It has been claimed that our denominations are confusing to the non-Christian people of Japan, but far too much stress has been put upon that.

It is enough to say that Buddhism in Japan is divided up into 14 chief sects and 74 branches, and there exists among them considerable rivalry in claims and efforts.

The Buddhist creed, as accepted in Japan, belongs to that division of Buddhism known in India as the Northern school.

From the first the Buddhist priests were scholars; some rank very high today, and its educational influence has perhaps been its chief virtue. But now, as heretofore, it appropriates good out of other faiths, and has adopted the plans of the Christian missionaries in establishing schools, organizations, using hymns, etc., in efforts to rehabilitate itself and hold its place, but its doom is marked before the steady progress of Christianity.

Our church has no little share in that great work. It can only go on and succeed as all do their duty.

What are you doing to answer the call of your Lord which comes out of the needs of His work?

FRED C. KLEIN.

WHO WILL DO IT?

Our China mission reports that a Chinese magistrate in a neighboring city to our out-station Chai Kou Pu, has promised to contribute either half of the amount needed, or the wood material which would be required for a chapel at Chai Kou Pu. This would be about half of the price required.

He is a Christian and visited Chai Kou Pu several times, and brought up the question of a new chapel to our people.

He will probably be there only a short time, and if this chance to build is lost, our people are afraid it may never come again.

Times are very hard with war conditions, and with the little our struggling people can do, it will require about $500 to put up the needed building.

A good brother in New Jersey, Brother A. B. De Camp, some time ago bought for $375 a property in China where a native house is used as a chapel, and he still supports the pastor and is happy over his investment.

Who will invest $500 to build a chapel in a large, needy place in China? Who will do it? Speedy action is necessary. Write me at Berwyn, Md. An evening's offering at Annual Conference could do it.

FRED C. KLEIN, Exec. Sec.

PRAYER FOR OUR COLLEGES

Only a few days now and our Christian Colleges will be opening for another year's work. This means an epoch and an event in the life of many a youth, and in the history of the church. Into our colleges will soon be flowing those currents which in a few years will broaden and deepen into mighty streams of church life and influence.

Are we praying for our colleges now as the occasion and the need demand?

First. Are we praying that there will be diverted into our colleges now just those young people of prospect, promise and power, who should go to our Christian colleges and have their lives touched, enriched and inspired by the wholesome atmosphere and influence to be found there as nowhere else?

Second. Are we praying that our Christian colleges shall be indeed and in truth Christian, as their name and profession indicate? That their administrative officers, their teachers, their instructors, may all be divinely sustained and guided in the great task before them of properly governing and instructing the young life entrusted, for the most crucial period of history, to them? That the influence of our Christian Colleges may be good, wholesome, helpful, character-building, of the right and true type, for all who come under their tutelage, and for the church and kingdom under whose auspices they have been builded and by whom they are supported? That an ever increasing number of friends and patrons for our colleges may be found who will not only lend their influence, but will give of their means to the support of these vital veins and arteries of the church?

One wonders if we Christians are devoutly praying in these crucial days for our colleges as the opportunity affords and the need demands?—Christian Sun.

A BOY STUMPS HIS SMOKING FATHER

WILL H. BROWN

Jacob H. Schwank relates in the Gospel Banner how he broke his father of smoking. As a boy he worked long and patiently in making a water-wheel that would run without turning a crank. When it was finished he called his father to see it. The father said he thought the boy was very foolish to spend so much time on something that would not even crack a grain of corn for a little chicken. Then the boy looked up and said:

"Now, daddy, please do not get offended at me if I tell you of something that looks still more foolish to me. You fill your pipe with tobacco about half a dozen times a day, and light it, and suck the smoke through the stem into your mouth, then blow it out in the air. Now, daddy, be fair and square with me. Which is the more foolish—for a man to do that, or for me to do what I am doing?"

Father Swank walked away, silently, but not smoking his pipe. And he never smoked it again. The boy had done what his mother and others had failed to do through a long period of years. Every father who smokes should think seriously as to the kind of impression he is making upon his son. Can a boy respect a smoking father as he should?

Most boys have thoughtful moments. A thoughtful boy is almost certain to wonder why father objects to him spending money for things he likes while the father is spending his money for a thing so useless, and often injurious, as tobacco.

George M. Pullman gave up smoking, so he sould use his money in building his first sleeping car. Another man, after quitting tobacco, said he had figured it up that he had spent $18,000 for tobacco—enough to buy four homes like the one he lived in.

When it comes to waste, smokers take the lead.

Immortality

Who does not feel that it would change everything if he believed with his whole soul in his immortality? It would supply him with a totally new standard of values—many things which the world prizes and pursues he would utterly despise, and many things which the world neglects would be the objects of his most ardent pursuit.—James Stalker.

THE JUMBLE SALE.

Felicia Moreton was singing as she took the turning into Chapel Street that afternoon—singing softly underneath her breath. The tune that she was humming didn't seem to matter much: some lilting folk-song that the school children had been taking. But what of that? She felt like singing in the cool fresh April air, and although in passing the open door of Knapton's Dividend Provision Stores, a natural caution prompted, "Care-ful, care-ful, 'Licia," for you never knew where slight, sardonic Mr. Knapton might be lurking, she did not hold her voice a whit even for him. The sunshine, and....

It must have been the sunshine, and the alabaster clouds, tremendous! slowly screening from the intense blue beyond....the sunshine bursting gracious on the pavement where she walked, sparkling in the raindrops, striking iridescent in the swirling gutters. How warm and lovely after rain the sunshine fell, upon your cheeks, upon your neck and fingers! And how the dingy street seemed somehow—different, transformed, in quality, though how she could not well explain.....

She pursed up her lips in a whistle as she marked Betty Martindale approaching, a drifting blot of color in her light blue raincoat; but Felicia never had been much of a whistler at any time; eager little wheezings she made, and frail explosions, when everybody laughed and teased her for her temerity. Still, she screwed her lips up hopefully, and even when Miss Martindale had glimpsed her, was throwing up her hand in eager greeting, impatient to be crying, "Isn't it lovely? Isn't it just splendid to be alive, Betty?...."

But Betty did not seem to notice. She had halted by the schoolroom gates, and was staring with a measure of some surprise along the avenue. "Good gracious me," she was saying as Felicia hurried up, "dear....just look—look."

Responsive Felicia peeped. Down the narrow brick canyon, that made division between the chapel wall and the adjoining houses, a group of women had gathered, aproned and shawled, standing for the most part silent, with only an occasional outthrown word. They were huddled in the deeper shadow where the sunshine did not penetrate, and there was something in their pale expectancy that chased the smile away from Felicia's lips. "It's half-an-hour too early," she breathed round-eyed. "Isn't it a caution? I'm sure the things aren't half arranged. We'll take the chapel door. We'll see." And suddenly she was brisk, serious, business-like. She was stripping off her gloves with a most determined air....

. . . . . .

In the schoolroom the air struck cold, so chilly indeed that it seemed to Felicia as she descended the steps, rather like walking down into an icy tank. The structure of tables, arranged in a rectangular formation so that the serving ladies might occupy the hollow, reared dingily, burdened by an indiscriminate assortment of articles. No time for mooning now, however, and in a moment she was slipping off her coat and assuming her apple-green overall. "My," she was saying to Betty with arms akimbo, "the stuff!"

The "stuff" lay heaped around, some of it labelled, much of it arranged quite neatly, for other fingers had been busy in the preceding evening. Cast-off boots and shoes, with the prices in chalk upon the soles; old, but quite clean camisoles and other undergarments; modest heaps of darned and rolled-up stockings; ties in piles, twisted in upon each other like slender vari-colored serpents. Here a heap of untrimmed hats, a little out of the fashion, but quite good for all that. "Won't sell easily—those," said Betty jerking her head in that direction. "People don't want them, somehow."

"Oh, I don't know," said Felicia, her spirits rising once again; "now just look here." And she was turning over a little pile of pictures at the corner of the stall...."Quite good ones...." Two were subdued olegraphs, a convent scene, tiny roofs, peaked and heavy with snow; and the second also a convent, snow-laden, with tiny peaked roofs—the work of the same architect she supposed. The third was a battle picture: not very interesting, thought Felicia. The fourth, a faded photograph of some wedding group, she held up to the light with a little squeal of astonishment. "Now, just fancy that," said Felicia, "who in the world will spend their hard-earned coppers on that?"

"The ridiculous leg o' mutton sleeves," breathed Betty.

"And the hats like pancakes," said Felicia.

"Freaks. And look at their—oh, look at them!" And they both burst into laughter. "Just look at his face (this was the bridegroom's) with a hat stuck like an acorn on a turnip!"

Then Mrs. Corber and her daughter entered, three other girls, Laurie Corber, a boy of ten. The elder woman assumed control. She tossed her head. "Oh, one of those," she remarked. "Much good that'll do. Mark it fivepence. Laurie, take your hands out of your pockets and go and open that door. Admission's twopence, remember. It's bolted now."

Felicia clapped her hand across her mouth. She had forgotten the waiting company....

The first few customers stole in so furtively that Felicia could not help feeling sorry for their confusion, smiling herself a little shyly whenever she found it possible to meet an eye. Any one could see that all these were working women, almost all upon the poverty line with only pence to spend. And yet the initial strangeness dismissed, they tumbled over the cast-off garments deftly, apprising each in its peculiar value. They seemed to cluster round the children's clothing first of all, the tiny frocks and coats and underwear. Felicia could hear their confusion as she waited in attendance. "It's our Gertie—do you think this'll be a shade too short for our Gertie." asked one woman of another, holding the dress against her figure. "She's young and growing," replied the other cautiously. "She is," said the mother wistfully, the bright band of her wedding ring alone gleaming on the roughness of her hands. How Felicia hoped that the dress might prove of service after all. "Perhaps it will take down," she suggested helpfully. And the woman dropped the garment instanter, deciding no. Felicia flushed, her advice of no account. A loud-voiced pair beyond were trying on a costume to the accompaniment of strident laughter. For one the skirt was well fitting, but the coat too long: and with the other the coat fitted splendidly but for the sleeves. A ruddy-complexioned and still more boisterous companion was trying on a summer hat, all film and framework, making a burlesque movement of the hands and crying out, "How's that for Scarboro' this season?" Whereat everybody smiled....

And now they were busier, buying. Hesitatingly coins were drawn from purses, and hurriedly bundled parcels thrust into handbags and basses. "Can I persuade you to take one of these hats?" Felicia, endearingly as possible had turned towards a spare little woman whose quick keen eyes were ranging the assortment before her. The answer came quickly: "Nay, lass! It's on'y one hat that I've bought these six years, an' that were for the old dad's funeral; and when I get another, it's a new un I'll buy, I'll be thinking. No, thank ye." Felicia laughed nervously. It was funny how with the teeniest touch of shame you contrived to remember your own three new—or fairly new—creations....

Then...."Do have a try at the pictures," whispered Mrs. Corber. "They're not going at all well. Push them if you can...."

. . . . . .

Forlornly the pictures had been reared against an empty collar box—eight or nine perhaps, in addition to those that Felicia had already noted—a battle scene, the glass broken, and Highland cattle fading pathetically upon a fading landscape. And never until that moment had Felicia quite realized that there were people to whom pictures—properly framed and appointed pictures—represented something inessential, a luxury perhaps, the mere embroidery of existence. As she watched their fingers tentatively inquiring, the thought appalled her. She remembered the treasure of her own bedroom, a still-life study of wallflowers in a pewter jar, a tiny reproduction of Watts' "Hope," the white and ebony of Grecian Marbles. What could she do without them? Life would be so colorless, certainly emptier...."Won't you take these?" she asked suddenly of two who had broken away from the clothing counter to handle the pictures with a passing interest. "I'll make them half-price if you'll have them," she continued daringly—anyhow, they wanted selling! ...."A bargain at sixpence the two."

"M-m-m. Cheap," said the woman turning the convent snows around. "Christmasy a bit. What do you say, Lucy?"

"Aye," said Lucy, "aw right. Have a go."

The other opened her purse. "Lawks, I've on'y five-pence—never mind."

"You can take these for fivepence," breathed Felicia quickly, intensely eager.

"Aw right."

"Anything else you'd like?" asked Felicia.

"That—I don't think!" cried the woman hitching the convent snows beneath her arm, and pointing to the wedding group. And without a further word the pair moved on. "Poor wedding group." Felicia thought as she ran her duster across the face of it and propped it in a place of vantage....

. . . . . .

After that there was a space during which things slackened, although a thin stream of newcomers replenished the departing customers. Felicia, hovering in conversation on the fringe of the other stalls, fell back at last upon her own—and the wedding circle. How strange, how stiffly, formally, the company peered across at her....with a fading gaze in the yellowing photograph. The young man with the buttonhole, a scream of a curly little moustache upon his lip. What had he been?.....of what occupation? Where was he now? She could not be at all certain, but these were the fashions of the early 'nineties, surely. Men's fashions never did change very much; they hadn't the courage of the women folk! And the girl beside him in her choky collar and her taughtened figure? In spite of her attitude and the ordered lines of her face there was a certain wistfulness that swept across one's heart-strings like a burst of music. To be happy ever after? Perhaps. Felicia couldn't decide, and hadn't decided when a rude hand pushed the photo aside, and apprising the remainder in a swoop that made one gasp, was pushing over money, for all save the wedding group and the glassless battle-scene. A thick-set angular woman it was, with a little girl in attendance, to whom, with an almost casual gesture, she handed two of the smaller pictures. Felicia did not know, as she was afterwards to learn, that the good lady was a fent store-dealer out for bargains. What a pity, thought the girl, to take all save these two. Yet, after all, the soldiers and their horses, being without protection, were beginning to show a trifle dingy....As for the group? Somehow the group attracted her. Perhaps she would be really sorry to lose it now? "And yet....how absurd it is!" she reflected, "how unutterably silly of me to trouble at all about a silly little crush of people that I have never seen—may never see, and even now are old out of all recognition....Really!" A boy approached....

. . . . . .

He might have been fifteen perhaps. He had a long nose, and a queer fixed look in his eye that made Felicia want to laugh. The tumble of his hair beneath a shabby cap may have denoted some artistic aspiration—Felicia thought that it did, and she marked his maneuvering with an amused smile around her lips. She watched him run his eyes along the line of charging (if a little faded) horsemen—watched him as he pressed the crook of his forefinger upon his lips with a critical gesture. Then he surveyed the frame minutely, passed his thumb across the joint, cocked his head a little to one side....

"Cheap at twopence," said Felicia. "Do you like battle pictures?"

"Not picture I'm after," he jerked. "Frame—got suthing I wanter frame—suthing o' my own. How much for this frame?" And he touched the wedding group. He was obviously embarrassed.

"That?" answered Felicia. "That? Oh, that isn't for sale."

"It's on the stall," he answered a little hardily.

"I know," she retorted rather quickly. "But ....it's sold....sold...."

"It was on the stall—I thought it was for sale," he repeated awkwardly.

Silly creature! Why would he persist in repeating himself so stupidly? Felicia was beginning to lose patience.

"No, you can't buy it. You can have the soldiers for a penny."

"I'll take the soldiers," he answered, his face brightening with appreciation. "Thank ye...."

"Now, why did I do that?" pondered Felicia. "Now, just why did I do it?...."

. . . . . .

It was half-past five, and everybody was crying, "Felicia's going to be the last!"

"And Felicia doesn't mind if she is," she trilled, as, watching the others assume their outdoor garments, she tidied a few of the remaining bundles of unsold material. "What's to become of these?"

"Oh, sell them to the ragman later," answered Mrs. Corber cheerfully. "We'll get something for them. Throw the picture with them."

"Come along, Felicia," said Betty, "I'm as hungry as a hunter. Aren't you? Ah, here's the caretaker. He'll make you move!"

Felicia cast a laughing glance in their direction. "Push on," she jerked, "I'll be with you in a moment," and with bright eyes she watched them vanish in the hollow of the staircase.

The caretaker gave greeting as he stood aside to let them pass, and paused a moment or two in conversation.

Felicia darted forward. With one swift glance around, she seized upon the photograph. There was the whisper of feet upon tip-toe, the rustling of skirts, the thin squeak of an awkward hinge, and in the darkness of the cupboard she was thrusting the wedding group beneath a huge pile of dusty, disused music-sheets. And then as the caretaker made his appearance, she was already wiping her hands, a moment later to assume her hat.

"Late scholar," said the caretaker.

"Aren't I?" she responded. She must be flushing, absurdly beetroot red!

"Well, that's all over," he continued. "You will have done well, I'll be thinking?"

"Very well," she answered.

"Then I'll be locking up for a piece." He jingled his keys suggestively.

"Felicia!" A voice called thinly—Betty in the street perhaps. And Felicia smiled quietly as she listened.

"Somebody calling?" said the caretaker suggestively.

"Yes," said Felicia.

She heard him thrust the key into the lock, heard the little hindrance, an iron protestation, that made the key so difficult in turning, and then with quickening footsteps strode to where the sunlight burned, lovely and mellow in the late afternoon. The jumble sale was over....—Roger Dataller, in London Methodist Recorder.

BENNY'S PEACH TREE.

"Here is a little peach tree that they threw in when I bought the others," said Mr. Wilson. "Would you like to have it, Benny?"

"Oh, if you please!" cried Benny, eagerly.

"You can set it at the corner where the orange tree died," said his father.

Benny planted his tree with great care. He dug the hole, partly filled it with rich, mellow earth, leaving a little mound in the center. Then he set in the tree, spreading the roots carefully over the mound, filling up the hole with rich earth.

He went to visit it often, and when a week had gone by, he saw that the swelling buds, instead of being green were of a pinkish hue. And the next time he found some little pink blossoms, and was nearly wild with delight.

"Oh, papa," he cried, "my little tree is going to bear this year!"

"It's a brave little tree," said papa, "but it must not bear so young. You'd better pick all the blossoms off."

Benny was disappointed, but followed his father's advice. Soon the leaf buds opened, and the tree began to grow.

When the second spring came, the blossoms appeared again. And after the blossoms dropped, there were little fuzzy balls, and papa said, "It will do no harm to leave a few."

The peaches ripened in June, and were great, red-cheeked beauties, and there was one for each of the family.

During the second season, the peach tree made a great growth, and the third spring the branches were thick. Then it blossomed once more, and set full of little green peaches: and Benny said, "I shall leave every one on the tree."

His father came to look. "If you leave every one on," he said "your peaches will be small and worth but little. I shall pick half of them off."

The peaches began to swell. They grew to a wonderful size, and as they ripened the sun gave them a rich color. When the buyer came to look at them, he said they were so fine he would give an extra price. When Benny's peaches were gathered there were nearly a hundred pounds. It seemed too good to be real.

"I think half of the money is for peaches and the other half for my patience," he said —Youth's Companion.

THE TESTIMONY OF A CHINESE PROFESSOR

Professor C. T. Song

A Christian's attitude toward other religions ought to be honest and fair. He ought to be such a student of truth that he never dares to look down on other religions but quietly tries his best to learn, understand, and appreciate them. Men of other religions are his brothers and sisters, and he can learn much from them as well as give what he has to them. He ought to be humble. He must live his own religion in such a way that other men cannot but feel the attraction. I feel more and more that religion is a matter of living and not of talking.

I call Christ my Savior because He saves me from sin, from temptation, from the world, and from myself. He is my Saviour in a very real sense. He saves me from fear, from Satan, and from death. He is my life, my strength, my power, my joy, my truth, my way, my friend, my brother—oh! my very self, if that self is going to mean anything to the world. I must die on the cross, He must live in my place, so I call him Saviour.

He is greater than Confucius or Buddha because He is more divine, but He is also very human. He is God in the real sense and man in the real sense, so He can bring God and man together and let them enjoy each other in a very special way.

WILD CHILDREN

If we may believe the account by Vladimir Zenzinoff recently published in the New York World, one of the saddest by-products of the World War is made up of the "wolf packs" of homeless children in Russia. At first they were known as "bijentzwi" or "those who run." They were the children who ran from the German invasion in the western section of Russia, Families were broken and the children scattered in every direction. Since that time the number of such unfortunate children has increased greatly. They are to be found in the larger cities and they roam over vast territories outside of the cities. They resort to all forms of lawlessness and there is reason to believe that they are developing into some of the worst bands of criminals which the world has known. We are told that on one night last December, the police and militia of Moscow attempted a round-up and succeeded in picking up 11,690 homeless youngsters. Scores of frozen bodies were brought in for common burial. A few individuals were sent to jails but most of them were turned back into the streets. It is said that this problem in Moscow can be duplicated in other centers.

The situation in Russia is not only pitifully tragic in itself, but it contains a moral for every country, including the United States. The land that neglects the mental, moral, and religious training of its youth is headed toward some very uncomfortable days in the future. We do not have as many homeless youth as has Russia, but we do have nearly twenty million boys and girls under twenty-five years of age who are not receiving religious instruction. Eight hundred thousand of these of school age live in New York City and another half million in the city of Chicago. Is it any wonder that these great cities are centers of crime and lawlessness?—Zion's Herald.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE ITEMS

There will be a meeting of the High Point College faculty on Monday, September 6th, at 3:00 p. m. Tuesday, the seventh, is registration day for freshmen. All freshmen will register that day. No particular hour has been set for the registration, except from 9:00 to 5:00. During these hours members of the faculty will be present to advise and help map out the courses.

Wednesday will be Orientation Day. High Point College is trying out the experiment for the first time this year. Some colleges have a week of orientation. The purpose of this day is to get the freshmen acquainted with the college buildings, the rules and requirements, and at the same time lectures will be given on subjects of interest to those in the freshmen class. They will be welcomed to the college by the presidents of the sophomore, junior and senior classes, as well as some official of the college.

Thursday, September 9th, the upper classmen will register. On Friday class work will begin in real earnest. On that day we will have the first chapel service, and we would be glad to have all the friends of the college who care to come to attend this chapel service.

We are fortunate in having this year Miss Bessie Battle to teach Art. She is a well equipped teacher, and will have classes in pen and pencil sketching, china painting and various other kinds of Art. Another new teacher is Professor T. C. Johnson. Professor Johnson did his graduate work at Vanderbilt University, and will teach Journalism and Philosophy. He is a Baptist minister and a very fine man. We are also announcing a new teacher of Home Economics. Mrs. P. E. Lindley, who taught this subject last year, asked to be released and we have secured the services of Mrs. Madeline B. Street, who comes to us well recommended. Professor Johnson will have charge of the Library, in addition to his other work, with the help of several student assistants.

Another interesting thing this year is we will have some dignified seniors. We have missed the seniors, their wisdom, grace, and dignity, in the two years we have been running, so we will gladly welcome some thirteen or fourteen this year.

Several of our girls have gotten certificates and will teach in the public schools this year. A complete list of these will be given to the Herald at a later date. We are sorry not to have them with us again, but since it was necessary for them to leave us, we are glad to know they got certificates that rank with those received by students who have done the same grade of work at other colleges. It is a recognition of which we are justly proud.

One of our professors, growing weary of the lonely hours of bachelorhood, has taken unto himself a helpmate. Professor J. Hobart Allred and Miss Myrtle Perry, of Thomasville, were joined in matrimony on Tuesday, August 24th, and will make their home in High Point. The college is fortunate in having Mrs. Allred to join the rank of college professors' wives. She is a talented singer and a most attractive young woman. We are sure the First Church, High Point, choir will receive her with great pleasure.

Misses Idol, Williams, and McIntire spent part of their summer vacation at Columbia University, and Miss Young at North Carolina College for Women. Professor Mourane attended University of N. C. and Professor Yarborough at University of S. C. Mrs. Whitaker visited relatives and friends at Greensboro, Charlotte, and Lexington. Professor P. E. Lindley has about completed his residence and is getting ready to move in. Professor Hardy's home on West College Drive is completed and they have moved in.

After registration week Mr. Garrett will spend a great deal more of his time in the field. Mr. Garrett is an earnest, hard worker, and a good friend of the college, so we are sure you will welcome him to your church and home any time he will come.

MARRIED

Green-Harper.

August 8th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. O'Briant, 4:30 p. m., Mr. Edward Green and Miss Josephine Harper were happily married. The groom is from Knightsdale, N. C., formerly of Hawkins Chapel community, and the bride is from Henderson, N. C. May these young people have a happy and prosperous journey through life.

J. B. O'BRIANT.

Pickett-Sams

A wedding, which is of great interest to many friends in this and other sections of N. C. was solemnized in Philadelphia, Tuesday, August 7th, when Mr. John S. Pickett of High Point and Miss Pearl Sams of Trenton, N. J., plighted their troth. After the ceremony the happy couple left for Atlantic City, where a honeymoon of ten days was spent. The groom is a son of the late Mr. W. P. Pickett and Mrs. Pickett, was born and reared here, was educated at State College, Raleigh and Western Maryland College, Westminster, Md. He is a young man of strong sterling worth and splendid business ability, being practically the owner of Welch Furniture Co., this city. He is a trustee of High Point College and Treasurer of the Building Fund of the First Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. Pickett's bride is the pretty and talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Sams, formerly of High Point, but now residing in Trenton, N. J. She has taught for the past two years in Ray St. School of this city. This prominent young couple is very popular with a wide circle of friends, who extend happy felicitations and all good wishes for a peaceful and prosperous voyage through life. They returned to the city last Saturday night, and will be at home to their friends temporarily at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Walker, Jr. on Colonial Drive, the latter being a sister of Mr. Pickett.

High Point, N. C.

—Rev. J. D. Williams was Brother Suits' help at Moriah last week. His preaching is highly spoken of. There were some additions to the church.

—Brothers Ashburn and Shelton exchanged labors in two meetings on their fields recently.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

THE POSTAL CARD
W. F. Kennett, Editor.

The Revival Campaign.—All our revival meetings on Granville Circuit came in July. We began at Rehoboth first Sunday in July with Rev. Edw. Suits as preacher. We closed Friday afternoon with three accessions to the church. Bro. Suits is a strong preacher and a fundamentalist of fundamentalists.

Mt. Carmel.—We began at Mt. Carmel second Sunday with Rev. T. E. Pierce as preacher. We closed Friday night with two accessions to the church. Bro. Pierce preached with great earnestness and the people heard him gladly. Last year we had quite a number of accessions at Mt. Carmel, so there were not many unconverted people attending the meeting this year.

Union Chapel.—We began at Union Chapel fourth Sunday in July with Rev. Geo. W. Holmes as preacher. Here our revival campaign reached its climax. Bro. Holmes is a former pastor and greatly beloved. He preached with power and clearness. We closed Friday night with seventeen accessions to the church. Since then Prof. F. H. Hunter and Mrs. Hunter have joined at Union Chapel. This gives a total of 24 accessions on the charge for this year.

The Third Quarterly Conference.—We held the third quarterly conference at Mt. Carmel on Thursday of the meeting. The attendance was fine. Financial reports not very good. This conference came just when all of us had to buy automobile license and our money had to go to the State rather than to the church. The crop outlook is now good and we hope to come out O. K. in the end. We have faith in God and the people.

It was found that Bro. T. T. Ellis of Union Chapel was delegate-elect for the next Annual Conference.

The fourth quarterly conference is to be held at Union Chapel on Saturday before the second Sunday in October. Rev. A. G. Dixon, President of our Annual Conference, and Mrs. Dixon will be with us and we are looking forward to this conference. Let all our officials be diligent and we will have good reports and two days of earnest work and great joy on account of the good reports to be submitted. So may it be.

Henderson, N. C., August 24, 1926.

Littleton Circuit.—Our meeting at Vaughn was held fourth week in July with Rev. A. D. Shelton as our pulpit help. Bro. Shelton did good preaching and our people enjoyed it. We had good attendance all the time. One accession to the church.

Second Sunday in August we began our meeting at Hawkins Chapel. Bro. C. L. Spencer helped us there. Bro. Spencer did good preaching and we had a great meeting. Three reclamations, 20 conversions, and 20 accessions to the church.

The third Sunday in August found us at Weaver Chapel with Rev. R. C. Stubbins as our help. Bro. Stubbins did fine preaching. There was a fine spirit in the meeting and our people seemed to enjoy the meeting very much. There were some reclaimed and a few conversions, but no additions. There may be some later.

Bro. M. J. Morris is delegate elect to represent Littleton Circuit at our Annual Conference.

J. B. O'BRIANT.

Liberty, Davidson Circuit.—Liberty is still living and doing much good. Our revival meeting began the third Sunday and closed the past Friday. We had a good meeting.

Rev. Ben Williams was our pulpit help. Everybody seemed to enjoy his interesting sermons. He certainly did some real good preaching. There were fifteen conversions. We want to continue to pray for the sinners that they may be saved some time in the near future. The Christian people seemed to be blessed and very happy. We were very fortunate in having Mrs. Annie Lyndon for our organist; want to thank her very much, also want to thank the many friends that helped out in the choir. The singing certainly was fine; invite you all back again, everybody is welcome. Sunday school at 9:30; the attendance is not what it should be, but we are glad to have the faithful few.

Our pastor, Rev. C. E. Ridge, will be with us the third Sunday in October if nothing prevents. He will not be with us in September on account of the camp meeting at Chapel Hill the third Sunday. We pray for the success of the meeting.

With best wishes to the churches and Sunday schools.

ANNIE HILL, Reporter.

Shiloh, North Davidson Circuit.—Shiloh church is distressed because of the serious illness of some of its faithful members.

Bro. John Warner does not improve. He is suffering with cancer of the stomach.

Bro. M. W. Koonts lies at the Charlotte Sanatorium desperately ill. On last Thursday he had an operation for bladder trouble. The news came Friday that his condition was not so favorable as was first thought. The church, led by the pastor, offered a sincere earnest plea to God for him. Next news that came said he was somewhat better. We were greatly encouraged by the good news. He has had hiccoughs for several hours and so far the physicians have been unable to stop them. He is growing very weak. Let us continue to pray for his recovery, if God so wills it, but we bow in submission to His will. "The prayer of faith will save the sick."

Shiloh has had the best revival that she has seen in twenty years. God's Spirit was with our pastor, Rev. R. S. Troxler. He preached with great power the unsearchable riches of Christ Jesus. The Spirit was with God's people. They were so burdened for the lost souls that they could not sleep, but wrestled with God in prayer during the hours of night. God came with convicting and converting power and saved more than thirty souls, from eight-year-old children to old gray haired men. God truly opened the windows of heaven and poured us out a Pentecostal blessing. Men and women praised God and the church came back to her first love. Praise God for His love and power!

MRS. WILEY SHOAF, Reporter.

Siler City and Liberty.—The third Sunday at Siler City was the most interesting we have had during the year. Both services were well attended. Miss Lucy Boone of Burlington, N. C., sang an appropriate solo for the communion service.

The evening service was the time for our Children's Day Exercise. The young folks showed that they had been well trained and gave us a good entertainment. We were glad to have Miss Boone to play a piano solo and to sing again for us. We were also glad to have Miss Annie Livengood of Greensboro to bring us a message about the missionaries. An offering was taken for Foreign Missions.

We started a meeting at Hickory Grove, Brother Bowman's Church, the third Sunday and continued through Wednesday. In the short time we had for the meeting there were a few conversions and many re-consecrations, also some family altars were established in the homes.

We have recently started two prayer services, one at Liberty and the other at Siler City. 175 chapters of the Bible had been read in one week by those attending the Liberty prayer meeting and 247 chapters had been read in three weeks by our Siler City folk. We are studying the Book of John in our services.

Yesterday, August 22, regardless of the many revivals in session at the surrounding country churches we had large congregations at both services in Liberty. The evening service was a union meeting of all the churches of the town. Rev. J. H. Brendall, pastor of the M. E. church here, preached the sermon. A male quartette from the various churches furnished the special music.

Instead of going away for a vacation the writer is spending the next two weeks visiting the members in Siler City and Liberty.

The C. E. and Sunday school work is going nicely on the charge. Miss Pauline Elkins led the Senior meeting Sunday evening. A good program was prepared and rendered. Most all of the 35 present pledged to make prayer a power in their lives.

PASTOR.

Fallston.—Our special meeting at Fallston began the third Sunday in August and closed Saturday night.

Dr. J. D. Williams was our pastor's help.

Dr. Williams surely did some good preaching. We were very glad indeed to have him with us and feel sure his service with us was a great success.

Bro. Morgan worked very faithfully also and had great success in winning souls for Christ. I don't know the number of conversions. There were fourteen joined the church.

Our meeting was good but not what we would like for it to have been.

On Sunday at two o'clock we had our Children's Day service. The children did well and all enjoyed the exercise.

Our C. E. Society is doing much good. Annie Mae Lackey is our president.

REPORTER.

Laurel Hill, Toluca Charge.—The revival meeting began here the second Sunday in August and closed the following Saturday night. We had a great meeting. It does our souls good to go through such a meeting. Rev. E. A. Bingham was the efficient help.

There were somewhere in twenty professions, with two additions to the church. I think that I can say for Laurel Hill that each and everyone has been benefited by the good sermons that Bro. Bingham gave us. We were very glad to have members from other churches to come and worship with us. A welcome awaits you at Laurel Hill.

The third quarterly conference was held at Laurel Hill on Saturday before the second Sunday in August. A very large crowd was present, but there were one or two churches on the charge not represented. The votes for the delegates to the Annual conference were counted. The nominees were Mr. France Boyles and Mr. C. A. Richard. Mr. France Boyles was elected.

Our Sunday school is getting along nicely, and we have a very large attendance.

LOIS WILLIS, Reporter.

Cleveland Circuit, Kistler's Church.—We are still trying to do what we can. Our revival meeting embraced the first Sunday in August. Our pastor, Brother J. D. Morris, did the preaching; he preached with the power and oemen stration of the Holy Spirit and great good was accomplished: Thirty-three were converted and eight joined the church and the church was greatly revived. We are having a good Sunday school; the attendance is very good. We are having a mid-week prayer meeting with good interest. Pray for us that we may be able to do some good. We need your prayers, for there is much to be done. We have lots of boys who are not saved. We need your prayers that in some way we may bring them to Christ.

REPORTER.

Piney Grove, Denton Circuit.—There has not been any report from Piney Grove for a long time. I suppose most of the readers think that we are all dead, and buried, but nevertheless, there are still some faithful to the church.

Our special meeting just closed last Sunday night, with twenty professions and two accessions to the church. The church was revived and we hope more will join.

We were very glad to have with us, to help during the meeting the Evangelistic Club of High Point, a band of workers for upbuilding the kingdom of Christ. I feel that they did much good. There have been some good results even since the meeting closed.

Also, glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Hill of Richland charge with us some. Mr. Hill preached for us once. We are glad to see them come back home.

We want also to say a word of appreciation of the faithful work of our pastors; they labored so faithfully. We bid them God-speed in the great work as young ministers of the Gospel. May we as a people ever help uphold their hands by our help and prayers.

Bro. Carrol has been on the sick list, but we hope for him a speedy recovery.

Dear readers, pray for us at Piney Grove that we may do more to raise the banner of King Immanuel this year than ever before.

Miss Inez Trogdon and Mrs. J. B. Trogdon, of Stokesdale, visited their sister and daughter, Mrs. Joe Delk, and attended the meetings.

MRS. J. C. DELK.

State Street Church.—Our folks who have been away on vacation trips are getting back again and the various branches of the church work are getting back to normal again.

Work on the new church building has begun, and we hope will go forward rapidly to completion.

Mr. Bethea is improving but is far from well yet. He preached for us Sunday morning and is going to try to go on with his work as fast as his health permits.

The C. E. Society is planning a lawn party for some time soon. Ice cream and cake will be sold and the proceeds put on the piano fund.

REPORTER

Orange Charge, Chestnut Ridge Church.—The revival services began here August 22 and closed August 27.

Rev. R. A. Hunter came to us on Monday, August 23rd, and did all the preaching except two sermons by Rev. N. M. Phillips of the M. E. Church, South. Rev. T. F. McCulloch preached for us Sunday afternoon, 22nd. In addition to above the following ministers attended at different times and assisted in the prayer services: J. D. Williams, M. I. Crutchfield, T. A. and D. R. Williams. These brethren all rendered valuable services.

Bro. Hunter's sermons were of a high order and made a profound impression on the church and community. Hunter is a good preacher and a splendid person to be with.

The pastor and people enjoyed having him with us.

As results of the meeting the church was revived; about 20 were converted and 12 new members were added to the church.

To God be all the glory and praise.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Weaverville Circuit, Clarks Chapel.—We have been very neglectful about sending in reports lately, but we are endeavoring to do all we can for our Lord.

The second week in August we had a series of revival services given at night by our pastor. Rev. J. D. Cranford. Though there were only a few conversions, the whole church seemed to gain new determination from the inspiring sermons. The last night of the services Preacher Cranford opened the doors of the church and four new members were received. Two others who wished to be immersed were received as candidates and are to be taken in the church at the next service.

We were very glad to have our pastor back last evening to fill his regular appointment. He has been away two weeks holding revival service.

Our Sunday school is progressing splendidly. We had the largest number of attendants yesterday morning that we have had this year but we are endeavoring still to raise the attendance to a larger number before the year is out.

The "faithful few" are still holding weekly prayer meeting. We feel that without this prayer meeting our church goes slack. It seems that there is always something lacking to finish the week when we fail to have prayer services.

The Ladies' Aid have been doing great work this summer. One special feature, which will not be forgotten soon, is the donation of a new carpet for the pulpit.

We ask the cooperation and prayers of all church members that the Weaverville Circuit be successful in its undertakings through the remaining part of this year.

MRS. WALTER CHEEK.

High Point.—A wedding of interest to a host of friends occurred last Friday morning, August 27th, when Miss Linnie E. Bean became the bride of Mr. J. L. Tucker. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. B. Davis, pastor of the Main St. M. E. Church, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Bean, on Tate St. Shortly after the ceremony, the happy couple left for a honeymoon trip to Washington, D. C., in their car.

The bride is an attractive and most estimable young lady, has been a faithful member of our church and Sunday school for a number of years, and is popular among her circle of friends. Mr. Tucker is a native of Randolph Co., but has resided here for several years. He is the owner of the Tucker Dry Cleaning Co.

The newly-wedded pair will make their home here. The congratulations and best wishes of a large number of friends are extended to them.

On Monday, August 16th, Dr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown left on a vacation trip of two weeks for the home of their daughter, Mrs. G. H. Armacost near Westminster, Md. There have been no Sunday services in the church since that time except the Sabbath school.

The Mission Study Class held its monthly meeting on Monday, August 23, at the church. The fifth chapter of the Study book, "Adventures in Brotherhood," was given by Mrs. A. M. Rankin.

Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Coe and two daughters spent last week at Wrightsville Beach.

Miss Ruth Moffit has returned from Black Mountain, where she has been spending several weeks for her health.

The many friends of Holt McPherson, who underwent an operation for appendicitis at Guilford General Hospital ten days ago, will be pleased to learn that he is well enough to be removed to his home on Best St.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hinkle and their three children left August 20th by automobile for a vacation trip through Virginia and West Virginia and a visit to relatives. While away they visited Natural Bridge, White Sulphur Springs, and other places of interest. This is an annual outing for the family.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rankin, Jr. have moved into their beautiful new home in Emerywood.

Another beautiful and interesting wedding occurred in Community Church, Thomasville on Tuesday evening, August 24th, when Mr. J. H. Allred of High Point and Miss Pearl Perry of Thomasville were united in marriage. Dr. R. M. Andrews, assisted by Rev. J. E. Pritchard, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Mr. Allred is Professor of Romance Languages in H. P. College, is a graduate of the University of North Carolina, and has studied at Columbia University, N. Y. His bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Perry of Thomasville, and is most attractive and talented, having an unusually sweet voice.

After their wedding trip, the happy young couple will be at home to their friends at their attractive new residence on Sheraton Hills. Many congratulations and every good wish for their happiness in the new life together are showered upon this popular young pair by a host of friends in High Point, Randleman, and Thomasville, the students and Faculty of H. P. College, and the entire congregation of First church, which is happy to learn that Mrs. Allred will be a member of our choir.

St. Paul.—Our special meeting begins Sunday, September 5th. Bro. S. W. Taylor will come to us on Monday night, the 6th, and will do the preaching. Services during the week at 7:30 P. M. We are planning and praying for a great revival.

Hope the readers of the Herald will join us in prayer for this meeting. J. H. MOTON.

Spring Church Circuit.—If silence is a sign of spiritual decay, then we are in a bad way on this field, for we have not been heard from much this year. But we are not as inactive as our silence would indicate.

Each church on the circuit observed Children's Day with an excellent program. The offerings totaled about forty-five dollars.

The Parsonage.—Some important improvements have been made here. The overhead ceiling of the downstairs rooms has been painted, and the walls calsomined. Mrs. C. E. Dimick and Mrs. H. E. Vassar did the work, and it was done well, and they deserve much credit for it.

Special Meetings.—Our first meeting was at Pleasant Hill. It was held in June with Bro. Millaway as pulpit help. We did not see the results we had hoped and prayed for; but some good was done. Bro. Millaway did his part faithfully and earnestly.

Our next meeting was at Lebanon, beginning the second Sunday in August, with Bro. Ashburn doing the preaching. He preached with much zeal and earnestness, and it resulted in much good to the church and community. Nine joined the church.

The fourth Sunday in August we began at Spring Church, continuing until the following Friday night. Bro. Millaway was the help, and I never heard him do better preaching. The visible results were ten conversions and reclamations, and a good revival in the church, and three accessions.

Finance.—Our finances are right much behind, but we are hoping to have a good report at conference. This work has had one thousand dollars more local expense this year than it had last year. I am not trying to make excuses for the people, but I do feel that the facts should be known.

In conclusion, I want to say that the people have been very kind to the pastor and his family, and I deeply appreciate it.

A. D. SHELTON.

Grace Church.—The new organ is being installed and a recital will be one of the features of the special services to be held in the church beginning September 19. Dr. J. C. Broomfield, president of the Pittsburgh conference, is to lead in the inspirational and evangelistic campaign which will continue sometime.

Concord.—A Home Coming and Memorial Service will be held at our church on next Sunday, September 5th. Services will be held in the morning, afternoon and night to which all are invited.

All former pastors have been invited, and old members, some of them charter members, who have long since moved away will attend. We are expecting great services and all friends of our church will find a hearty welcome.

A reception will be held on Saturday night for our visitors and we earnestly hope that all former pastors will arrive in time for this service. REPORTER.

Spencer.—Lest you think we are dead; we write. And, too, we want to ask our people to pray for our special meeting.

Rev. W. F. Ashburn, will be with us Sunday and preach at 11 a. m. Services for the week will be announced Sunday. Our membership is so small, and there has been some sickness among our members. Some away. But we do hope all will attend our meeting.

We have bought a lot on Carolina and corner eighth street; and have it half paid for. But will have to pay for the street to be paved this Fall. This will cost us over $1000.00.

We rented St. Joseph Chapel on Rowan Avenue between fourth and fifth street.

Our pastor, Rev. D. A. Braswell, has not missed an appointment. We feel if all had been as faithful we would not get discouraged.

If anyone wants to help Spencer Church we will appreciate it and will acknowledge through our church paper all money we receive.

We thank Misses Annie and Mary Jobe for $10.00 received on our church lot. And please don't forget to pray that our church may be revived through our meeting.

MRS. A. L. MOORE.

Box 66, Spencer, N. C.

State Street Church.—Mr. Bethea was able to preach twice Sunday for the first time since his recent illness. Sunday morning he gave us a fine sermon on the importance of abiding in the Lord always and the danger of becoming severed through indifference or omission of duty. Sunday night he gave an interesting lecture on observations and experiences in Turkey.

The attendance at Sunday school last Sunday was almost twice what it has been for a few weeks. There have been so many of our folk away on vacation and also some sickness, but almost all have returned from their vacations and nearly all those who were sick have recovered and are back in their places.

We were all so glad to have Mr. F. I. Cox and his family back again Sunday after an absence of several weeks.

Miss Clara Taylor has returned from Boone, N. C., where she attended Summer School during the past twelve weeks.

Wednesday afternoon there will be a picnic for the Sunday school. The children are looking forward to this as a great event.

Mrs. Curtis Koonts has been elected delegate to the Annual Conference.

The Missionary Society will meet at the parsonage Thursday at 3:30 o'clock.

REPORTER.

Vance Circuit.—So many things of interest have taken place since I was assigned to this charge that I hardly know where to begin. It seems that our reporters have gone to sleep or taken a vacation and are not informing the people of the happenings on this work. As many of you know the writer has been greatly handicapped trying to take care of this work and at the same time pursue his seminary course. And while the work has been very strenuous at times the pastor has done his best to tide the work over and feel that some good has been accomplished. It is said that we come into the world with nothing and just as true we enter the grave with nothing; that is literally true so far as those things which are tangible are concerned. But there is something else we acquire as we travel along the road of life which we do take with us into eternity. And that is the record perhaps not so much of what we have accomplished but what we have earnestly striven to accomplish.

Harris Chapel.—It is said that every dog has its day and I believe there is a better day for Harris Chapel. For some cause or other this church has not gone forward as it should. This church has a membership of one hundred fifty and is located near the Dabney High School. There is no reason why this church shouldn't be one of the leading churches on this work with its folding chairs, electric lights and splendid piano which was installed soon after the writer was assigned to this charge. At present the church is in need of repairs. This should have been taken care of several weeks ago but for some cause or other we were unable to get the people together. One of the drawbacks to this church seems to be the lack of cooperation. However, we have some splendid workers in this church and a goodly number of young folks who are willing to be led and are doing their best to put the church on the honor roll. At present the church is greatly behind with their finances but we trust the stewards will get busy and clear the docket before the final report is made out for this year.

There will be all-day services at this church the second Sunday in October. There will be special music and dinner on the ground. The members are especially invited to be present.

Spring Valley.—This church as many of you know has been on the honor roll for several years and with their splendid leader, Bro. Charlie Basket, they are still going forward in leaps and bounds. If you were to ask me the secret of their success I would say cooperation. A more loyal congregation I never served. Much interest is being manifested in the Sunday school, and at present we are in need of more room. We are planning to enlarge the church and add two Sunday school rooms in the near future. Our special meeting has been scheduled for the third week in September with Rev. R. L. Troxler of Lexington as pulpit help. There will be two services a day, afternoon and night. The public is cordially invited to attend these services.

Gillburg.—Here, too, we have some of the finest people to be found anywhere in the state. We also have here a goodly number of young folks wide awake and eager to do work for the Master. Here, we are greatly in need of leadership, especially in the Sunday school. The writer has been trying to superintend the school for the past two months and of course this makes it rather hard on the pastor, driving 10 miles to conduct a Sunday school and then hurrying away for the regular preaching service at eleven. I trust that some one will rally to the call of the church and take upon himself the responsibility of a Sunday school superintendent. Remembering that "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye did it unto me". The fields are already white but the laborers are few. Here too, we are badly in need of an instrument. The organ which has been in service for many years has about run its course. However, some effort is being put forth to purchase a piano which I trust will be taken care of in the near future. Our special meeting will be held here the fourth Sunday in September with Rev. E. G. Cowan of Greensboro as pulpit help. The church is greatly behind with both the Budget and the pastor's salary. Let's get busy, only eight weeks to conference.

New Hope.—This is perhaps one of the oldest churches on the work, and some of the finest people to be found anywhere are found in and around New Hope. When one first arrives in this community he imagines everything goes by the name of Paschall and if he is a stranger he will not go far wrong if he will just say Brother or Sister Paschall. We have not succeeded in putting on the every member canvass but believe it will go into effect in the near future. Our special meeting convened here the first Sunday in July with Bro. Hethcox as pulpit help. Bro. Hethcox was at his best and did splendid preaching which was enjoyed by all who attended the services. He made many friends both among our own people and also those who attended from other churches. The services were well attended and while the visible results were not as we would like for them to have been yet many souls were born into the Kingdom and the church greatly revived.

Last but not least,Flat Rock.—"Old things made new." This church has been running in high gear all the year. Am I really preaching to the same congregation? Certainly a vast change had taken place. You can hardly imagine such a change and yet I know it is true. Just how this came about I am unable to say. Perhaps it was the beginning of the every-member canvass. When we first began to talk this a year ago some said it won't work, others said it can't be done, while others said we will try and it was with this crowd we succeeded in putting it across. A meeting of the stewards was called last November, I think it was about the middle of the month all responded with the exception of Bro. Claud Wortham who was hindered by sickness. They came in full force accompanied by their wives. The names were divided among the stewards and Bro. Sam Revis having been elected secretary and treasurer, they were now ready for work. A month later, December 20th, when the writer arrived for the regular morning service he was met by Bro. Sam Revis whose broad smile revealed the fact that something unusual had taken place, this was further demonstrated when he presented the pastor with $102.00 on salary. The writer was dumfounded for a moment but soon recovered. You will understand why when I tell you this church under the old way of doing things the year before had only paid $75.00 when the last quarterly meeting was held two weeks before conference. They say it is the only system and the results of their labor has proven this over and over again. But this is not all of the story; the ladies have been playing their part equally as well. The pulpit chairs have been recently overhauled at a cost of $15.00, new carpets have been installed and I understand they are planning to purchase a new piano in the near future. The writer was painfully surprised yesterday to learn that Mr. and Mrs. Brodie Jones' little daughter had been taken to the hospital with appendicitis. She was taken sick last Friday and was hurried to the hospital where a speedy operation was performed. The writer paid her a visit yesterday afternoon and saw what the mother said to have been the first smile of the day. My prayer is that she may soon gain her strength and be permitted to join with her class in school and church. M. P. CHAMBLISS, Pastor.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Our Sunday school is still progressing. We have had several new members to join our Sunday school recently. We welcome them, and hope others will join.

Our pastor fills every appointment and he always brings us a good message. We all like Mr. Spencer fine and we hope the Annual Conference will send him back to us for another year.

Our revival began the fourth Sunday and closed the fifth Sunday. We had a good revival and the attendance and interest was splendid. Our pastor did the preaching and Miss Sue Hovac helped in the singing. We enjoyed having her with us and hearing her sing. Mr. Spencer did good preaching during the revival, as he always does.

There were six new members added to our church, most of them being young men. We welcome them in our church and hope they will be a great benefit to us.

We thank the Baptist people for their cooperation with us, they helped so much in the singing. HERALD READER.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

IN LOVING MEMORY.

Mr. Noah F. Morgan departed this life August 11, 1926, age 75 years, 11 months and 15 days.

This good man was born and reared in Randolph County. He was a son of Haley and Martha Morgan, and was one of a large family, noted for loyalty to their church. He was thrice married. His first marriage was to Miss Mary Jane Crotts, and nine children blessed their union. Three had preceded him to the great beyond.

His second marriage was to Miss Martha Ellen Wood, who preceded him to the glory world a few years past. His third marriage was to Mrs. Ting Morris, who survives him, and during his illness she and other loved ones did everything possible for his comfort and recovery.

He was a good husband, a loving father, a kind neighbor, and a loyal citizen.

His circle of acquaintance was a wide one and his circle of friendship just as wide. He so lived as to be beloved of all with whom he came in contact, and he will be missed in his home and community where he lived so long.

He was a faithful member of the Methodist Protestant Church since childhood, and was always active in church work. He served as Superintendent for quite a number of years, and was a great Sunday school worker.

Thirty-two years ago he moved to Davidson County, and there united with Lineberry M. P. Church, where he remained a consistent member till death. He loved his church and was always interested in its welfare and progress, and it was his delight to talk about God's goodness in his dealings with him. It was an inspiration to listen to his story of battles, conflicts, victories, and joys of the Saints as they journeyed along the way of life. He suffered for a long time, yet he never murmured or complained of his lot in life. He was perfectly resigned to the will of his Master, and when he called for him he was ready to go, leaving to those who loved him here a rich legacy of precious memories.

Funeral services were conducted at Piney Grove, on the 12th in the presence of a large congregation. The floral offering was beautiful.

The interment was in the church cemetery on the hill just above his old home, beside his first companion. May God comfort the sorrowing ones. MRS. G. T. ROYALL.

In Loving Memory of My Precious Mother.

Just at 12 o'clock on the night of July 22, 1926, the death angel came and took my dear mother to Heaven to be with Jesus, and father and brothers who had gone on before. She had been in declining health for more than a year, having suffered a stroke of paralysis June 25, 1925. And she never saw another well day, but was not confined to her bed but a few days before the end came. She was so patient all through her sickness. I never heard her murmur or complain. All was done that loving hands and physicians could do to keep mother with us. But God who never makes a mistake knew best, and we bow in submission to His will. We do feel so thankful we got to keep her as long as we did. She was nearly 76 years old.

Mother was a true Christian woman: having been a devoted member of Piney Grove Methodist Protestant Church for over half a century. At which place her body now lies sleeping to await the Resurrection morn.

Her home was always open to her pastors and her loving hands have prepared many meals for them.

Mother never made great a-do about anything but was always just the same. When I went to her with my troubles and when I went to her with my joy she was always just the same, never worrying about a thing and she was lively as long as she was conscious.

Outside of a large family of children, grand-children and great-grand-children she left a large circle of friends and other relatives who loved her and whom she loved. I never knew of any one speaking an unkind word about her.

She enjoyed visiting the sick and lending a helping hand to those who needed her as long as her health would permit.

Mother and I were chums, having lived by ourselves for several years it seems hard for me to give her up. And now. O how I miss her when I have something to tell her that I want her to know.

I am so glad I never left her, but stayed with her to the end, and we were so happy together.

But—

Dearest mother you have left me
In this world we will see you no more,
But I hope some day to meet you
On the bright Celestial Shore.
Our home is now so lonely.
The voice we loved is still.
The place that now is vacant in our home
Can never more be filled.

We are so thankful for dear friends, for every sympathizing letter, for every comforting word and for every prayer, in this our hour of sore bereavement. We pray God's blessings upon everyone and may we all be ready when the end comes as mother was.

Morgan.

Noah F. Morgan was born September 28, 1850, and departed this life August 11, 1926. Bro. Morgan was converted at the age of about twelve years, and joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Piney Grove, Randolph County. After moving to Davidson county some thirty-three years ago he joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Lineberry, Davidson Ct., where he remained an active member up to his last sickness. He said before he died that he was not alarmed at the thought of death, but that he was ready to go when the summons came. During all these years Bro. Morgan has lived a devoted Christian life. He has been a great Sunday school and church worker. He has been a great friend to preachers who have served his church, both by his work and cooperation and by his means. I think that it can truthfully be said that Lineberry Church and community feel that a good man has gone from among us.

Bro. Morgan leaves behind three sons and three daughters; namely, J. L. Morgan and T. C. Morgan of Seattle, Wash., S. P. Morgan of Lincoln, Neb., Mrs. Julia Morris and Mrs. Mattie Sechrest of High Point, N. C., and Mrs. Earl Loftin of Thomasville, N. C.; one brother, J. A. Morgan, one sister, Mrs. Eliza Tysinger of Jackson Creek, and a widow, Mrs. Tina Morgan of Handy, N. C.: nineteen grandchildren, twelve great-grand-children and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn his departure. His body was carried back to Piney Grove Church for burial. The service was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. G. W. Clay of Farmer and Rev. C. H. Hill of Richland. These brethren were personal friends of Bro. Morgan and spoke very effectively of the good Christian character and of the life of this brave soldier of the Cross spent in the service of God. The Methodist Protestant Church has lost a great man but his works will follow him. The bereaved have our sympathy.

C. E. RIDGE.

Sykes

Joseph G. Sykes was born April 2, 1858, died August 26, 1926.

Bro. Sykes confessed Christ in early life, and remained in the faith until death.

He was married to Martha E. Reeves April 9, 1883. To this union 12 children were born. Three of these preceded him to the home above; two in infancy and one in young manhood.

A large congregation met at Chestnut Ridge Church, August 27 for the funeral services. The following ministers assisted the writer in this service: D. R. Williams, M. I. Crutchfield, T. A. Williams, and N. M. Phillips.

The remains were laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery. May the bereaved find comfort in Christ.

Eliminating the Supernatural

Why is it that some people object to God's manifesting Himself in any other way than through the course of what we call nature? Do they not know that God is the author of nature and that if He chose He could devise some other way of revealing His power? We do not know why men are so averse to believing in the supernatural, but it is a fact that many are. Some time ago we heard a man who is politically a socialist and morally a low-grade assert that Moses on Mount Sinai through his knowledge of electricity produced artificial lightning and thunder and thus imposed upon the people. In a recent Sunday school journal we find this statement:

"Pillar of cloud descended.—As the people journeyed somebody saw in the dust-cloud by day and the light of the camp fires by night, a symbol of the divine presence."

This is eliminating the supernatural "with a vengeance." What men regarded as a special visible manifestation of the Divine Presence nothing but a cloud of dust! We presume the writer of that statement would explain the prolonged and devious wanderings of the children of Israel on their way to the promised land by the supposition that frequent changes in the direction of the wind changed the direction of the movement of that guiding cloud of dust. Does he believe that as intelligent a people as the descendants of Jacob were would follow a cloud of dust for 40 years and not discover that it was only a cloud of dust?

Sometimes it seems that the effort to eliminate the supernatural is really an effort to eliminate God—to throw Him out of the universe He has created and which He upholds by His mighty power.

We are not overlooking the other extreme to which men go—that of seeing God where He is not. There are superstitious people, many of them. But that does not justify the going to the opposite extreme and denying the presence and agency of God where He is marvelously at work.

Internationalists

The time was not so very long ago that men of different nations with a few exceptions, had little to do with each other outside the bounds of commerce. To be sure there were a few Christian missionaries trying to change the religious views of foreign nations. But there was little concerted effort outside of this to modify the habits of thought of alien peoples. But the development of means of communication has brought us to the era of internationalism. Men now look upon foreign peoples not as something to be let alone but as something to be appealed to and influenced in their modes of thinking and living. We have come to the age of international propaganda. Christ's plan of propagandism has been copied by men who have a very different sort of message or doctrine to spread. Emissaries are sent forth into the world with teaching antagonistic to that of Jesus Christ. The spirit of anti-Christ is at work in the world. Strange doctrines are being sent forth from Russia and other places possibly which doctrines are meant to be revolutionary, meant to result in the overthrow of governments and the overturning of the present social order. Truth is mingled with error in the presentation of this teaching and men are being deceived.

This evil movement makes more necessary the work of the true propagandists, those who teach the truth of Jesus Christ, the truth that shall make men free. Propagandists of the evil sort are laying stress on plenty, on ease and idleness. They are not pleading for liberty, but for license. Christian ideals by them are replaced by very sordid views. The time calls for the most earnest and vigorous presentation of the way of life advocated and exemplified by Jesus Christ. The fact that the peoples of Christian lands have become materially the most prosperous, imposes upon them enlarged responsibilities. Instead of saying, we have much goods laid up for many years, they should rather say, our multiplied means require us to do more and more for the nations in darkness. We should all be internationalists of the better sort according to our ability. The fear of entangling alliances should not prevent our doing our plain duty to the less favored peoples of the world. We should thank God for the privilege of being effective internationalists in the spread of God's truth.

There are those at work in the world who would gather the fruits of Christianity and then cut down the tree.

School Days Again

The vacation is ended, school doors are opening again, and the young people are flocking in. How fortunate the young people are to have this privilege. It was not always so. It has cost much thought and money to bring on present school facilities. Yet many young people do not appreciate the advantages they have. Some go to school reluctantly and many who go gladly go not to improve their minds but to enjoy the good time. Yet even these will derive some benefit from going. And what a vast difference the schools will make in the mass of our population. They lift our people out of illiteracy and ignorance. They prepare those who co-operate for useful service. Let the schools be filled and let those who go have a mind to work.

In this connection our minds turn naturally to our High Point College. It has been built to meet a need that no other school could fully meet. It is to us not just one college among many, but it is the one college built and maintained to meet our needs. Let us appreciate this fact fully. Let us fill it with our young people and give them the opportunity to come to their best selves and to prepare themselves to carry on the great work given us of God. High Point College has a mission because the Methodist Protestant Church has a mission.

BISHOP ASBURY AND PERSONAL EVANGELISM

By H. H. Smith

The average Methodist, reading a summary of Bishop Asbury's labors,—how that he preached 16,500 sermons, sat in 225 annual conferences, ordained more than 4,000 preachers, and traveled on horseback or in carriages 270,000 miles, will be surprised to learn that he was also diligent in personal evangelism, seeking every opportunity to converse face to face with the unsaved.

The evangelistic spirit was strong within him from the very first. Bishop DuBose says: "Asbury's conversion was his call to be an evangelist. His first answer was to assemble his youthful companions and exhort them to repentance. This was followed by the more public step of holding meetings in the homes of his father's neighbors. These meetings appear to have been begun entirely on his own initiative."

Dr. George P. Mains speaks of Asbury's personal efforts to reach the lost as follows: "If anywhere in the range of his journeys he learned of an unfortunate criminal condemned to death, it was his custom to visit the prison of such a man that he might tell him of the love of One who forgot His own dying agony to forgive and save a penitent thief. He frequently visited the jails and the poorhouses to preach to their inmates. He was imbued with such a Christ-like sense of the intrinsic possibilities and the value of the human soul that he counted it a divine opportunity to convey the tidings of salvation to any man, however destitute or forlorn his condition."

False prophets have sometimes usurped the place of the true and proclaimed salvation to the multitudes from pulpit or platform, but no insincere person is ever found suffering the severest hardships in seeking out individuals and pleading with them face to face to become reconciled to God. If any one would know what "personal evangelism" really is, let him carefully study Asbury's journal. As the practice of the "one to win one" method of reaching the unsaved is the need of the hour, let us follow this great servant of God in his efforts to reach the individual, as recorded in his journal, and above all pray that we may catch his spirit and follow his example. The following extracts are taken from The Heart of Asbury's Journal:

"Went to the jail, and visited a condemned criminal, and preached to him and others with some tender feeling of mind, on those words: 'Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth.' "

"This evening I had a very solemn family meeting, and spoke separately and pointedly to everyone, both black and white."

"Set off for Frederica. A poor, unhappy man abused me much on the road; he cursed, swore, and threw stones at me. but I found it my duty to talk to him and show him his danger."

"Rode to Fredericksburg; my horse failed through fatigue, bad feed, and not enough of it. I stopped and fed by the way; mistaking my road, I met a serious man, and spoke to him about his soul. I conversed with the servants also, and had Providence."

"I visited three young men who are to die shortly; they wept while I talked and prayed with them."

"We have made it a point to pray in families where we lodge, whether public or private, and generally where we stop for refreshment."

"On my way to Frederickburg I fell in with some gentlemen, and conversed with them on the subject of religion. They sought refuge in God's foreknowledge, and thence drew their proofs that their Creator would not eternally damn them."

"This country abounds with bays, swamps, and drains; if there were no sinners I would not go along these roads."

"I had an open and free conversation with Mr. Cough about his soul. I convresed with the servants also, and had freedom in prayer, though I felt weakness of body."

"I wished to speak to a poor African whom I saw in the field as I went out, and as I came along on my return he was at a stone wall within eight or nine feet of me. Poor creature! he seemed struck at my counsel, and gave me thanks."

"I cannot now, as heretofore, spend ten hours out of sixteen in reading the Bible in English or Hebrew, or other books, or write letters from morning until night. My bow is weak, if not broken; but I have more time to speak to God and souls."

"I spent part of the week in visiting from house to house. I feel happy in speaking to all I find, whether parents, children, or servants; I see no other way; the common means will not do. Baxter, Wesley, and our Form of Discipline say: 'Go into every house;' I would go further, and say, Go into every kitchen and shop; address all, aged and young, on the salvation of their souls. We surely cannot do less."

The salvation of souls was his master-passion, and the report of great revivals made him cry out, "Glory, glory, glory." Once, when greatly depressed in spirit because he had not seen any immediate fruit of his labors in the conversion of souls, he entered a log church, unknown to any one, and took his seat near the back part of the congregation. A love-feast was in progress, and a woman rose and testified to her conversion some two years before when she had chanced to hear Bishop Asbury preach. This greatly moved the Bishop, and he rose and commenced by remarking that he was a stranger and pilgrim, halting on his way for rest and refreshment in the house of God and that he had found both; "and," said he, with uplifted hands, while tears of joy coursed each other freely down his face, "if I can only be instrumental in the conversion of one soul in traveling round the continent, I'll travel round it till I die."

PERSEVERANCE

A Determination to Go a Little Farther

All of the great things that have been accomplished, have been accomplished by those who were willing to sacrifice enough to see the thing well done. All of the great battles that have been won, have been won by an army who would not know defeat but who were determined to fight until victory was theirs.

None of our great Christian workers, and especially leaders in the church and Sunday school have been made in a day, but they are those who have stood firm in the faith and have proven to the church and Sunday school that they could be trusted with its work and leadership.

It's a mighty easy thing to be a beginner but its easier still to be a quitter. When we have a crowd standing with us it does not tak much grit to do a thing. The testing time comes when our comrades begin to drop out and leave us alone. It's a common thing to see the altar crowded with people, during a revival, reconsecrating their lives to Christ, but when the revival is over they begin to drop out, and in a year's time we see the same crowd at the altar for the same purpose.

Today, perhaps as never before does the church and Sunday school need more men and women who have the courage and determination to go forward regardless of how hard the fight or which way the battle goes. More progress is being made toward Christian Education today than ever before, but that is no sign that our goal is almost reached and that we do not need to still go forward. Life is a continuous stream and growth and one of its greatest mistakes and dangers is a feeling sometimes that we have done enough.

Almost everywhere we go we hear that old cry coming from the church and Sunday school of the need of more trained leaders. If the church and Sunday school had more men who were perseverers—who were willing to stand by it regardless of failures the lack of leadership would not be nearly so great. If it is a nice day and there is a big crowd out at Sunday school we are out with them. But if it is a bad day and we think there will be only a few there, we decide not to go. When are we needed most? When it is a nice day and everybody comes, or when it is a bad day and everyone counts? The good way to persevere in the church and Sunday school is to decide that we will be one of the perseverers and especially will we persevere in bad weather or hard times for that is the time that you and I are needed most.

Nowhere can we find a reward offered for doing big things. The reward is for the faithful—those who have the patience and determination to go forward and hold out to the end, or until victory is won.

If Columbus had not had the courage and determination to go forward, even on a wild and stormy and unknown sea, America would not have been reached by him. But in spite of the pleadings of his fellowseamen to turn back and their plottings against him, he sailed on, and we are now enjoying freedom in the great land that he discovered.

When the children of Israel came to the Red Sea and saw the Egyptian army close behind them, they wanted to surrender and go back into bondage, rather than be destroyed, but Moses had the courage and faith to go forward and the waters of that great Sea divided permitting them to march through on dry ground. It takes a lot of faith and patience at times in sticking to a thing and going forward with it, but almost every time the greatest temptation comes just before some great goal is reached.

If we would receive the reward that is for us we must not let the height that others have reached determine our goal, but is necessary for us to go still a little farther. Had you ever stopped to think that when Christ went into the Garden of Gethsemane to pray. He went a little farther than even His disciples who had been His most intimate friends here on earth. He took them almost all of the way, even in sight of the place where He was going, but He told them to tarry there while He went yonder to pray—"And He went a little way forward—" It must have been only a few steps but angels ministered unto Him, and He received strength to bear the cross and suffer the crucifixion which He knew was awaiting Him. If it had not been necessary for Him to go that little way farther I don't think He would have left His disciples. Their hearts were heavy with grief because He was so soon to leave them, and they were accustomed to prayer, and I wonder why it was that Christ did not kneel down together with them and pray. I think this at least teaches us the great importance of going just a little bit farther.

There is a story of an old Indian Chief who had his hut at the foot of a very tall mountain. It was considered a great honor to climb this mountain because it was very rough and steep and difficult to climb. Early one morning four little boys started out to climb the mountain. The old chief told them, when they left, that if for any reason they turned and came back before they reached the top to bring a sprig of something that grew just where they started back from so that he could tell how far up the mountain they had gone. It was not very long before one of the boys came back. The Indian looked at the leaf in his hand and said: "My child, that bush grows just a short way up the mountain, you hardly began the climb." Later on another boy came back with a spring showing that he had gone about half way. Soon another boy returned with a twig which the old Chief said grew almost at the mountain top. "My boy," said the Chief, "you almost reached the top, why didn't you go just a little farther?" the boy replied sadly, "The way became so rough and I could see no sign of the top." About night the last boy came back. He had nothing in his hands, but there was an expression on his face which showed that he had gone all of the way. That night the old Chief let the four boys sleep in his hut. The first three were so tired that they went to bed early. The fourth was so full of joy from the thrill of seeing the mountain top that he was neither tired nor sleepy and sat up late talking to the Indian of the great things that he wished to do some day.

In life we find these four classes of people. Those who merely begin the climb; those who go about half way; those who go almost to the top; and, finally, those few who reach the top. To which class do you and I belong?

ON THE WAY

The Rally Day programs are printed and ready for distribution. The samples should be in the hands of pastors, superintendents, Christian Endeavor presidents and interested friends before the church paper is received. Please make out your order and send it in at once. They will be filled promptly. Every possible effort is being made to give you satisfactory service as well as to furnish you with the material suitable for a good Rally Day service.

Your secretary is suggesting that an effort be made to increase the offering received last year by at least 10 per cent. That will make up for the 10 per cent decline in the offerings last year, a decline caused by bad weather and not by a lack of interest or spirit of co-operation on the part of our pastors and church leaders. The call for programs was the largest ever for Rally Day, which would indicate a growing interest and appreciation of the usefulness of the day.

Send your orders to us at once. If you have not received a sample copy a post card will secure one. Or, to avoid delay, send in your order for the number of copies you need and they will soon be on the way.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Sunday, September 5th, was spent with Rev. P. S. Kinnaman and his people on South Winston, and with Rev. J. D. Williams, D. D., and his people in Reidsville.

Brother Kinnaman and his workers are moving along splendidly with the work at Union Ridge Church, and they have organized another church and are running a Sunday School and preaching services in a small chapel. I preached at Union Ridge Church at 11 a. m., and at the chapel at 2 p. m. to very atentive audiences. These people are hoping to pay out in full on pastor's salary and on the budgets before Conference.

Reidsville

I then drove to Reidsville in time for the evening service. This church is in good condition in every way under the pastorate and leadership of Dr. Williams. They are planning for a revival to begin at an early date with Rev. G. F. Millaway to do the preaching. This church always pays pastor's salary and budgets in full. It has made a 100 per cent financial record from the time the church was organized until now. All churches and charges should do likewise.

Pastor's Salary and Budgets

Last year quite a few pastors failed to receive their salaries in full, and these failures were on charges where the promised salary was small. Brethren, these things ought not so to be. I am hoping that every pastor will be able to report salary paid in full this year. Two months from now we will be in the midst of the Annual Conference sessions. So let stewards bestir themselves to collect salaries in full. No charge can afford to permit its pastor to go up to Conference without his salary.

Then, too, no honest pastor likes to go to Conference and report salary paid in full without, at least, making report of a substantial amount paid on the budgets. What we do for others in North Carolina outside our own local church is done through the A. C. B. And what we do for others outside North Carolina is done through the G. C. B.

Our work lags in many places because the budgets are not being paid.

Once Again

Just once more let me call our attention to the small allotment to each church for the College running expenses. This was meant to be applied on the expenses for the College year ending last June. The amount was made small with a hope that each charge would collect it early in the year. Please collect this soon and send it in.

The A. C. B. was also materially decreased on many of the charges for this year with the hope that every cent of the A. C. B. would be collected on every charge, remembering also that the G. C. B. is just as important.

Another Pleasant Announcement

It gives me pleasure to announce, and I am sure all the readers of the HERALD will be delighted to read, that Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., will leave Chicago in a very few days and will come direct to Greensboro, reaching here about the 15th of September, to become the associate pastor of Grace Church.

Brother Harrison has been a student in the Chicago University and pastor of Wakefield Methodist Protestant Church for about a year. He is now returning to his own Conference, and we give him a hearty welcome.

SEEING THE WORLD IN 2026

REV. CARL KNUDSEN

In one way it is easy to phophesy the world of 2026. We are sure that there will be unimaginable scientific advance. We look back with Snowden in his book, "Is the World Growing Better?" and see that: 10 years ago there was no airship; 15 years ago, no wireless telegraphy; 25 years ago, no automobile; 40 years ago, no telephone or electric light; 60 years ago, no phonograph; 75 years ago, no telegraph; 100 years ago, no railway or steamship; 125 years ago, no steam engine; 200 years ago, no post office; 300 years ago, no newspaper; 500 years ago, no printing press; 1,000 years ago, no compass and ships could not go out of sight of land; 2,000 years ago, no writing paper except parchments of skin and tablets of clay or wax; 10,000 years ago, no tools, no clothing, no humanity, no intelligence, no religiou.

Basing our figures on this history we have good reason to suppose that by 2026 the antiquity still represented in backward methods in many places in the world will be radically changed; there will be no such thing as an incurable disease; illiteracy will be practically abolished; wireless photography and individual radio sets will enable us to see and hear our friends 4,000 miles away, abolishing all loneliness; every man will have specialized training to fit him for a highly technical civilization; there will be incredible speed in world travel, and perhaps a universal language as a result of the obliteration of boundary lines and the lifting of restrictions against migration.

But in another sense prophecy is not so pleasing a task. To be a true prophet one must picture things as they are, and not as he thinks people want them to be. Napoleon is credited with saying, "A popular leader must be a leader of hope regardless of facts." He sends his hearers home "cushioned with complacency," to use a phrase of Joseph Ford Newton in "The Truth and the Life." Such a prophet Jesus never could be. One day He stood in the temple and predicted that the day would come when "there shall not be left here one stone upon another." It was comparable to standing in the Mother Church in Boston and telling the Christian Scientists that ere long all this architectural beauty and the organization which it represents will be dashed to the ground. It was like standing in Westminster Abbey and telling Anglican Catholics that all the wonder and splendor of Christopher Wren's genius, with all the sacred associations of the structure, and all the faith which it symbolized would soon be blown into a thousand pieces. It was like standing in St. Peter's in Rome and telling Roman Catholics that this marvelous cathedral was doomed to oblivion with all the ages of faith which it represented to its admirers.

If our thinking is to be productive, we too, like Jesus, must blast our way to truth without fear or favor and without mercy. Regardless, then, of national pride or of ecclesiastical loyalty, let us imagine ourselves returning to the earth in a parachute in 2026.

The first thing that might surprise us would be the spiritual leadership of the Orient. We would ask questions: Why did America and the West surrender first place in the things of God? We would be told that the West built a modern Babylon, and hanged herself on her own rope, which was composed of three strands—one of crass materialism, one of astonishing selfishness, and one of consummate arrogance. We would remember that back in 1926 the people of India and China and Japan listened to our missionary messages and then saw our barbarous war lust, our savage thirst for profits, our conscienceless search for power. W would remember the Boxer Uprising, which was a protest against the British opium traffic in China and which was cruelly avenged with counter atrocities and burdensome indemnities. We would remember India's vain appeal for liberty from her British oppressor, and we would recall America's affront to the Japanese in 1924, and her autocracy toward the Philippines all through this century.

Those of us who took notes on Stanley Jones' "The Christ of the Indian Road" would remember that this distinguished missionary once asked Mahatma Gandhi what Christians could do to increase their effectiveness. Gandhi had replied: "First, you must live like Christ. If you will come to us in the spirit of your Master we cannot resist you. Second, I would suggest that you practise your religion without adulterating it or toning it down. Third, I would suggest that you put your emphasis on love, for love is the center and the soul of Christianity. Fourth, I would suggest that you study the non-Christian religions more sympathetically in order to find the good that is in them, so that you may have a more sympathetic approach to our people." A Hindu judge had declared, "It takes a spiritual genius to say a thing like that," and India had proved her capacity to produce spiritual geniuses by the score. The Orientals had the impression that a religiou once professed should be taken seriously; they had always shown a non-materialistic spirit and had proved themselves capable of spiritual leadership in every way.

This all sounds weird and impossible, especially to "100 per cent" Americans, but it is well supported by history. One nation after the other has surrendered the primacy of leadership in the Christian world because of unworthiness. In Rome Christianity degenerated into ecclesiasticism; in Greece it became a philosophy; in Germany it went into alliance with the state; in England it petrified into liturgy; in America it is being reduced to Rotarianism. In many places in America today the descendants of Puritans act as if there were no God, no church, no Christ. The practical atheism and insane worldliness of America are foregleams of our defeat as spiritual guides of the world, unless something is hastily done to turn the tide.

But what about the victory of righteousness over wrong in 2026? We hope that our advances here would be the most noticeable of all. We would expect to find a complete absence of the liquor traffic. People would marvel at the stupidity of the men the nineteenth and twentieth cenuries in polluting their bodies and debasing their souls with alcoholic poisons. We would expect to find a demilitarized world and to hear people express their surprise that in 1914 human beings had no more sense and no more civilization than to try to settle difficulties by cold-blooded, beastly massacre. We would expect to find every vocation Christianized and every workshop made a temple of God. Industrial wars would be no more, for employer and employee would recognize their common fraternity and work on a basis of brotherhood. We would look for a fulfilment of John's vision: "I saw the Holy City . . . and I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." In other words, the temples of God will no longer hold His Spirit. His will must be supreme and His spirit dominant outside the four walls of His church.

Will all these things be realities or will they still be, as they are now, the unrealized visions of Christian idealists? It depends on you and on me to an alarming extent. Such progress is not automatic. The religion of 2026 and the world of 2026 depend largely on the faith of 1926. Bishop H. Lester Smith tells us that Methodist faith is a "monkey religion," while the Presbyterians adhere to a "cat religion." He explains that when monkys are in danger, the little ones put their arms around their mothers' necks, and are carried in safety to the treetops, on condition that they hang on tightly. But when cats are endangered they take the kittens by the neck and carry them to places of refuge regardless of their ability to hang on to the mother. Methodists believe that God depends on man's co-operation for the execution of His will, while Presbyterians believe that God carres out His plans regardless of man's attitude.

Whether we are Arminians or Calvinists, we observe that Jesus depended almost wholly upon man's enlistment and voluntary co-operation. Andrew found Peter; Jesus found Philip; Philip found Nathanael. This was the process—individual contacts—which extended through the centuries, and which accounts for the immeasurable influence of Christianity today. Scientists tell us that the sands over which Christ walked have swept over Boston and Chicago and Dillon many times, so constant and yet so imperceptible are the movements of the dust particles, as they are taken around the earth on the wings of the winds. Likewise, the influence of the early disciples has swept over America and given us our faith, not on the wings of the winds, but through the channel of individuals who could trace the power that led to their conversion back to the upper room in Jerusalem.

The most interesting feature of a prophecy regarding 2026 A. D. is this discovery of the fact that the moral courage and spiritual satesmanship of today will determine the status of Christianity one hundred years from now. Our modesty suffers as we measure the possible influence of our lives in terms of compound interest. Just as a hundred dollars invested today will produce a fortune in a century, so a single Christian, leading twenty others to a clear insight as to the real implications of Christianity and winning them to discipleship, may be he means of fashioning the religious character of a whole state. If each of these twenty wins twenty others, and all these win twenty each, and so on indefinitely, our spiritual investments should stagger the most optimistic with their dividends.

THE MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The Executive Committee of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration met in the Baltimore Book Concern Building on Tuesday, August 24, 1926, with the President, Rev. Dr. J. C. Broomfield in the chair.

Japan.—The Committee expressed its appreciation of the splendid work done by Rev. Paul F. Warner in the study of the language while in the Language School in Tokyo.

The Hiratauka Kindergarten Association's request to begin the erection of the school as soon as they have collected Yen 1,000 was granted, a bequest to the W. F. M. S. being an addition to the fund.

Secretary Klein was instructed to cable to the Mission authorities to build the Nagoya College Church, restricting any changes or alterations to the sum of $500.

A number of the subscerptions made at the General Conference have not been paid, and even if all were paid in full there would be need of more money, occasioned by new Government building requirements, and the increase in materials and wages. Here is a splendid opportunity for any to make a splendid investment in the work of the Kingdom.

The completion of the publication of the Discipline in Japanese was approved, the Japan Mission Conference being expected to finance it.

The Committee could not see its way clear to add to the Budget for this year, as requested by the Mission.

The Work Reports of the Evangelistic and Educational Departments indicated a healthy condition and that general prosperity prevailed.

Appreciation was expressed of the visit to Japan of Rev. U. G. Murphy, one of our former missionaries, and of his labors among our people.

A note of commendation was made of the Morning Watch observed by the student group of the Nagoya College.

All the Financial Reports were audited and found correct.

China.—The great need of a chapel at Chai Kau Pu, a large town in our District, where services are held in a native house, was explained, and the offer of one-half its cost in money, or the wood required for its building (about one-half its cost) by the Chinese Magistrate of a neighboring town, was so appealing, and the need for prompt action so urgent, that Secretary Klein was instructed to publish it in the church papers in the hope that someone would make a gift.

Secretary Klein was instructed to express the deep appreciation of the Union Board to Marshall Chang Chih Chiang, at Kalgan, for his interest in our Mission work, and for his very generous gift of $2,000. (Mexicans).

Rev. Mr. Soderbom reports it was during the Marshall's daily period of private prayer and Bible study that he felt he was not doing enough for the Mission work of the city and decided to make the gift.

He did not know that the Mission's allotted budget had been reduced by the board, or that there was any special need, and on learning the conditions he exclaimed, "O God, only command thy servant, and I will obey."

Who can deny that his gift was an answer to prayers offered here and in China for relief?

Ought not this striking example to move many of our American members to lay on the altar a special gift to meet the great demands upon our Union Board?

The financial reports were found correct.

Secretary Klein was instructed to express to our missionaries and native workers our sincere appreciation of the way they are managing our work under the greatly disturbed war conditions.

India—The committee approved the Mission's plan of having the government's grants to our two schools used at the discretion of those in charge.

Appreciation was ordered expressed to Rev. J. F. Minnis for the new buildings, etc., which he has secured through the sale of products, and other means.

The committee favored the purchase of a Ford car for the women's department and steps will be taken to secure the necessary funds.

The committee directed that its appreciation be expressed to Rev. S. F. Cassen, father of our missionary, and the friends at Towson, Md., who contributed enough to purchase, in India, a Ford car for the use of the men's department of the Mission. It will add greatly to comfort in traveling, save much time, and permit a closer, more efficient oversight of the work around and beyond Dhulia.

The division of the Settlement, or Farm, where a number of our peojle are being trained to self-support, and assignment of some parts of the land to families, provision for implements and seed, and plans for development as carried out by Rev. Paul M. Cassen, were approved and appreciation was expressed.

The work at Ner particularly is encouraging; several were baptized and others desired to be; and a chapel is needed there.

The financial reports were audited and found correct.

The committee favored the publishing of a Missionary Page in the Sunday School Journal, and a committee was appointed to cooperate therewith.

The committee will hold its next meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., on Thursday, November 18th, 1926.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS

Off to college! The middle of September sees the re-opening of our colleges. Old students are returning and new ones appearing on the campus. From what can be learned at headquarters the prospects for increased enrollments are better than ever. It appears that there will be a satisfactory increase in the number of Methodist Protestant students in particular.

Because of the $9,500 decline in the Board of Education receipts last ear, all of our schools have been in financial distress this summer. It has been necessary to borrow funds to make necessary repairs and to provide for the usual summer espenses. Unless there is a decided increase in the receipts from the General Conference Budget this year our colleges and seminary will be in serious difficulties.

Five of the conferences in the Adrian area have taken favorable action relative to the campaign for $500,000. Onondaga was the first to act, then Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan. In each case the vote was unanimous. Pittsburgh Conference is in session as this number of the Recorder goes

The Adrian College-Methodist Recorder Scholarship campaign has created no little interest wherever the Recorder circulates. Five candidates for the scholarships have worked hard and been well supported by their respective districts. At the present moment they stand as follows:

Lucile May, Illinois Conference	.774
Waler Linaberger, Pittsburgh Conference	.524
Walter Mollan, Michigan Conference	.401
Theodore Griffith, Indiana Conference	.383
Stephen Brown, Ohio Conference	.383

They each expect to attend Adrian this fall.

The new catalogue of Westminster College, Tehaucana, Texas, was recently received from Acting-President James Willis. The work for the college year is clearly outlined and the list of faculty members indicates an unusually strong group. Rev. E. M. Mouser is the financial agent and he has been meeting with good success.

A tentative agreement has been made with the United Brethren people associated with us in the conduct of Kansas City University looking toward our withdrawal. It is now being submitted to their annual conferences of that area. If they act favorably the agreement will be in effect as of August 7, and the final details of its consummation will be left to the attorneys. When the matter is finally settled full particulars will be given to the church. The secretary has been greatly helped by the counsel of President Ward and Dr. Brooks, as well as a number of the brethren in Kansas City.

The sample copies of the Rally Day programs are in the hands of our people. We hope they will be found sufficiently useful that the orders received will be more numerous than ever. They totaled 485 last year, which was the largest ever received. We are hoping the weather conditions will be more favorable and that there will also be a substantial increase in the offerings. Our need was never greater. Send in your orders at oncefor as many copies as you need and they will soon be in your hands. All orders for Rally Day programs should be sent to the Board of Education, 613 West Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa.

We can not tell at the present time how many young men are entering college this year with the Christian ministry in view. But from nearly every section of the church word has been received that indicates many are planning that way. There were 87 in our schools last year and we are hoping that the prayers of God's people will bring forth fruit of a substantial increase.

CHANGING THE GAME.

Susie Potter Hesse

A frown darkened the face that should have been lovely, and clouded eyes meant to be deep and clear. Impatiently she dressed for dinner, careful, in spite of ill humor, to secure the right touch of color to her cheeks and the correct wave to her soft hair. The maid knocked at her door to ask some question about the evening meal, and was answered sharply. Nina Hammond was decidedly out of sorts.

The sound of her husband's step in the hall below came to her ear, and the frown grew deeper. Then she forced a smile and went down the stairs. He would greet her as he always did. There was never a variation, she thought scornfully. His arm would encircle her gently. With his free hand he would tip back her head and look smilingly into her eyes a moment before bending to kiss her. Then together they would enter the dining-room. But before the meal ended, something irritating would be sure to arise. Of course it would be about money matters. It always was. Money seemed to enter into everything they said and did, and she was tired to death of it.

Rather feverishly she began after the maid had withdrawn. "I suppose it's folly to mention it, but my embroidery club is to spend a week in the mountains at Hotel Summit. Of course I'd like to go."

"And the cost?" The question came slowly after an annoying silence.

"I could make fifty dollars do. The new dress I really should have can be omitted."

Another pause during which Nina wanted to scream. Finally the man went on. "We might give up the vacation we planned to take together. You would like this trip better?"

"No, I'd like both better," she answered sharply.

"So would I," patiently replied Mr. Hammond. Then with more spirit. "But I don't see how I can manage it. The car isn't paid for, as you know. Before it is, you'll be wanting another."

She looked at him startled. Was that a new note in his voice? He was not in the habit of speaking bitterly. Was he going to be disagreeable as well as "prudent?"

Her conscience smote her as she allowed this thought to grow. Her husband was never disagreeable. Moreover, she suspected that he gave to the limit of his ability. But it was all so humiliating. When she married him, she had expected him to be a prosperous business man and herself to enjoy to the full the good things of this world. Instead, it had been pinch here and economize there, with always the necessity of hiding the truth from the circle in which she moved. She had never questioned very closely into the details of her husband's business. She did not understand such matters. It was not a woman's sphere. She acted as if she thought a man's success was measured wholly by the amount of cash he could turn over to his wife.

Once or twice he had tried to explain to her that it took time for a new business to become established; that it could not all at once yield large profits. He had begged her to be patient. But they had been married now four years and the story had not changed. Yes, she was certainly weary of it. She would go to the mountains with the club, regardless. To that her mind was made up before the dinner concluded, and when she intimated as much, Mr. Hammond made no protest. He never did.

If Nina Hammond had followed her husband to his desk that evening and could have read all his thoughts as he worked over bills and ledgers, the best in her would have answered the challenge; but instead, she kissed him good-by and went out with friends—out to a picture show, where she almost shed tears over the problems of a fictitious hero husband, misunderstood and misused by a selfish wife.

Meanwhile, David Hammond faced his burden alone. If only Nina were more like Dan's wife, he mused—then brought himself up sharply. No, he did not mean that. He loved Nina just as she was—except—well, a business pal would be good right now. There were worries. The market was dull. Other firms were discharging men. He had allowed a few young chaps to go, but there were older men in his employ, men with families, who would suffer, he knew, from even a brief lay-off. He must keep them on, though at a sacrifice. Then there was Dan Grant. The doctor had said his one chance for life was in a complete rest and a long one. David had ordered his wages paid to him in full while he was out. Of course. What else could he do? Dan had a wife and three kiddies.

Here is where Nina could help—if she only knew and cared—he thought. No, Nina was not heartless. She would care if she knew—if he could but make her understand. This game of pleasure-hunting in which she was engaged was but a habit, after all—a vicious one, to be sure. The participants themselves would without exception admit it often became a wearying round. But they seemed to know no other way. How he wished Nina might see a better program for her life. But whether she did or not, the money end of it was becoming a very real problem. By curtailing she could do much to tide him over this anxious period. He would try to have a real talk with her.

But no good opportunity came before she was packed and away for the week in the mountains. He had passed her the check without a word, and she had taken it in silence.

No misgivings troubled her until the week was well advanced. The weather had become extremely warm. Even in the mountains it was stifling. She thought uneasily of David working in the heat of his office and factory, and coming home to solitary meals and an empty house. She began to wish she had remained at home. There was nothing to do, anyway, but to lie around under the pine trees and gasp.

The mail arrived. For a while everyone forgot the discomfort. There was a letter from David. Nina read it twice—the second time very slowly, with a puzzled, distressed face. It did not sound like David at all. He had decided definitely, it stated, that he could not afford to take a vacation. It would be necessary, as soon as she returned, for them to have a careful talk and come to a complete understanding. He had reached these conclusions after very deliberate thought and wished her to prepare her mind in some degree for the things he must say.

A stifling, uncertain fear seemed to take her breath. Could it be that business problems were serious? Was David perhaps tired out—ill? Did he need her? And she had run away! How little she knew about their affairs, anyway. Her thoughts were interrupted by an emphatic exclamation from Lena Wyatt, who had just finished reading her mail.

"Well, Nina Hammond, I'll say you have a good husband!" Then she added facetiously, "How did such as you manage to capture him?"

"I'll say so, too," Nina replied, ignoring the last part of her friend's remark. "Whence your tardy discovery?"

"This letter. Want to hear it, girls?"

They grouped about her and she read:

"'Dear Lena: I should not be sending my tale of woe to mar your holiday, if you had not expressly asked it. But forget all about it until you return. Then I know you'll come to see me.'"

"It's a shame the way I've neglected this dear girl," Mrs. Wyatt interrupted herself to say, "but there's been so much going on all the time and she out of everything, that I pretty nearly forgot her."

She went on with the letter.

"'Yes, you were correctly informed. My husband is sick. He has not been well for a long time, but because of our kiddies, he kept bravely at work when he was unfit. The end had to come, however. Now he must drop everything. At first I was terribly frightened and discouraged. Whatever should I do with three babies and no money? That was as far as I could get. Then all at once I took myself in hand and knew that it was my task to save my husband. I began by thanking the good Lord for my own excellent health. Then I took Him into partnership and things have been going well ever since. My own courage gave my husband confidence, and he's been obeying me like a lamb all the while. Then something wonderful happened. At the end of his first week at home, a check came from his employer—his usual earnings. They have been coming regularly. A week ago, when the doctor urged Dan to go into the country for a month, before he finished protesting that it was beyond his means, along came an extra check to cover the cost. The Lord is so wonderfully good to me, Lena! Of course I miss Dan dreadfully and have to scold myself hard to keep from worrying about him now that he is out of my sight—but I'm running a day-nursery and that handicaps the moping. You should see my babies! Ten of them here yesterday and twelve today! My one pair of hands have to move lively. But think of the doctor's bill I'll pay. So you see my tale of woe isn't so woful, after all.

"'Mr. Hammond—the man Dan works for—is a saint. He's saved my husband's life. Worry would have kept him down. Now there's nothing to trouble him. So I know—at least I trust—he'll get well. Pray that he may, won't you, Lena? I hope you are having a glorious time. My love, dear. Martha Grant.'"

"How's that for being a good sport?" Lena exclaimed admiringly as she folded away the letter. "Can any of you pull off a stunt like that and omit whining, I'd like to know?"

"Who is she, Lena, and where does she live?" asked Alice Webb with real interest.

"In our own city, my dear," replied Mrs. Wyatt. "We were friends at boarding-school. Some of you must know her. She was Martha French and a member of this club when it first started. Then she married and, after a while, left us. Said her embroidery was mostly darning. I guess the real reason was lack of money to keep up with us."

"Indeed I remember her. She was a real lady. I liked her," declared Edna Wallace. "Think of handling twelve babies in weather like this!"

"Think of not fussing about it," put in Lena. "That's the part that makes me take notice. I fuss with no babies, a well husband, a fair supply of money, and nothing much to do.

"Maybe that's why we fuss," interrupted another of the group—"because we've nothing much to do."

A chorus of groans cut the speaker short.

"We'd stone you if the temperature permitted," exclaimed Alice. "Nothing to do, indeed!"

"Nothing that gets us anything, I mean."

"I'll say it gets us a pretty good time," declared Alice.

"Nothing that gets other people anything, then," persisted the speaker, trying again to put her meaning across.

"I like that," pouted Edna. "I'll bet our husbands think we're fine."

"Maybe they could be made to think us finer if we changed our game," ventured quiet Eva Ellis, who had been thinking silently.

"Changed our game? How you mean, little one?" smiled Lena.

"I don't know myself," returned Mrs. Ellis. "It's a thought in need of development. We might begin in the fall by dedicating one day a week to some one who needs us."

"What's the matter with turning the embroidery club into a darning institution and mending up our tired friends, beginning with Martha Grant?" Questioned Lena. "I'm willing."

"Mr. Ellis often speaks slightingly of what he calls some women's empty, useless lives," confessed Eva. "It may be, girls, that our husbands could respect us more even if they don't need to love us any better."

"A long, long thought, Eva, for a hot day like this," replied Lena. "But a story like Martha Grant's may well make us take a look at ourselves. Maybe we've no right to a soft time."

Meanwhile, Nina had not spoken. She knew what was being said, but her own thoughts held her speechless. Whether the club changed its game or not, she was finding out that she should change hers. Her husband! He had done that for Dan Grant—and was giving up his own vacation! Probably the Grants were not the only recipients of his bounty. Had he been thus generous in the midst of affluence—but to go without himself in order to accomplish it—that was quite another matter! And she—she had chafed sorely because this same husband had not made money faster and in larger amounts for her to spend. Spend how? The thoughts were racing rapidly now through her mind. The vision of herself was becoming very clear—selfish, petty, worthless, she concluded desperately.

At night, alone in her room and unable to sleep, she thought the thing through. At last, she rose from her bed and, while the house was still, wrote David that she was coming home to play the game with him and play it right.—Zion's Herald.

THE COWARDICE OF PRIVATE KAY.

For some unexplained reason John Kay gained a name for cowardice before he had been at the post a month. He had been recruited in an eastern city, and was scarcely out of his teens. The rank and file of the regular army is not always made up of the best class of citizens; and Battery L numbered on its roster more than a few "hard cases."

Kay had evidently come from a good home. His superiors often wondered why a fellow of his caliber ever enlisted. There was a mystery about it, and Private Kay seemed disinclined to explain it. He never spoke of his former life, or of his home, or his people. He quickly became a model soldier, never failed in his duty, and rode like an Indian; but his existence previous to his assignment to Battery L was a sealed book to them.

Liquor, that bane of army life, was easily obtained at the post. In the entire battery there was but one man, Private Kay, who did not use the stuff. One of the men brought a jug back from town with him one day and had it on tap after supper behind the guardhouse. Somebody invited Kay down to see what the boys were about, and when he saw and smelled the liquor he turned and fairly ran to his quarters.

"That lad'll make a mighty poor soldier," declared the grizzled old sergeant. "If he runs away from a jug o' rum that way, what would he do in the face of the Injuns?"

Kay was a gentlemanly, accommodating fellow, and despite his unpopularity, the officers called upon him to do errands for them because he was always faithful and never made mistakes. One day, while Kay was enjoying a twelve-hour furlough, the major called him to his office.

"Kay, I wish you would ride down to Rockville for me," he said.

"Yes, sir; I'll be glad to do it, sir," responded the private, quickly.

"Very well. There's a packet to go to Bob Higgins, the express agent."

"Where shall I find him, sir?"

"Well, Bob is hard to find," said the major, laughing. "But it's likely he'll not be far away from Casey's saloon. He hangs around there half the time. Just go in and sit down. He'll show up in the course of the afternoon."

Kay, who had stretched forth his hand for the envelope, drew back.

"I—I beg your pardon, major, but will it not be all right if I leave the packet with the bartender?"

"No; Higgins must give you a receipt. There's money in it."

"I—I—" stammered Kay.

"What's the matter with you, man?" exclaimed the major, testily. "Don't you want to go?" The major had a temper of his own, and Kay knew it, as all the regiment did.

"I should be glad to go for you, sir. But can't I meet Higgins somewhere else, sir?"

"You'll not be sure of finding him elsewhere. What's the matter with Casey's? Are you afraid to go there?"

"Yes, sir, I am," said Kay, slowly. "It was liquor that got me enlisted for three years. I didn't know what I was about, sir, or I'd never joined. My people don't know where I am—my mother thinks I'm dead. You'll excuse me, sir, but if your request is not an official command, I shall have to ask you to let me off."

"Humph!" exclaimed the exasperated major. "A pretty excuse, indeed. You may go, sir. I'll find an accommodating and less cowardly man."

Kay's position, with the major "down on him," now became even more unenviable. But a week or two later an incident occurred which once for all gave him his correct status with his comrades.

A salute was to be fired in honor of a visiting general, and Private Kay was one of the firing squad of seven. The charge for the great guns which commanded the bay below Lime Point was fifty pounds of powder, and each charge was inclosed in a woolen bag.

One load did not discharge, and the sergeant ordered it pulled out of the cannon. As the bag came out, officers and men were horror-stricken to see that one corner of the bag had ignited!

The bag fell to the ground, and for an instant—the passing of a breath—there was a death-like silence; not a man of the firing squad stirred. Then, with a single bound, like the leap of a panther, Kay was upon the bag of powder!

With his bare hands he rolled it upon the sward and smothered the deadly spark, and, while the others stood trembling and amazed, he made his work sure by plastering the singed wool with damp earth. Then he arose, hastily brushed off his blouse, and stood at attention again.

But in those few seconds of time Private Kay had risen from the position of coward to that of hero of the battery.

To amuse children fasten up on old curtain on rollers in the attic or their play room and let them paste pictures all over one side of it. Then they will spend hours rolling it up and down to see the different pictures. One especially loved roll is a "circus" with all the pictures showing some animals, clowns, etc.—Mrs. E. C.

—Mr. and Miss Braxton of Center Church, Alamance, returned to High Point College on Tuesday. Mr. Braxton is preparing for the ministry. Their father accompanied them and stopped for a little while at the Herald office.

What would 2026 be like, spiritually, if every Christian were just like me? Would America and the West be compelled to surrender the spiritual leadership of the world? Would every vocation be placed on the basis of Christian service? Would the demons of rum and of war be vanquished? Would Protestantism still be divided? H. G. Wells declared that there is a race on between education and catastrophe. We may well add: there is a Marathon scheduled between Christianity and chaos.—Zion's Herald.

—A two days' ministers' conference for clergymen of all denominations will be held at Hartford Seminary, Hartford, Conn., on September 13 and 14, in the institution's new buildings. The leader will be Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago, whose general theme will be "The Vital Mission of the Church." In the five sessions he will treat this subject in relation to the preacher, the pastor, the membership, the community, the nation, and the world. Dr. Stone is widely known as pastor, writer, and college preacher. Baltimore, he went to the Chicago church in 1909. During his ministry there a new building has been erected which is said to be one of the most beautiful and most completely equipped church plants in the entire country.

—The young people were in charge of the service at Calvary last Sunday night. They had unusual music, calling in three violinists. The pastor preached and stated that he might call upon the young people to lead in the service once a month.

—Mrs. Fannie Kirkpatrick was among the visitors at Calvary church last Sunday.

Mrs. G. B. Crater of High Point, clothing, shoes, hose and such like.

Our school starts September 9th, so please remember that means more expenses, and more expenses calls for larger contributions.

A cornet has been recently donated, to help start a band. Readers, would you like to add something to help complete or make up that band?

Our school rooms need some more desks, so I will be glad for some one who reads this to inform us if they know of any second hand desks for sale.

When we are in need it is a good time to double your contributions. Thank you.

LIFE

How beautiful is life, when the sunlight of heaven,
Has chased the clouds of disappointment past,
When friends with their friendship true and tender
Strew our pathway with joys, thick and fast.

How beautiful is life when our willing hands find—
True service for others who understand,
Others, who give in exchange for the deeds done
Encouraged hearts, and strengthened hands.

How beautiful is life, when all seems smiling,
When the birds and the flowers and the earth are gay,
How beautiful to live, to serve, to linger
In a world so bright that to work seems play.

Life at its best, brings to us just this picture,
Painted in colors of a brilliant hue,
Brings to us hope and strength for the trials,
Awaiting each soul as they surely do.

But what of the days when the sun has ceased shining—
When the clouds of disappointment gather fast,
When hearts grow faint, and all nature seems cheerless,
When the brightness of heaven seems lost in the past?

The days are so long then, and we somehow are wishing
For a change in the scene and a light to appear,
We can't understand just why such a picture
Should be painted for us, making life seem so drear.

Perhaps when the light is withdrawn for a season,
From our pathway, and throu shadows we cannot see
The answer to our oft repeated question—
Just why should such trials and troubles be—

Perhaps, I say, if we then would listen
To the lesson the flowers and grasses tell—
Perhaps, who knows, our hearts might be cheered a bit?
For they tell us God lives, the sun shines, all is well.

The beautiful leaves that are fanned by the breezes
To maturity grow as they are bathed by the light,
But see, how they lose all their beauty and freshness.
When rain fails to come, and no clouds are in sight.

Behold the grasses so verdantly growing,
The earth to our vision seems a carpet of green,
The bright sunbeams called it forth from its hiding
But the clouds appeared too, before it was seen.

All nature is teaching mankind just this lesson
That the clouds are so closely allied to the sun,
That unless they continue to attract each other,
God's plans for his universe will be left undone.

If grasses and flowers must have the raindrops
As well as the light of the beautiful sun,
Then let us be cheered, even throu life's shadows,
Knowing God's purpose and will must be done.

"YOU KNOW A LOT OF PEOPLE WHO NEED MONUMENTS"

So runs the big type of an advertisement intended to sell, presumably, tombstones. Yes, we do know some folks who need tombstones. But it is rather ticklish business telling a person with whom you are in frequent association that he has passed out from participation in the realities of this life—that he should carve "finis" on a stone and get under it. But the "live ones" are building their own monuments as they go. Monuments in character, done in white, brown, yellow, black, or any other color natural to the people with whom they associate. Will some one have to furnish you a tombstone, or are you building a monument?—South Africa Missionary Advocate.

—We would like to know who it was that left a huge and fine watermelon in the Herald office on Tuesday while we were out. It measured 22 inches in length and still does, for it has not yet been cut. We are keeping it for a time when we can better do it justice. We would like to thank somebody for it, but do not know how to dirent our thanks.

—It has been discovered that a solution of ferric chloride is an efficient remedy for poison ivy. In the course of exhaustive researches on the chemical nature of ivy poison Dr. James McNair, of Chicago, found that the poison is rendered insoluble and thus made harmless by chemical union with iron. He says a number of soluble iron salts are effective against poison ivy, but he has found ferric chloride to be the most suitable. His remedy for the poison calls for a mixture of one part (by weight) of ferric chloride with 10 of alcohol and 10 of water. The skin should be washed in the solution, which should be allowed to dry there. Treatment either just before or just after exposure, it is claimed, will prevent the development of ivy poisoning in most cases.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Revival at Fairview

The revival meeting at Fairview Church, Fairview Charge, was held August 8-20. Rev. W. M. Loy of High Point, pastor of the West Thomasville circuit, assisted as the special help. Rev. P. T. Clapp and Rev. Mr. Bruton, pastors of the Christian and M. E. churches respectively, together with their congregations joined with us in a union revival. Brother Loy brought able messages, which inspired the hearts of his hearers. A number of conversions resulted from the meeting. Brethren Clapp and Bruton cooperated most heartily in the common effort to make the meeting a success; and we believe that these efforts resulted in much good, both seen and unseen.

On Friday morning, August 13, in response to the sound of an auto horn in the front yard, I found Brother and Sister Barber, with two sacks of flour, forty-five pounds of sugar, ten pounds of honey, twelve pounds lard; a quantity of coffee, canned goods, vegetables, fruit, and a chicken, beside ten dollars in cash. This pounding was greatly appreciated. The good people of Fairview are always ready to contribute liberally to the support of their pastor; and have more than once shown their generosity. May God's richest blessings, both temporal and spiritual rest upon them all. C. G. ISLEY.

Mecklenburg Charge.—Were it not for the fact that we have a consciousness that Earth's sorrows point to, and cheer our poor hearts in the golden hopes of a sweet tomorrow, we could but bow our heads in despair, "Trials dark on every hand, and we cannot understand all the way that God doth lead us, to that blessed promised land; and we wonder why the test when we try to do our best? but we'll understand it better by and by."

August the 19th was a sad day in Zoar community. The death angel visited the home of Brother Thomas J. Atkins and claimed the soul of his dear young wife, Mrs. Bertha Hartis-Atkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hartis. Tumor of the brain was the cause of her death, which developed but a few weeks ago. All that tender hands could do, and medical skill could offer was not enough to move away the hand that lingered for her Spirit. If measured by the years of her earthly stay, her life was short, but if by good deeds, her life is longer than many of us who have passed our fiftieth mile-post. Bertha was the only daughter, and joy of her dear father and mother, precious to her young companion and dearly loved by all who knew her. In her passing to reward her father's house, her own dear hearth-stone, her church, her community bow in bereavement of a truly great character. Her life to the end, was marked with characteristics of real worth. Love for her parents, her home, her husband, and her devotion to her Saviour, her church, and life itself was the ruling passion of her soul. Her cheerful deportment and loving smiles were an inspiration and an uplifting joy to those who mingled with her. Her patience under trials and suffering bespeaks her unflinching trust and faith in hand Divine that she was sure was underneath her. Tho blind and deaf in her last hours (marks of this disease) she was still conscious, resigned and ready to go.

She was united in holy matrimoney to Mr. Thomas J. Atkins, January 23, 1924. To this union were born two sweet little boys, T. J. Jr., and Everett. First named one year and nine months, the baby being six months of age. The God of the orphans will throw motherly arms around them, while mother basks in His presence and sings His praises. The funeral was conducted by her present pastor, Rev. Robert Short, and her former pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, of Albemarle, assisted by Rev. Mr. Smith of Pineville. The casket was banked in an array of beautiful flowers, as her body visited the church for the last time, of which she was a faithful member since twelve years old. Her talent was used in the capasity of organist, choir leader and teacher of a Sunday school class. May God bless her young husband, whose life she sweetened, and fill the aching void and the vacant chair. She has made her contribution to the world, and left it better for her short stay here.

HER PASTOR.

Halifax.—We have been very busy since we wrote to the Herald last. We began our revival at Eden Church on the first Sunday in August. Rev. G. H. Hendry, pastor of Fountain Place Church, Burlington, was our pulpit help. He did some good preaching, and the church was revived, and a few who had grown cold were revived and two united with the church.

On the second Sunday in August we went to Hawkins Chapel Church on Littleton Charge to assist Bro. O'Briant. We had one of the best revivals here that we have had in some time. The house was well filled at each service and 23 were converted and three reclaimed, and 20 united with the church at the last service.

We began our revival at Union Church on the third Sunday in August. Rev. F. W. Paschall assited me here. We had good preaching and I think the church was revived.

On the fourth Sunday we began our revival at Hollister Church. The writer did all the preaching for eight days. Miss Sue House of Thelma and Charlie Knight of Hollister had charge of the music. We had a good revival here last year with 27 accessions, so we did not expect to have many accessions, for most of the children old enough joined last year. But we had a great revival here this year, six conversions and a number reclaimed and six accessions to the church. All young men, three of them well grown. We closed here last Sunday night. We have three more meetings to hold yet. The next will be at Bethesda with Bro. Pritchard to assist.

On the third Sunday in July after the afternoon services at Eden, we met in the home of old Mr. John Brown and held a short service and received Mr. Brown into the church and baptized him. Mr. Brown is 87 years old. He had never united with the church. On Friday before third Sunday in August I visited the home of Mrs. Ricks near Brinkleyville, and baptized and received his mother into the church. Mrs. Ricks is 69 years old.

We want to thank the good people of Halifax who are still pounding us with good things. We want to thank one of our good sisters at Ringwood for a hen and 20 chickens, just the thing for a preacher.

We want to thank others for eggs, gas, meat, chickens, sugar, etc.

We are now in the mountains of Western N. C., enjoying a much needed rest, breathing air, and enjoying the mountain scenery.

C. L. SPENCER.

Reidsville.—We were glad to have our pastor back with us again Sunday, after having a vacation. We were glad for him to have a vacation, still we missed him. He preached two splendid sermons, the subject for the morning service being, "Christian Conduct," and for the evening service, "Influence of Example."

Our revival meeting will begin the third Sunday in September with Rev. G. F. Millaway as pulpit help. We do not know definitely who our choir leader will be. We are trusting that this may be a great revival, and hope all Christian people will pray for it. MRS. H. S. DIXON.

Randolph.—We have suffered so many losses by death, this year; that had the writer written a memorial and funeral address for each one he would have had but little time for anything else. But deaths are not quite so frequent as they were, some weeks ago.

Three of our special meetings have been held. Rev. T. E. Pierce was my pulpit help at Bethany; and at Bethel. The sermons he gave us were very much appreciated. The churches were built up in the faith, a few were saved at each church; three members were received into each church. We had some good help at both of these churches from the evangelistic team from High Point, for which we are very thankful.

At Shiloh, we had Rev. L. W. Gerringer as pulpit help; and those who know Bro. Gerringer, know he did his part well. The church was strengthened; and we had a few who were reclaimed; and two have been received into the church.

Our special meeting at Gray's Chapel will start on the fourth Sunday in September. Bro. N. G. Bethea will help us. We hope for a good meeting.

Several times during the year, we have received tokens of appreciation.

It was during the Christmas season, that the good people of Bethel and Shiloh gave us a pounding. Then since they have given us tokens that I need not say, were highly appreciated. But on last Saturday evening about 75 of our good people from Bethany came to the pastor's home and brought a sumptuous dinner which was served on the lawn. Bro. T. E. Gaster, Superintendent of the Sunday school, had written stating his purpose to come to Liberty; and the pastor's home. But we had no thought of seeing so many. It was indeed, a happy occasion for pastor and family. Then while getting some planks to make a temporary table, a throng of the good people slipped into the dining room and left us a great many things that are pleasing to the taste and strengthening to the body. After the table had been made and food prepared ready, Bro. G. L. Julian called the pastor to the porch, and presented him with a bundle—which contained a nice quilt from the Missionary Society. Many names were found on the quilt. They had undertaken to raise money to paint the exterior of the church, and any one who would pay 25 cents or more toward painting the church, they would put his name on the quilt. The money has been raised, the church painted, and we have the nice quilt. May God bless these good people, and help their humble, but delighted pastor to repay them, as far as possible, in rendering better service. A. O. LINDLEY.

Forsyth.—After a long silence may it please the Herald to say that while all is not golden, there is much on Forsyth charge that is truly good tidings.

When this pastor came to Forsyth the work was composed of six churches the names of which said two groves, two ridges, two unions, one mount and one spring. One ridge and one union were taken from us when by the act of last conference Union Ridge was detached from the Forsyth charge and made South Winston charge. We were pastor of this church long enough to see the church building remodeled at a considerable cost and the membership considerably increased. This church has a wonderful possibility. Another new church building is that of Mt. Carmel which is now in process of erection. This is a large building so constructed that it and the old building may be thrown together if necessary. The old building will be used for Sunday school and other like purposes while the new building will be used for the main auditorium with two large class rooms at rear of pulpit. The new building has a full basement to be used for the heating plant and a large community room &c. This church when completed will be ample and convenient. Its appearance is such that any one is bound to appreciate it. These people are not wealthy and not so numerous but they are contributing with their time, labor, and skill, as well as with their money, in such a way that the ease with which this church building is being done is remarkable to say the least. We have two other church building propositions that are almost sure to materialize in the near future. Hickory Ridge has part of the money now in hand to build Sunday school rooms and it is only a matter of time when this will be done. Maple Springs is now in a movement that if plans materialize the church will be moved nearer the highway. A full basement is to be built and if not at present the plans are to brick veneer the present building and make it unit of a modern puan in every respect. The plans are to build a semi-circular drive leading off from the highway at the two extreme corners of the grove and approaching the church in the center. If this plan carries it will mean a most beautiful church in one of the most beautiful locations to be found anywhere. These steps are being made to care for the needs of this rapidly growing suburban district.

It would be impossible to express in detail how the people have remembered the pastor and family in so many ways. These favors have been numerous and have come from various sources. While I cannot mention all, much as I would like, I must not fail to mention the many pounds that came pouring in from the Maple Springs congregation on the night of September 3. It was on this night that we had been at the church working out plans to remodel the church as above mentioned. As soon as plans were completed it was noticed that the good people seemed rather anxious for adjournment and were quite prompt to proceed to their cars and then move towards the parsonage. At the parsonage there was a halting and the people began to move towards the front door. They did not stop at the door but proceeded to the dining room and there unloaded their good things. A bit of confusion prevailed, for the surprise was complete. The "Preacher Woman," found herself in the midst of a new experience. She does not deny being guilty of helping to pound the preachers of other days but this thing of being a party to the receiving a pounding was a new thing. But she heartily enjoyed the occasion and joins the pastor in saying come again. It would be a great pleasure to be able to mention all the persons present and all the articles brought but this is impossible. So no attempt will be made in this direction. To say all the people were good and all they brought was good is by no means saying too much. God bless you, good folks, and may you be richly repaid for your goodness and generosity.

We are now in a ten days revival at Mt. Carmel. Bro. J. L. Trollinger is the help. Please pray that great good shall be accomplished.

In His name, GEO. L. CURRY.

Asheboro.—While we have not said much through the Herald yet we are still on the job and are trying to holding things together through the hot weather. Vacations have cut heavily into our congregation but we are hoping that things will pick up again.

It is bad enough for a preacher to have to move immediately after the annual conference when the weather usually is the most delightful of the year, but this preacher and his wife have moved during the month of August. Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Winningham in whose house we have lived since last November returned from Florida this Summer and so we have moved from Park street to North Fayetteville street. Our house number is 351, so our friends ought not have any difficulty in finding us. The Ladies' Aid society has bought a new living room suit, a new bed room suit and a new dining room suit and a kitchen cabinet and other things for the kitchen. Then just as we were beginning to get things straightened out a whole delegation came after supper with an old fashioned pounding, bringing with them a fine quanity of things needful for the pantry and the table. We greatly appreciate all these things and trust we can prove ourselves worthy of them.

Dr. Dixon, Miss Annie Livengood and Prof. Lindley were greatly enjoyed in our fifth Sunday Rally a week ago. We say to all, "Come again." J. E. PRITCHARD.

High Point.—The pastor, Dr. Brown, and his wife returned to the city last Thursday evening from a two weeks' vacation spent in Westminster, Md., with their daughter, Mrs. G. H. Armacost and her family, and the usual services were conducted in the church on Sunday, both morning and evening.

Rally Day for the Sabbath school will be observed next Sunday, September 12th, and the goal is an attendance of 600.

Quarterly conference will be held next Wednesday evening, and the name of the delegate to annual conference in Greensboro, will be announced. Messrs. R. H. Shaw and S. P. Montgomery were the nominees voted for last Sunday.

The two Missionary Societies held their usual monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. J. C. Welch, Sr., on North Main St. on Monday afternoon. We were delighted to receive one new member, Mrs. P. T. Crawford, and she is gladly welcomed to our ranks. A committee composed of Mesdames W. P. Pickett, S. P. Montgomery, and Geo. R. Brown, was appointed to pack a box for Pine Ridge, Ky., next week.

It was decided to hold a public Rally for the young people at an early date, when a program will be given and refreshments served. Each member present agreed to try to secure one new member before next meeting. The Home Society raised $6. for Bethel Home at this meeting, and has sent in the sum of $1.26 for Scholarship Loan Fund to date, $100 of which was donated by Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Douglas of this city.

On next Friday morning, September 10th, the doors of High Point College will be opened for the third annual session. Approxinately 250 students are expected, which will be a considerable gain over last year's attendance. This year the college will have for the first time a Senior Class composed of about a dozen members. Three additions have been made to the Faculty. The campus has been sown in peas, which will be turned under and grass seed sown. It will soon be a most attractive place. The students are already arriving, and Thursday will be Registration Day.

Prof. and Mrs. J. H. Allred have returned from their wedding journey to Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, and have moved into their attractive new home in Sheraton Hills. Prof. and Mrs. P. E. Lindley have also built a pretty bungalow near the College during the summer. Still another attractive new home is that of Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Hardy on West College Drive.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Neese and daughter went to Charlotte Sunday to see his brother, Mr. James W. Neese, who is critically ill and the end is expected at any time. On Monday they visited Mr. W. A. Bowman, who is also ill. He is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Neese, and a brother of the late Rev. J. H. Bowman and Miss Millie Bowman. The sympathy of a host of friends is extended to this sorely bereaved family.

Cid, South Davidson.—We are a little band working for the upbuilding of God's work, pressing on towards a higher calling in Christ Jesus.

Bro. C. O. Leonard has answered the call to the ministerial work and preached his first sermon at Cid today to a large congregation of attentive hearers. He made a spiritual impression on the people. We had an old time revival of religion. A time long to be remembered in the hearts of men and women. May the good work still continue.

We had a large Sunday school today; 71 in number. A truck full of old friends came from Thomasville.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Leonard of Rich Fork, father and mother of Mr. C. O. Leonard, came to worship with us and several people came from around other churches. It seems like a special meeting had begun. The writer was glad to read the fine report from Piney Grove in last week's Herald. The old friends of Brother J. S. Riddle and family of Draper were so glad to have them visit us and, others recently. Hope to see them again.

Oh! and again the writer was glad to see Mrs. J. B. Trogdon of Stokesdale and hear her loving voice once more. May we all live so as to meet again in Heaven where there will be no sad farewells. No crepe on the door knobs.

We want to have our special meeting the fourth Sunday.

Rev. C. H. Hill made a most touching appeal to the sinner part of the congragation at Piney Grove meeting on the last Sunday night. And the appeal was answered.

Bro. Hill has become a wonderful worker in Christ's vineyard. We do not wish to boast, but old Uwharrie Circuit has been lucky in sending out about four ministers in the last few years, and I believe that there is some more coming out on the Lord's calling. Say! wonder what has become of the Mecklenburg reporter? We would like to hear from them.

The Herald is a welcomed visitor in my home and I must congratulate the new printers and the fine type. It is simply fine. And as I see it, no M. P. is a full pledged one without it.

Our cottage prayer meetings are still going on. Much good as I believe is being accomplished. It comes to Cid Church next Saturday night.

We added a small Library to our church last week. We are looking for and expecting a good old time revival soon. The special meeting at Walters Grove and Fairview church begins the third Sunday night.

A well wisher to Herald and to many readers, a worker in his vineyard.

MRS. N. W. LANIER, Reporter.

Rockingham.—The church of Rockingham is a young one. We only started erecting our church about two or three years ago. Of course we had an old church but when this one was built it was like beginning again. When we started out we had to pay for our church and its equipments. Now as a part of the work of our valuable Sunday school we have paid the debt off of our church and now the school is paying for its equipment as they did the church. We were just glad that our Sunday school members were just such liberal people as to help in paying the debt.

In our Sunday school we have enrolled 170 pupils. The number of members present yesterday was 107 and the offering was $3.14. We have six classes of which we are proud; and teachers that are very efficient workers not only in the Sunday school but in all church work. Only three weeks ago the singing convention met at our church and the Sunday school gave ice water to the great crowd that were present. Class no. 2 of our Sunday school will give a picnic Saturday. We have a Sunday school that is willing to do anything to the upbuilding of God's kingdom. We have bought fifty copies of a new song book by the name of "The Best Revival Songs." We started a bank account this past week, for our Sunday school.

In June we had a great revival meeting; besides the great number of converts and new members to join the church during this meeting, we had a great work begun. There were two organizations formed. "The Girls' Club" and "The Boys' Prayer Circle." We are trying to accomplish lots of good and we have accomplished some already. We wont have room in this report to tell of our work but will in a near coming one. We would like for other churches to know of the benefit it is to our church.

Our little children meet on Thursday afternoon for the benefit of studying Bible stories and singing; we also have the Lord's prayer repeated. The number of children that come seem to be very interested in the work. We hope by doing this we can prepare the little ones that in the future they can take the older ones' place and carry on the good work that we have now started.

We have an extra good man with us as our pastor, Rev. James Trollinger. Every member seems to be devoted to him. He delivered to us two fine sermons yesterday. To show you what a great man he is I will tell you something he is trying to do besides his regular work and he has a heavy work, for he has to go to Virginia for one of his churches. Mr. Trollinger is trying to begin a new church at Exway in a land where a people know little about God. He also goes down below Hamlet and preaches to a people under a brush arbor. I had the pleasure of being with them yesterday afternoon. This is only two of the many good works that he does. It would be impossible to make mention of them all now. I will tell of some of our other work in the next report.

We would like to say here in conclusion that we are sorry that we can not help the church of Spencer financially at the present; but anything that we can help any church in any other way we would be more than pleased to do so. If any one would like to know anything as to the way we carry on our work of any of our departments of work just write to me and we will be glad to supply you with imformation

(Miss) BIRDIE CONNELL.

Giles Chapel, Richland Circuit.—As there has not been a reporter elected for Giles this year, I will endeavor to write a short sketch from this church.

Our Sunday school has been doing unusually well this summer, under the management of Mr. Eugene Williams from High Point. We wish to congratulate him for his faithfulness in coming so far to superintend a Sunday school.

Our special meeting will begin the third Sunday in September. This will also be home coming day.

There will be a female quartet there on Sunday by four sisters. If you miss this you will miss a treat.

Everybody invited to attend these services.

A MEMBER.

A brief sketch of the history of our church which Mr. Scarboro gave is as follows: Our church was organized about 1901, in a little chapel at Forest Hill. In 1901 the conference sent Rev. C. A. Pickens to us. While he was pastor Rev. N. G. Bethea came and helped in a revival meeting. Rev. C. A. Swift was the second pastor, he served a few months. In 1902 the present church was built and Rev. J. A. Burgess was the first pastor in the new church. Bro. Burgess served one year. In 1903, Rev. Mr. Lowe followed Rev. Mr. Burgess. At the conference of 1904 Rev. D. A. Braswell was sent here and served faithfully for four years. Rev. A. O. Lindley came to us in 1908 and he also served four years. In 1912 Rev. A. O. Lindley was followed by Rev. Edward Suits, who served as our pastor for two years. At the conference of 1914 Rev. J. R. Hutton was sent to us and served until the following June, at which time Rev. W. R. Lowdermilk came to us and served faithfully until his death, March 6, 1917. Rev. Paul S. Kennett came and finished out the conference year. In the fall of 1917 Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk became our pastor and served until 1919, when Rev. A. D. Shelton was assigned to our church. Bro. Shelton, as two of the other pastors, served four years. In 1923 the conference sent Rev. Lawrence Little to us, he serving us for the next 18 months. Rev. P. E. Lindley then came and filled Rev. Lawrence Little's unexpired time until conference in 1925. At the conference of 1925 our present pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, was assigned to our church.

We regret that more of our former pastors could not be with us. We missed them very much.

The sermons by Rev. Lawrence Little, Sunday morning and Rev. P. E. Lindley, Sunday evening were very helpful. They were enjoyed immensely by the entire congregation.

On Saturday night a reception was given in honor of the pastors and visitors who had arrived. At the close ice cream was served. Every one had a nice time.

I call the attention of the pastors to the question which was ordered inserted in the Pastor's Personal Report Blank, namely: "Have you elected the church officers for the ensuing year? . . . If not, why not? . . . " (See Discipline 1924, page 47.)

Report Blanks will be mailed out about the first of October.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Captain W. S. Lineberry

Winfield Scott Lineberry was born April 2, 1847 at Locust Grove, Randolph County, N. C. On September 28, 1870, he was married to Hulda Louise Vickory, of New Salem. This union was blessed with nine children, five boys, and four girls, all living; William Lemuel of Mebane, N. C., John Henry, Winston-Salem, N. C., C. F., Elkin, N. C., James A., Aberdeen, and Joseph S. Lineberry, Millboro, N. C., and Mrs. J. M. Aldridge, Millboro, N. C., Mrs. R. M. Spencer, Waycross, Ga., Mrs. Frank Minor, North Carden, Ga., and Mrs. Willis Booth, Greensboro, N. C.

At the age of 17 years he volunteered and enlisted in Company F., Junior Reserves, which became 70 Regiment of North Carolina. He was Drill Master. He soon became a Lieutenant; and then later captain of his company. He served faithfully in the Confederate cause till the close of the war. In his own words he expressed it thus:

"We surrendered April 27, 1865."

"On April 28, 1865, I put foot in my old home once more, with nothing in this world, only the old clothes on my back, and they were ragged—not a dollar in the world. I was sick on our retreat, and put my knapsack in a baggage wagon, with my uniform, which was nearly new, and all my belongings except my Bible, and I never saw the knapsack any more."

This Bible the son Joseph has at this time. No doubt God's word was a comfort to Captain Lineberry during the war. For it he kept, while he let other things go.

Captain Lineberry held various positions, and filled them with credit. But no position that he filled, was greater in responsibility, than he filled for six years in 1910 to 1916 as Superintendent of the Soldiers' Home, at Raleigh. But his health failed and in his own words, "I was compelled to resign and come home on October 1, 1916, and I expect to remain here until the Lord calls me, which cannot be long. Then I wish to be laid to rest with my kindred at Grays Chapel."

God called him on June 20, 1926. His wife preceded her husband, she having passed on last Fall.

Captain Lineberry's older sister—Martha Caroline Lineberry—was the first body to be buried at Gray's Chapel.

Captain Lineberry was a man who had faith in God. For many years he had been a member at Gray's Chapel.

On June 22, his funeral services were conducted by the writer—assisted by Revs. L. W. Gerringer, G. F. Millaway, and W. F. Ashburn, also present Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., Rev. J. E. Pritchard, and Rev. T. F. McCulloch, at Gray's Chapel, in the presence of a great host of mourning relatives and friends.

A. O. LINDLEY.

Mabry

Fannie Linker Mabry was born March 18, 1876, and died August 21, 1926.

She was married to Thomas Jones Mabry February 16, 1898. To this happy union were born ten children, seven sons and three daughters. One of the sons and one of the daughters preceded her to the glory world in their infancy.

She was a devoted member of the Methodist Church, lived a consecrated Christian life and was a devoted wife and faithful mother.

Funeral was conducted in the presence of a large congregation. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at the M. E. Church at the family burying ground.

Mrs. Mabry was one of the best women in that community. Let us not sorrow as one that hath no hope. May God bless the bereaved stricken family.

J. W. HULIN.

Cooley

Mrs. Lon Cooley passed away in her home near Weavers Chapel August 27. She had been afflicted for some time but bore it very patiently. She was 69 years of age, and had been a member of Weavers Chapel Church about 40 years, was a good Christian woman, was a sweet spirited and quiet character, and loved by all who knew her. She leaves a son, Mr. C. T. Cooley, and two daughters, Mrs. Tom. Jenkins and Mrs. Ivey Smith. These all live near Weavers Chapel Church. They have the sympathy of the church and community.

A short funeral service was held at the burying ground near her home August 28, 2:30 P. M. and her body laid to rest. She still lives in the hearts of her friends.

J. B. O'BRIANT.

Dodson

Caroline Dodson, the oldest member of Union Grove Church, died August 23, 1926. Funeral services conducted by the writer at Orange Grove Church August 24th.

Sister Dodson joined Union Grove Church more than 40 years ago, where she remained a faithful member until death.

She lived to be more than 85 years of age. She had been feeble for some time.

May God comfort her loved ones and friends.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Crutchfield

Samuel Whitfield Crutchfield, born February 23, 1879, died August 30, 1926. He was the son of Jas. H. and Elizabeth Gill Crutchfield.

Bro. Crutchfield was converted and joined Hebron Methodist Protestant Church several years ago. Later he transferred to Chestnut Ridge Church. In 1924 he again transferred, this time to Efland Methodist Protestant Church where he remained a faithful member until death.

He was a steward in his church for several years. After he ceased to be steward he often inquired as to the financial standing of his church.

In the closing moments of life he left this testimony, with his wife: "God has saved me and all will be well with me."

The funeral services were conducted from Efland M. P. Church, September 1st by the writer assisted by the following ministers: T. M. Johnson, D. R. Williams, S. W. Taylor, and R. L. Councilman.

After the services in the church the Junior Order concluded the services at the grave. Rev. S. F. Nicks acted as Chaplain for this part of the services. The remains were placed to rest in Efland M. P. Church cemetery.

The large congregation present showed the esteem in which his memory is held.

He leaves to mourn their loss: his widow; two brothers; Geo. F. and T. M. Crutchfield and their families, and a large number of relatives and friends.

Bro. Crutchfield was an Uncle of Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield of our conference.

May God comfort the bereaved ones.

Eliza Briles

Eliza Walker, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Walker, was born November 15, 1841; died August 26, 1926. The deceased was married to John Briles during the year 1881.

Mrs. Briles joined the church in early girlhood and remained a consistent member throughout life. Some years ago she moved her membership to Mt. Lebanon Church, having been a member of Union M. P. Church.

The deceased was barred from attending church on account of the failure of advanced age. She bore her afflictions patiently, without murmur or complaint.

We believe that the community in which she lived was enriched by her life. We further believe that our loss is her eternal gain.

One daughter, one half-sister and other relatives survive.

"She is not dead, she has but passed
Beyond the mists that blind us here;
Into that new and larger life,
Into a serener sphere."

W. H. NEESE.

J. R. Lamb

J. R. Lamb, born 1867, died 1926, September 3rd. He was married forty-one years ago to Rebecca Rich. To this union eight children were born. The widow and five children survive. Brother Lamb became a Christian in early life and united with the church. About a year ago he and his wife transferred their membership from Level Cross to Mt. Lebanon.

The writer conducted the funeral service at Mt. Lebanon last Sunday, the fifth, at 11 o'clock. There were three outstanding points in the life of the deceased that the speaker emphasized. First; he was a good citizen. He obeyed the law, and sought to have it obeyed even at personal loss. In the next place he was well informed. And last and most important, he was a man of great faith.

The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends who desired to pay a tribute—by their presence—to one whom they knew and loved.

W. H. NEESE.

Loy

Ovanda Columbus Loy was born October 22, 1866. He was the son of the late J. Haywood Loy, and Amanda Loy, and is the father of Revs. W. M. Loy, and Columbus Loy, two of our young preachers.

He was born in Alamance county, and spent all of his life in this county. On July 25, 1888 he was married to Georgia A. Dowdy. This union was blessed with 11 children, two of whom have passed on to the spirit world. He professed faith in Christ, and joined Friendship M. P. Church, on Mt. Hermon charge, in 1912. While this was his home church to which he was pleased to attend, he also, as opportunity was offered, attended the preaching services of other churches. For he delighted to hear the preaching of God's word. He was a good man! He walked with God; and to commune with Him was his delight. He recently said, "I am earnestly serving the Lord; and trying to do His will."

The death angel called his spirit home on August 11, 1926, at the time when it would seem his life had grown rich in experience, for he was 59 years nine months and 19 days of age. He left a mother, a wife, nine children, and 18 grand-children to mourn his departure, with a great number of relatives and friends.

He was an affectionate father, a devoted husband, and a kind neighbor. He was kind to all. Mercy and sympathy, he was pleased to manifest; for he was a friend to all.

His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Friendship, after the funeral services were conducted, by the writer—assisted by Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., Rev. S. W. Taylor, and Rev. H. L. Isley. Rev. T. A. Williams, and Rev. C. G. Isley of our church; and Rev. D. I. Offman, and Rev. Mr. Conrad of the Lutheran church attended the funeral services.

—Miss Annie Hunter, of Greensboro, oldest daughter of the late Thomas A. Hunter, died last week in Saranac, New York, where she had been a health-seeker for a long time. Her funeral was conducted by Dr. Spahr at the home on North Elm Street on Sunday afternoon. She leaves her mother, two sisters and one brother. She impressed her friends by her gentle, kindly spirit, and many will be grieved at her going.

—Mrs. Bray of Liberty lost her life in Mt. Airy in an unexpected way. She was riding in a car when the door came open and a little child fell out. In trying to save the child Mrs. Bray fell out and was instantly killed.

Another Centenarian

The New York Christian Advocate last week issued a magnificent magazine number in celebration of the completion of its first hundred years of life. It has had a great and worthy life and comes to its old age with unabated strength. This centennial number of the Advocate has 168 pages, every one filled with matter of special interest. There are many illustrations of leading men and of principal buildings. The first cover page shows John Wesley, the Father of Methodism. The last cover page shows the great manufacturing plant of the Methodist Book Concern in New York City. The magazine contains an epitome of Methodist history in all branches of Methodism. Our own church is referred to in a number of articles and is specially treated in an article written by Dr. Lyman E. Davis, editor of the Methodist Recorder. There is an article on the Divisions of American Methodism written by Dr. Eric M. North that we find peculiarly interesting, accompanied as it is by a very ingenious diagram or chart showing the relation of the various groups of Methodists to each other. There is so much of valuable historic matter in the number that we shall carefully preserve it for future reference. The Advocate has rendered a great service in the preparation and wide distribution of this centennial number. May the paper continue to serve the cause of true religion as efficiently as in the past.

The Stillwellites

Dr. North's article in the centennial number of the New York Christian Advocate describes the Stillwellites as a body of churchmen who became absorbed in the Methodist Protestant Church. We became interested in them and sought to know more of them. We find them mentioned in both Drinkhouse's history and Buckley's history. They were followers of William M. Stillwell, an itinerant minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church who had withdrawn and carried about 300 members with him in New York. Later others were added to his followers in New Jersey, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and perhaps elsewhere. They were organized and held annual conferences and published minutes. In 1824 they had a total membership of 2,139. The next year they reported an increase of 386 members. In 1826 it seems that Stillwell disowned most of his followers and set up an independent organization. The disowned majority went on their way notwithstanding the opposition of their former leader, and according to Dr. Drinkhouse were to a large extent merged in the new Methodist Protestant Church to which they brought some worthy members.

Dr. Buckley gives a somewhat different impression. He says: "Most of the seceders returned to the Methodist Episcopal Church 'convinced that it is easier to destroy a good church than to make a better one.' Those who did not return renounced the itinerancy, and formed a Congregational church, of which Stillwell was pastor. In a few years, however, it utterly disappeared."

We take it that Dr. Drinkhouse and Dr. North are correct in their view that many of the Stillwellites became Methodist Protestants.

The Methodists in National Politics

The October Forum has an interesting article by Washington Pezet on "The Temporal Power of Evangelism" in which the charge is made that Protestant religious bodies are exercising temporal power in this country. He makes this charge paricularly strong against the Methodist Episcopal Church but also puts in the same class the Anti-Saloon League and the Federal Council of Churches and the Lord's Day Alliance. He quotes General Grant's alleged statement that there are three political parties in his counry: The Republicans, the Democrats, and the Methodist Episcopal Church. The evidence he offers is an array of facts revealing the effort of these bodies to secure legislation suited to accomplish ends they deem important. He does not try to prove, we believe, that any of these ends are selfish or against the public interest. He argues that in doing as they are these bodies are violating the American principle of separation between church and state.

We Appeal to You

Since the spring meeting of the Board of Trustees of High Point College there have been sent out several thousand letters urging those who are yet in arrears with their subscriptions to please remit. These have brought but meager responses. The need for funds has increased until the situation is most acute. Treasurer Wills has been left to handle the situation practically alone. Payments for materials and other obligations in building the college, the premiums on the insurance, etc., have increased until the total is so great unless you who owe us pay up and that promptly all that has been done to give a college to our people will be jeopardized.

Please, please, please to send in your payments this week. On the 22nd of this month Mr. Wills has a payment of $2,500 to meet with nothing in hand. Shall we fail to meet our obligations when so much has been done? We have on our books nearly $50,000, money subscribed by the members of the Methodist Protestant Church; most of it could be paid with but little sacrifice. Send money direct to Mr. J. Norman Wills, Greensboro; we will get the amounts from him and give credit on your subscriptions. Be sure to give name the subscription was made in, also post office you now have.

Faithfully,

R. M. Andrews.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE CHURCH

By Rev. C. M. Compher

The Church is the noblest and the best organization in the world.

It produces the finest specimens of character of which this world has any knowledge.

It exercises the largest influence in the work of reform.

It is the one sure and steadfast promoter and supporter of reform.

Whatever good is in the world has come through the avenues of the Church.

Both directly and indirectly it promotes and safeguards public morals.

It conserves the peace and happiness of the community.

It promotes honest, progressive and beneficent government.

It does the most to develop the sentiments of love, brotherly kindness and good neighborhood.

It does the most to promote clean, strong, brave, self-sacrificing and efficient citizens and public servants.

It does the most to make and maintain the home as a place of virtue, love, righteousness, comfort and happiness.

It sympathizes with the weak, the wronged and oppressed, and pleads for social justice more than any other institution.

It stands most universally and uncompromisingly for the right against wrong.

It brings to all classes and conditions of people the best and most comforting and hope-inspiring messages regarding their sorrows, their sufferings; and what we must all face, death.

The aim of the Church is to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus throughout the world

Therefore: give the church your best service. Live by the Church, stand by the church and die by the Church.

ETERNAL LIFE A PRESENT POSSESSION

Rev. W. A. Ledford

The inquiry of the rich young ruler concerning eternal life is an illustration of the intuitive longing of the human heart for things that are eternal. The law that like seeks like is just as true as like begets like. The setting of eternity in the human heart accounts for this universal longing. This longing may be stifled out. The different views of eternal life presented in the Scriptures are interesting. The synoptic gospels largely portray it as an inheritance to be entered into in the world to come. Paul views it as a free gift of God made possible through the sacrficial death of Christ, presumably bestowed at the close of our earthly pilgrimage; while John sets it forth as a possession that the believer already has here and now. Jesus confirms the views of all the synoptic gospels, Paul and John. It is for now and all eternity.

Jesus answered Peter's question relative to the reward of the Apostles for their sacrifices in following Christ as follows: "There is no man that hath left houses . . . for my sake and for the gospel's sake, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time. . . . and in the world to come inherit eternal life." Paul, writing to the Romans, said: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Someone has remarked that "the devil pays wages and God gives gifts," but never pays wages. If man was compelled to earn eternal life through works of righteousness he would never earn it. He can not earn earthly blessings for the physical man, much less eternal life for the spiritual man. John wrote, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," not has had or will have, but has it here and now as a present possession. Jesus defined eternal life as a life of acquaintance with God in Christ.

The most reasonable deduction from the foregoing Scriptural bases concerning eternal life is that it is the natural, normal, healthy state of the believer—the regenerated heart and soul's inherent right. The believer has it as much at conversion as he will ever have it. But not as much of it as he will have when he becomes like Him. Life is continually growing, enlarging, expanding in the spiritual as well as in the physical world. The little child is born with eternal life. The sinner loses it through sinful indulgences, disobedience, and the believer recovers it at his conversion. The greatest problem for those endeavoring to work out their salvation with fear and trembling in the midst of this crooked and perverse environment, is not the obtaining of something that they have not, but the keeping of what they already have—namely, eternal life a present possession.

THE COLLEGE

Can we not regard every one of our ministers as traveling agents for every one of the interests of our church?

There are certainly no other men in the church who have as keen senses and perceptions of the needs of education as our ministers. Their duties require them to visit frequently every family on their charge. They are presumed to know and do know all the young people on their respective charges; which of them are or can be interested in education, and which of their parents are or can be induced to encourage the educational ambitions of their children.

There should be not less than two well endowed young people of every church in the conference every year in attendance upon our college. The ministers should feel that their salaries are paid, not only for preaching and for looking after the finances of the general interests of the church; but to nourish and keep alive and cause to grow all the time the interest of every person in the church in the college. There has been to date an average of not quite one from each church in our College. It should be at least two at once and increase to more and more. To say there is a church in our conference that does not finance yearly two young people capable of college development is to belittle us. It must not be admitted. To say that we can not pay a dollar per member per year to support the college is to belittle us. It must not be admitted. Let us all pull together for the College—preacher foremost.

"Seek and Ye Shall Find"

The husband of a woman near Chunju, Chosen, had been sick for several weeks. As he was dying, he said to his wife, "Believe in Jesus." He had not been a confessed Christian. Determined to carry out her husband's last wish, the woman began to search for Jesus. She inquired at all the houses in the village whether Jesus was there. After several weeks of searching she found a Christian family and was told about Jesus. She has been an eager Christian ever since.

The Methodists in National Politics

We believe there is little ground for the charge Mr. Pezet has made. He is confusing the right of appeal with the right of dictation. The right of dictation belongs to the majority, but the right of appeal and argument belongs to an aggrieved minority. If it is in order for a weak minority to appeal for relief from injustice, this minority does not lose its right by becoming strong and able to present its case more influentially.

Mr. Pezet seems to represent a class of Americans who almost resent the act of the individual Christian man in casting his vote in a state or national election. "His kingdom is not of this world; why should he be concerning himself with worldly politics?"

It is good for this country that Christian men have begun to exert an influence in the realm of politics. It is far better that Christian men choose and advise the men sent to Congress and state legislatures than it is that our lawmakers be the tools of saloon keepers and other enemies of society. May the influence of Christian churches grow stronger in Washington and all our State Capitols.

Uncle Sam In the Role of Tempter

Recently two tinners, one white and one colored, were arrested in Greensboro for making vessels for distilling alcoholic liquors, which is a violation of federal law. The explanation was given that a detective had gone to these men and asked them to make these vessels, making upon their minds the impression that he was engaged in the illicit manufacture of liquor. When the vessels were completed, the detective threw off the disguise and arrested the tinners and haled them before a magistrate for trial.

We would respectfully protest that we think Uncle Sam is culpable for the use of such means in discovering violators of the law. Is he not really making violators of the law in some cases? Is it susceptible of proof that these men would have made these vessels if Uncle Sam had not tempted them? And even if it were, would that justify the use of virtual lying to catch them? We think Uncle Sam should be above the use of such means. The truth is sacred. If Uncle Sam does violence to the truth, will not some men be encouraged to do violence to the laws of the land? Let law-breakers be sought out and restrained, but let there be no immoral methods employed to detect them. It may take longer some other way, but the right way is the best way.

Visit to Winston M. P. Church

Last Sunday 15 members of Calvary Church Bible Class, Greensboro, paid a visit to the Baraca Class of Winston M. P. Church, going over in four cars. We found a live class and a live Sunday school and some of us remained to hear a live sermon by the pastor, Rev. C. M. Compher, who had previously taught the Baraca Class and who expected to preach again at night. There were 175 present at Sunday school. The attendance at church was good, though not so large as for Sunday school. Brother Compher seems to have the work well in hand, though we fear he is working too hard for his strength. Though he is a very capable teacher for the Baraca Class, we believe he ought to be relieved of that responsibility. We were glad to find our young brother, Victor Kirkman, serving as Sunday school superintendent. The members of our party were well pleased with their trip, and are expecting a return visit some day from members of the Winston Baraca Class.

THE PATIENCE OF GOD

When I was in college, I went to hear Robert G. Ingersoll speak on "The Mistakes of Moses." He was a magnificent looking man. The God he blasphemed had given him a wonderful body and voice. He said in his address: "I hear people talk of the omnipotence of God. I will give God three minutes to strike me dead for what I have said of Him on this platform. I dare Him to do it."

Ingersoll held his watch in his hand during the tense silence of those three minutes. People shivered lest something terrible should happen. At the end he said: "There, you see there is nobody there."

I remember the comment on the scene made by a Godly Christian: "Did the little man think that he could exhaust the patience of the eternal God in three minutes?"

Ingersoll's writings now are almost forgotten; while of the Book that he ridiculed 6,582,000 copies were sold in 1924. It will continue to sell. It owes its permanence and currency to the life that roots its fellowship in the living God.—Dean Charles R. Brown.

FRENCH PRIESTS MARRYING

A Paris despatch to the New York Herald in December reported the organization of "the New French National Catholic Church," and the selection of Abbe Maxime Ardot, a married priest, as its bishop. The despatch says that there are several thousand married priests in France, and that an assembly of some 300 of these will shortly consecrate Abbe Ardot as bishop. It is stated that the first chapel edifice is being prepared in which "the married priests" who have been prohibited by the Vatican from celebrating mass and other rituals will carry on Catholic doctrines on the apostolic basis as in the Roman Church, but will no longer recognize the Pope's dicta as final. "This movement by married priests now has become international and undoubtedly will spread to the United States," said Abbe Ardot. "The Bishop of Prague sent congratulations and pledged the sympathetic support of the Czechoslovak Church, which has just been excommunicated by Rome. Swiss Catholicism and married priests also are supporting the movement."—The Converted Catholic.

THE SOURCE OF ITS BEAUTY

Once there was a brier growing in a ditch, and there came along a gardener with his spade. As he dug around it, and lifted it out, the brier said to itself, "What is he doing that for? Doesn't he know that I am only an old worthless brier?" But the gardener took it into the garden and planted it amid his flowers, while the brier said, "What a mistake he has made, planing an old brier like myself among such rose trees as these!" But the gardener came once more with his keen-edged knife, made a slit in the brier, and "budded" it with a rose, and by and by, when summer came, lovely roses were blooming on that old brier. Then the gardener said, "Your beauty is not due to that which came out, but to that which I put into you." This is just what Christ is doing all the time with poor human lives.—Selected.

THE BURNING ISSUE IN THE AMERICAN COLLEGE

Prof. H. Osborne Ryder

Many perplexing problems face us in the academic world and in the modern church. The two major problems, in reality, perhaps, only different phases of the same problem, have been the evolutionary hypothesis of creation and the struggle between the static and the progressive conceptions of science, religion, and philosophy.

A quarter of a century ago science, with its new and startling discoveries, was thought to be in conflict with the old faith. Today it is religion which is experiencing some difficulty in adjusting itself to the findings of science. This struggle between science and religion has been futile, for each, rightly understood, is the buttress of the other. The man of science fails to see that his teaching is based on faith fully as much as religion is based upon the same foundation. The man of religion fears lest the evolutionary hypothesis will upset his cherished faith. He fails to perceive that evolution is a method of creation and, in no way, invalidates the fact of creation, since the evolutionary process and the process of separate creation imply a Creator in either instance.

Of far greater importance and of far-reaching significance is another problem, very closely related to those just mention. So much time and energy have been expended upon these subsidiary questions that the major problem has been overlooked or obscured. The burning issue in the college and the church is whether there is a creative intelligence, a personal will, behind and within the universe, or whether the driving force is an impersonal energy within the electron, self-created and dependent upon no creative will. Not since the days of the American Revolution has such a wave of unbelief invaded our thought life and submerged us beneath its billows. Napoleon, after reading Laplace's work on the celestial mechanism, declared that he found no mention of God. Laplace replied that he found no need for any such hypothesis. According to this statement, Nature is sufficient unto itself and requires the services of no higher intelligence. Hence we are plunged into the depths of naturalism.

The greatest danger in scientific thinking is the tendency to find sufficiency in biology, chemistry, or physics. The task of the scientist is to deal with the phenomena confronting him. As a scientist he is openly and honestly neglectful of the first cause and the soul reality, for the metaphysical inquiry is plainly outside his legitimate realm. His deductions, when he oversteps the confines of his own domain, are sometimes ludicrous, if not disastrous. With the same data in mind, one scientist reaches an atheistic conclusion; another finds God in all the ramifications of his investigation.

The problem, then, briefly stated, is whether the mechanistic view is the correct teaching, then we shall abandon our churches and erect temples for worship of eternal energy. If the personalistic view is the correct teaching, then we shall find creative intelligence the author of all energy, of all life, and of all outgo whatsoever. "Every house is builded by some man, but He that built all things—God," says the ancient writer. If energy is self-sufficient, it is the only creation without a creator, for all workmanship implies an artizan, an author, a creator. This view leads to unbelief in immortality, finds no necessity for a standard of right and justice, and breaks down the claims of morality. It denies purpose and design and regards all development as a blunderbus affair, groping aimlessly in the maze of uncertainty.

The mechanistic view should be given a full hearing in the college lecture room. There should be no attempt to stifle the facts or conceal the problem. In fairness, however, the personalistic position likewise is entitled to an impartial hearing. Since such a hearing has not been given, a wave of skepticism, agnosticism, and atheism has swept over our student bodies. Not only has this occurrd in the so-called "ungodly state universities" but also in the church colleges. The authority of the church is weakened and the Bible as the guide of life is discounted. It is not uncommon today to find atheistic clubs in many of our colleges and universities. In many communities theistic clubs are being formed to combat this open and avowed atheism.

Sometimes this type of modern atheism is camouflaged under the guise of theological, scientific, or philosophical terminology. Four of these current tendencies will be described:

1. Rationalism. Rationalism instructs us to gather the facts and then to be guided solely by these facts. The mind becomes the supreme guide and reason is enthroned. The great pulsating emotions are ignored and life is reduced to cold, calculating reason. In such a dead and devitalized atmosphere the spiritual claims are found to be vague and visionary and probably meaningless. The necessity for a belief in God is very slight and tenuous and the Goddess of Reason supersedes the God of life.

This is no argument for ignoring the claims of the rational life but a plea for regarding life in its totality, for looking at life steadily and seeing it whole, as Matthew Arnold expressed it. When reason is used aright, it leads us to a high conception of duty, but too often presents a stumbling-block to the thinker who works partly through the problem and imagines that he has reached a complete solution. At the present time there is a srong inclination to make all education revolve around the intellect and to reduce all facts to the acid test of reason. Rationalism has thus become the handmaid of atheism and closely akin to rationalism is positivism, which ignores all evidence not positively proven.

2. Behaviorism. Behaviorism has been the favorite psychology for the past decade or more. It has gradually replaced the old psychology. In a subtle manner it has aimed to explain all phenomena on an environmental basis and to divorce psychology by reducing it to an exact science. It has taught us that the soul we possess is the soul we acquire in our living experience, for we start at zero without a soul. We are not souls but acquire them. The soul is, therefore, phenomenal; heredity is nil and environment will develop similarly regardless of hereditary influence. Prayer is simply the reflex of our desires reenforced by habit. The divine element is ostracized from our consideration. So insidiously has this false psychology crept into our teaching that we have not been aware of its disastrous implications. It has made man a creature of environment, vitiated the claims of heredity, overthrown the citadel of prayer, and banished God from his universe.

3. Agnostic humanism. This is the prevalent philosophy among many students of the present generation. It finds that the proper study of mankind is man and not God. It teaches us to search for all satisfactions within the human realm. It believes in the sacredness of man, in high ethical resolves, in a life of altruism and morality. Yet it stands dumb before the great fact of life and reality. It is doubtful about the place of purpose and intelligence in the world. It reluctantly admits that possibly somewhere in the distant spaces there may be an electron endowed with a pin-head intelligence, but the admission is frankly agnostic. Life is circumscribed by the human; the divine, if such there be, is the great unknown and unknowable. Agnostic humanism is commended for its supreme evaluation of humanity, but its weakness is that it never transcends the limits of the present life. Its highest declaration about the reality of God is, at least, dim and misty.

4. Agnostic theism. The most subtle form of atheistic teaching is erroneously called agnostic theism. If professes a belief in God, but its profession is so negative and destructive that very little is lef upon which to build the superstructure of a theistic belief. It is constantly declaring that we do not know and stresses our ignorance and helplessness in the face of reality. It quenches life at the very fountain-springs and practically divests belief of all its vital power and significance. Life cannot be built on negations but only on positive declarations. We need a positive, constructive faith rather than a blind, negative, destructive teaching. The negative character of this philosophical teaching robs the theistic hypothesis of all its potency.

Three principal causes may be assigned for this abyss of unbelief into which we have suddenly been plunged:

1. The practical or worldly tendency of our age. It is a trite thing to declare that we are living in a practical age. We are dominated largely by the world of sense and matter. The unseen world lies beyond our physical vision; it is, so we infer, unseen and unreal in any sense. We find little opportunity for reflection and meditation. Mysticism, in its best expression, is almost unknown.: The world is apparently quite able to satisfy all our immediate desires. Why should we be concerned about the reality of the unseen world? In the mad rush of society, in the giant industries, in the crowded marts the concept of God is unnecessary and, and in fact, appears to interfere with the pursuit of our pleasure.

2. The scientific tendency. The discoveries of science have, for the most part, strengthened belief in a divine intelligence. There has been, however, an inclination to explain all life-movement from the cell, electron, or energy as ends in themselves, without due recognition of the Creator in producing them. Perhaps, after all, we are informed, life may be evolved by spontaneous generation. The temptation of the scientist has been to discover finality before finality has been reached. If we can explain life without creative intelligence, why should we be concerned about other-worldliness? The present world is full of problems facing us for solution. Sometimes this view has been formally expressed; more frequently it has been implied or unwittingly assumed by those immature minds who have not pursued the problem through to its logical outcome. Science then becomes a hindrance rather than an aid to faith. Faith is weakened, the claims of religion are ignored, and God as the fountain-source of life is denied.
